State of Minnesota, County of Polk—ss.

John Gleason, being first duly sworn, upon his oath says, that he is Auditor of said county and state aforesaid, and that the foregoing, consisting of 363 sheets number 1 to 358, and five sheets numbered 80½, 81½, 82½, 83½ and 319 1-2, both inclusive is a true and correct list of all pieces and parcels of land within said county of Polk, in the state aforesaid, that appeared to have become delinquent in the year 1897, or in prior year or years and has not been satisfied by payment, redemption or sale of the real estate to actual purchasers. Said list includes all taxes delinquent, principal and interest, upon any such piece and parcel of land or real estate, that has been at any tax sale struck off to, or declared to be forfeited to, the state, whether said sale or forfeiture was valid or invalid, and, that opposite each description appears the name of the owner or to whom assessed, if known. If unknown it is so stated, and the total amount of taxes delinquent and interest due thereon, to the 7th day of May 1900, according to the provisions of chapter 322, General Laws of Minnesota, being an act entitled, "An Act to enforce the payment of taxes which become delinquent in and prior to the year 1897," approved April 20th, 1899, so far as the same appears to me of record in my said office.

Subscribed and sworn before me this 20th day January, A. D. 1900.

JOHN GLEASON
County Auditor.

Nels A. Hoffard, Notary Public.
(Notarial Seal.)
Polk County, Minn.

Received and filed in my office this 20th day of January, A. D. 1900.

E. E. Lommen,
Clerk of the District Court,
Polk County, Minn.

I John Gleason, auditor of Polk County, in the state of Minnesota, do hereby certify that the foregoing copy of list of lands forfeited for taxes, as prepared in conformity with the provisions of chapter 322, of the General Laws of 1899, has been received from the clerk of the court, in and for said county.

A Woman's Trials

Increase from girlhood to the grave.

The question of health is always before her. Thirty years of her life is a battle with menstruation, and not one woman in a hundred escapes the ills which lie in wait from month to month.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Componnd has restored a million women to health.

Letters from grateful women are constantly being printed in this paper.

Mrs. Pinkham has fifty thousand such letters. Her counsel is safe counsel. It always helps women and it will help you.

Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass. She will advise you free.

An Invitation to Women

All the world knows of the wonderful cures which have been made by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, yet some women do not realize that all that is claimed for it is absolutely true.

If all suffering women could be made to believe that Mrs. Pinkham can do all she says she can, their suffering would be at an end, for they would at once profit by her advice and be cured.

There is no more puzzling thing than that women will suffer great pain month after month when every woman knows of some woman whom Mrs. Pinkham has helped, as the letters from grateful women are constantly being published at their own request.

The same derangements which make painful or irregular periods with dull backaches and headaches, and dragging-down sensations, presently develop into those serious inflammations of the feminine organs which completely wreck health.

Mrs. Pinkham invites women to write freely and confidentially to her about their health and get the benefit of her great experience with the sufferings of women. No living person can advise you so well. No remedy in the world has the magnificent record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for absolute cures of female ills. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass.

Three Letters from One Woman, Showing how She Sought Mrs. Pinkham's Aid, and was cured of Suppression of the Menses and Inflammation of the Ovaries.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—I have been in bed a year. Doctors say I have female weakness. I have a bad discharge and much soreness across my ovaries, bearing-down pains and have not menstruated for a year. Doctors say the menses will never appear again. Hope to hear from you."—Mrs. J. F. Brown, Holton, Kans., April 1, 1898.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—I received your letter. I have taken one bottle and a half of your Vegetable Compound, and used two packages of your Wash, and feel stronger and better. I can walk a few steps, but could not before taking your Compound. I still have the discharge and am sore across the ovaries, but not so bad. Every one thinks I look better since taking your Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. J. F. Brown, Holton, Kans., Aug. 13, 1898.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—I think it is my duty to let you know the good that Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound has done me: After I took three bottles, menses appeared, and I began to feel stronger and all my pain was gone. Yours is the only medicine that ever helped me. I am able now to work around the house, something I did not expect to do again."—Mrs. J. F. Brown, Holton, Kans., Jan. 25, 1899.

Three More Letters from One Woman, Relating how She was Cured of Irregular Menstruation, Leucorrhœa and Backache.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—I am suffering and need your aid. I have pains in both sides of the womb and a dragging sensation in the groin. Menstruation irregular and painful; have leucorrhœa, bearing-down pains, soreness and swelling of the abdomen, headache, backache; nervousness, and can neither eat nor sleep."—Mrs. Carrie Phillips, Anna, Ill., July 19, 1897.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—I want to thank you for what you have done for me. When I wrote to you I was a total wreck. Since taking your Vegetable Compound, Liver Pills and Sanative Wash, my nerves are stronger and more steady than ever before, and my backache and those terrible pains are gone. Before I took your medicine I weighed less than one hundred and thirty pounds. I now weigh one hundred and fifty-five pounds. Your medicine is a godsend to poor weak women. I would like to ask you why I cannot have a child. I have been married nearly three years."—Mrs. Carrie Phillips, Anna, Ill., Dec. 1, 1897.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—I did just as you advised me, and now I am the happy mother of a fine baby girl. I believe I never would have had her without your Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Carrie Phillips, Anna, Ill., Jan. 27, 1899.

Proof that Falling of the Womb is Overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—When I wrote to you some time ago, I had been suffering from falling of the womb for many years without obtaining relief. Was obliged to wear a bandage all the time; also had bad headache and backache, felt tired and worn out. After taking six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and four boxes of Liver Pills, I discarded my bandage and have not had to wear it since. I am entirely cured."—Mrs. J. P. Troutman, Box 44, Hamilton, Ohio.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—For nearly two years I was unable to work. I was very weak and could not stand on my feet but a few minutes at a time. The doctors said I had falling and inflammation of the womb. I began to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after using five bottles I feel like a new woman."—Mrs. P. N. Blake, Confluence, W. Va.

NURSE TOMKINS

Nurse Tomkins didn't profess to be "none of your 'ighly trained nurses"—she didn't 'old with "them newfangled notions"—she didn't see "where the thermometer and the 'ygienic measures came in. People didn't live no longer than before all this washing and rinsing was started."

Thus soliloquized Nurse Tomkins in my presence after I had engaged her services to attend my wife for a passing and slight indisposition. Mildred did not improve rapidly, not so quickly as her anxious husband would have liked, and at last—that was on the Sunday—with a deeply rooted sense of distrust toward her nurse, I decided on taking up my station in the invalid's room. I entered. The fire burned low, the window was open, and the cold, bleak wind of an early spring day blew in. "Your fire is low, Mildred," I said. "The room feels cold." Nurse Tomkins adjusted her cap, settled her apron and commenced a series of attacks on the fire. Bang, bang, bang, went the poker. I looked at the woman with a look which has caused a brave man to flinch. "These beastly lodging 'ouse grates—small and poky," said the nurse under her breath. The fire sent up a fitful blaze, more coals were shoveled on, a rattle of fire irons, and the nurse's work was done. Tomkins walked to the bed, collecting bottles in her progress. One was eau de cologne, another a salts bottle. "Smell these!" she exclaimed, presenting the apex of each bottle to the patient's nose. Mildred was taken by surprise, and the strong salts made her gasp. I commanded my language and sat still, considering the situation with a calmness which afterward astonished me. So long as I was by it was all right, I said to comfort myself, and I would always be by so long as Mildred was being "nursed."

I ensconced myself in an easy chair which was drawn up to the fireside. On the dressing table near by a little cloud of blue smoke ascended to the ceiling, a sickly eastern smell emanating from the burning paper. I leaned over and blew it out. I did not approve of my wife's room smelling of these scents. Nurse saw the action. She stopped shaking the pillows into a hard mass and looked at me questioningly. "Them papers purify the atmosphere of a sickroom," she said in explanation. "At my last case I burned them day and night. Captain Eames' wife—she was a real lady, and she liked fine smells." Mildred told me afterward Mrs. Eames' name had been a familiar one to her and that she appeared to have been a most remarkable woman. She evidently was a good patient in so far as endurance went. "Mrs. Eames and me," continued Nurse, resuming her "explanation" of the burning papers, "we 'ad the same views on your modern nursing and them 'igh and mighty young modern nurses who are 'aving their 'eads turned by all them newfangled notions and them funds and associations—and Mrs. Eames and me we often said as 'ow it was all fudge! Now, in 'er case," Nurse Tomkins went on, "them doctors ordered 'er to eat nothing all day long. Well, that wasn't the first case of typhoid I 'ad nursed—and I knew well the pretty young creature's strength couldn't 'old out against starvation for weeks—she, as was accustomed to ride in her carriage and 'ave the best victuals in the land—so I just judges for myself, and I takes 'er up a cut of meat on the sly—she that sad and beseeching-like for a bit of something to eat—and didn't she just perk up at it! And looked so pretty with all her laces and frills round her bonny face—'twasn't the first case of typhoid I 'ad by no means."

"And Mrs. Eames recovered?" I asked.

"The pretty creature, she died in my arms as gentle and mild as a lamb, and I never saw a 'prettier deathbed,'" responded Tomkins. "She was a real lady—the flowers in her room were something lovely—and 'er husband, he sobbed 'is eyes out, and no wonder—she that was worth a dozen of 'im—and when I left that 'ouse, after all my devoted duty, 'e never so much as give me a sixpence more than my pay."

Mildred's head tossed restlessly on the pillow. "Nurse," I said, and I held the door open as I spoke, "will you come and speak to me a minute down stairs?" I left the room. Tomkins followed me into the dining room.

"Tell me," I asked her, "what training have you had in nursing?"

"Twelve years," she answered, her head held high.

"Twelve years—at a hospital?"

"Lor' bless you, no sir; I never required no teaching. I was a born nurse, and I pick it up as I go."

"As you go?" I asked. "Your institution accepts untrained nurses, then?"

"That it doesn't, sir," she returned, with spirit. "I had five years' experience when I joined. I was a nurse ever since I was 8 years old. My poor father, he suffered"—

"But," I put in, interrupting what I guessed might develop into a lengthy anecdote, "you have had no training then—no training as a nurse?"

"Nature taught me," said Tomkins. "Nature and observation. If I saw anything made a patient worse, I altered my treatment next time. I've 'ad great experience with the sick, as I am seldom called in unless it's an incurable case."

I had been pacing the narrow limits of the room while Tomkins spoke, and when she ceased I was conscious of a tremor in my speech. I didn't say much, as little as I could, but I paid Tomkins for her "services," and I satisfactorily conveyed to her mind that I could dispense with them in the future. For the sake of peace I gave the woman a few shillings beyond what she expected, but her absence, I considered, would be cheaply bought at thrice that sum, and I never felt more relieved than when I heard the rumble of the cab down the quiet seaside road. Tomkins took the landlady into her confidence before her departure, and I heard her say in the loud voice she assumed in the sickroom, "'E'll kill that dear little wife of 'is just as likely as not. 'E's had no experience with the sick, and them young husbands ain't fit to 'ave the care of a young wife. Now, if I staid"—

But I wanted to hear no more, and when I stood next by Mildred's side I took her hand in mine as if I could never let it go, and a feeling of heroism seized me that Mildred was saved from the jaws of death and that I was her savior.—Westminster Budget.

He Could Shoot Straight.

Said the man who had traveled: "Years ago in a western frontier town a traveler, footsore and weary, arrived one afternoon and made his way down the one street of the burg. He was suddenly startled by the sounds of shots, and, looking up, discovered four men shooting at one another. The men were standing at the four corners of an imaginary square, and each was shooting at the man catacorner to him. Being in what he supposed a safe position, he paused to watch the outcome of the fray, when a bullet, going wide of its intended mark, cut by his ear. That roused his wrath, and, drawing his pistol, he dropped the man in his tracks who had all but dropped him. Another bullet flying wide from its mark, but near to the stranger, caused him to lay out one of the other pair, and the two remaining [illegible] sought safety in flight. In that particular town duels had been previously comparatively harmless affairs, owing to the poor marksmanship of the contestants, but the man who could shoot had arrived [illegible] inhabitants, although they turned out to greet him in a body and gave him the freedom of the city, did so in manifest awe and trepidation.

"Whenever he told the story afterward, he used to wind it up impressively by saying, 'And, boys, in that town after that they went around me as if I had been a swamp.'"—New York Tribune.

Conquered the Professor.

The mighty Jowett of Oxford invited a student to walk with him. After they had been on the road for about 30 minutes the pupil finally spunked up courage and remarked, "Nice day, professor."

"Do you really think so?" was the faraway answer of Jowett.

Another half hour passed, and the boy stammered out:

"Nice road, professor."

The teacher responded, "Do you really think so?"

The matriculate began to boil in his bones and to get even more frightened, but he managed to again blurt out, "Clouds seem to be filling up with rain, professor," to which the answer was:

"Do you really think so?"

The two returned to the college ground, and the professor said, "Well, young man, we have been walking for several hours, and everything you said has been as stupid as it possibly could be."

His companion replied, "Do you really think so?"

The professor looked at the young man a moment. Then he smiled and grasped his hands warmly. From that time on conversation never flagged during their walks.—Saturday Evening Post.

Puzzled the Porter.

The pet fad of a certain actress is shoes, and she never travels without a pair of shoe trees in her satchel. One season she was touring the west. When she went to bed in the Pullman the first night eastward from Butte, she took off her trim walking boots and, as her custom is, slipped the trees into them and set them under the edge of the berth. It was broad daylight when she was awakened by the respectful and somewhat awestricken voice of the porter. She drew the curtains aside, and looked out into the aisle. The porter was standing there, holding the shoes in his hand.

"Here they is, lady," he said.

"Well, just put them down under the berth, please," said she. The man hesitated a moment.

"Can you—can you put them on by youse'f?" he asked.

"What, the shoes?" asked the lady.

"No, miss," answered the porter. "I means your feet. Ain't these yere things feet?"

Since then she has carried the ghastly looking boot trees in her trunk.—Washington Post.

The Wrong Bird.

A certain conjurer once had an experience which was highly comical, though quite disastrous from a professional point of view.

Having produced an egg from a previously empty bag, he announced that he would follow up this trick by bringing from the bag the hen by which the egg had been laid. This little arrangement he had left to his confederate to carry out.

He proceeded to draw the bird from the bag in which it had previously been placed, but what was his consternation on finding that the alleged hen was an old rooster, which strutted about the stage with ruffled feathers and offended dignity and set up as vigorous a crowing as if he had just awakened from his nocturnal slumbers.

The whole audience shrieked with laughter, and the unfortunate conjurer made a "bolt" for his dressing room.

Variable.

"What is this title 'professor' that I hear so often?" asked the distinguished foreigner.

"Well," answered Miss Cayenne, "it's getting rather hard to tell. Usually it means a man who knows more than any one else, and sometimes it means a man who simply won't work."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Not Forgotten.

"Yes; she had a clause in it instructing the executors to collect all the loans she had made me."—Baltimore News.

A Three Cornered War.

When Colonel Cartwell was military governor of Norfolk under the Confederacy in 1862, he ordered the British consul to report for duty on the home guard. To this the Englishman objected on the ground of being consul at Norfolk.

"To what government?" asked Colonel Cartwell.

"To the United States government," was the reply.

"But you are in the Confederate states, and you must show papers accrediting you to the Confederate States of America," said the colonel.

"But my government doesn't recognize you as a government," said the consul.

"Very well, then; my government doesn't recognize you as consul," briskly retorted Colonel Cartwell. "Shoulder your musket and join your company."

At this the peacefully disposed consul threatened to have a gunboat come and bombard the place before he would serve.

"That's just what I'd like to see," returned the colonel cheerily, "for then the United States will fight you, as it claims that Norfolk is still part of the Union, and between England and the United States fighting we shall go free."

At last the consul appealed to Mr. Benjamin, the Confederate secretary of war, who ordered his exemption from military duty, and the "three cornered war" so desired by Colonel Cartwell never came to pass.—Youth's Companion.

Unique Wedding Present.

Most people know of the peculiar circumstances under which Robert Louis Stevenson won his wife. But even more romantic and astounding was the unique wedding gift he got with her.

When Stevenson met his future fate at Barbizon, a famous artists' resort near Paris, she was the wife of Mr. Osborne, an Oakland gentleman. The friendship thus formed led Stevenson to pay a visit to California. He arrived at Monterey in a dying condition, but the loving care of Mrs. Osborne and her sister, Nellie Van der Grift, gradually won him back to life. The nursing completed his infatuation for the lady—an infatuation which he did not pretend to conceal. Fortunately Osborne raised no objections. He not only agreed to the divorce, but with a magnanimity rarely excelled actually attended the wedding breakfast. There he found his opportunity.

Mrs. Stevenson's one source of regret was the positive loss of her son, Lloyd Osborne, whom, of course, the father had the right to claim. Osborne made a happy speech, felicitating the newly married couple, and wound up by offering the most original of wedding presents. "To the bride," he said, "I give that which of all things is nearest and dearest to her heart, her own son."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

One He Didn't Get.

The following story of Ben Butler was told by a man who said he was present on the occasion:

"Shortly after the war General Butler delivered a lecture at Pike's Opera House in Cincinnati. The general was well on to the climax of his speech when slowly from the flies overhead descended a large wooden spoon on the end of a string. Down and down it came until it reached a point two or three inches above the speaker's head, and then it stopped.

"The audience, of course, was convulsed with mirth, but owing to his well known visual infirmity the general was the last to discover the spoon, and indeed would probably not have noticed it at all except that in making an emphatic gesture to italicize a point his hand struck the suspended spoon.

"Looking up, he recognized the enemy and took in the situation at a glance. Without any sign of embarrassment or confusion he detached it from the string and with the remark, 'Hello, there's one I didn't get,' laid it down on the stage and triumphantly finished his address."

Army Flogging.

Soon after General Gatacre was appointed an ensign in the Seventy-seventh foot he turned out with the company to which he was attached to witness the flogging of a soldier. The man, who had been convicted of a serious offense and was later to be drummed out of the corps, took his punishment badly, screaming a great deal. Ensign Gatacre shut his eyes and turned white in the face, as though he would faint. When the punishment was over, he remarked to his color sergeant, "If I see much more of this, I'll sell out."

The "noncom" responded, "You'll get used to it in time, sir."

"Used to it? I'm sure I never shall!" responded the ensign. Flogging in the army was soon abolished, however, and the future general remained in the service.

What Offended Her.

Milk Dealer—What did you say to Mrs. Sharpe yesterday when you called for her money?

Driver—Nothing particular. Why?

Milk Dealer—She's sent word that she don't want us to serve her any more. You must have said something to offend her.

Driver—No, I didn't. I simply asked her for the money for the week's milk. She says, "You'd better chalk it up," and I says, "We do that already."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Mentioned as Usual.

Clara—Did the newspapers notice your papa at the banquet?

Freddie—Yes.

Clara—Well, mamma said she could not see his name in the list.

Freddie—No, but the list ends up with "and others." That means papa. They always mention him that way.—Tit-Bits.

A Cork Safe.

"The most curious safe I ever saw," said a travelling man, "was a cork one, and it was made by an ingenious Dutch mechanic for a one time famous confidence man named Dr. Baggs, who operated in Denver, Salt Lake City and Frisco. The safe was a folding affair, made of paper on a backing of sheet cork, and, when it was opened up, was six feet high and looked exactly like the real thing. As it was always placed in a corner, it had only two sides, but every visible detail was complete—combination [illegible] bolt heads and all. When folded it could be carried in an ordinary dress suit case. Baggs used the thing in a fake lottery office which was of itself a marvel of [illegible].

"When the [illegible] entered the place it looked like an ordinary [illegible] [illegible] the safe was [illegible] the curtains were pulled [illegible] the room was to all appearances [illegible] sleeping apartment. [illegible] the poor dupe was never able to find the place where he had been buncoed."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Red Tape Illustrated.

A correspondent passing hurriedly into the room of the committee on rivers and harbors pulled the knob off the door.

"How can I get that fixed, do you think?" asked the congressman. "Shall I get the carpenter or the locksmith?"

"The locksmith, I suppose."

"No, sir. Were I to send for the locksmith he would tell me to consult the architect of the capitol. He has no authority to fix doorknobs. Doorknobs are permanent fixtures and are solely within the jurisdiction of the architect of the capitol."

"Do you see that bookcase there?" said the committee secretary. "I caused the carpenter to paste some cloth on the inside of the glass doors in order that the books might not show. He did the work, but when he had finished I noted that he had not cleaned the glass before he put the cloth on. The thing looked so disreputable that I asked him why he had not cleaned the glass. He told me that the glass was a permanent fixture and that he had no authority to touch it, but that the placing of the cloth upon it was a temporary matter and was entirely within the province of his labors. The whole thing's got to be done all over again."—Washington Cor. Cleveland Plain Dealer.

She Didn't Buy It.

The following story will show the high price that illustrators of reputation command for their work: A young woman who had received treatment from Dr. S. Weir Mitchell of Philadelphia and was very fond of him decided, at a recent celebration of his birthday, that a fitting and appropriate gift would be the presentation of one of the original drawings of Mr. Howard Pyle for "Hugh Wynne." Forthwith she invaded The Century company's sanctum and, with her fingers tenderly grasping a new $10 note, asked to buy the drawing. She was informed that these pictures were never sold unless exceptions were made in cases where the artist himself or the author wished to make the purchase.

"Just so," said the young woman. "I wish to present it to Dr. Mitchell."

"Ah, in that case," said the gentleman at the desk, "we shall take pleasure in giving it to you at the exact price we paid for it, which is $100."

The little lady in her excitement dropped the $10 bill. The gentleman at the desk picked it up for her and smiled while she hurriedly took her departure. The good doctor was presented with a less appropriate gift that year.—New York Times.

Clear and to the Point.

The following is taken from a hotel advertisement in the Calcutta Times: "Gentlemen who come in hotel not say anything about their meals they will be charged for, and if they should say beforehand that they are going out to breakfast or dinner, etc., and if they say that they not have anything to eat they will be charged, and if not so they will not be charged, unless they bring it to the notice of the manager of the place, and should they want to say anything they must order the manager for one, not any one else, and unless they bring not it to the notice of the manager they will be charged for the least things necessary to the hotel rate, and no fuss will be allowed afterward about it."

A Poultry Problem.

A Somerville man borrowed a neighbor's hen on the pretense that he wanted her to sit. As soon as he got the hen he broke up the sitting habit and got her to laying eggs. In the next six weeks she laid two dozen eggs. These he sold for 40 cents a dozen, and with the 80 cents that he got for them he bought the hen. Now the question arises whether the original owner of the hen was fooled or not.—Somerville Journal.

CONDEMNATION

ALMOST UNIVERSAL, OF MINNESOTA CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION,

For Its Action on Porto Rico Tariff. Heatwole and Fletcher Also Fall, for Both Condemn Their Party—A Pretty "Kettle of Fish"—Eyes Now on Knute Nelson—Outlook for Sweeping Rebuke to Republicanism This Fall—State and National Political Points—Peoples Party State Convention—"A. B. C." Ticket and Campaign—Twin City Point and Pointers—Note and Comment of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, March 5, 1900.

Almost sensational has been the effect of the divided action of the Minnesota Republican delegation in the lower house of congress, on the Porto Rico tariff bill passed under McKinley whip and spur last Wednesday. Centering in the Twin Cities, but rapidly spreading throughout the state, the feeling has been that of condemnation, almost without exception. Previous to the final vote the wires were hot to Washington, Minneapolis taking the lead, in efforts of the people there to hold Congressman Fletcher down to vote against the bill.

In St. Paul the feeling was that Stevens would follow the trust orders, whatever they were, as was the result. In the nearer portions of the third district, the gaff was thrown into the gentle Joel, because he stood out against party dictation. Thus, as is the case with most of the current issues, the glaring inconsistencies of the Republican party were made continually more apparent. In a word it was the case of being "between the devil and the deep sea." If the delegation stood by the people, and voted against the bill, it condemned the party, and if the delegation followed the Hanna orders, as promulgated, carried out and explained by Tawney, it slapped the people in the face. In the final result Heatwole and Fletcher slapped the party, and the remaining five slapped the people, who will proceed to swipe them off the face of the political earth, if signs are not misleading.

If Twin City Republican curses were "deep" rather than "loud," the declarations from the country were along the line expressed by State Auditor Dunn's paper, the Princeton Union, which, even anticipating the possibility of just what has happened, declared that it would never advocate the election of one of the roosters who should disregard the advice of McKinley and do the bidding of the trusts—just what they have done, but with McKinley's "advice and consent." From the Duluth district it is conceded even by Morris' friends, that he has sealed his doom, and the same with Eddy of the seventh. The scalp lifters will also be after the hair of Schoolmaster McCleary. As to Tawney he probably relies on his high position with the administration and his consequent power, to help him out. Further as to Heatwole: the friends of Frank Wilson claim that they have a "puddin'" in defeating Joel for re-nomination. But inside talk is that Joel will recognize the inevitable and try for the gubernatorial nomination, hoping to do Van Sant by the strength of the anti-administration sentiment in the state.

And so it is a merry "kettle of fish."

Congressman Heatwole's endorsement of the Democratic position ought to commend him to his people instead of subject him to intrigue for his defeat, for the reason that the position is right. What inducement is there to our public servants to do right, if when they do so they receive the reverse of commendation. But possibly it has been done on the quibble that Republicans have gone wrong only 15 per cent. That was a stunning statement that Mr. Heatwole is alleged to have made to President McKinley, that a question ought to be 100 per cent right, and not 15 per cent right, and that if the tariff is wrong, it is as wrong in principle for two years as for 50. Joel stood out on this question, but where will he be at when before the people he appeals to them to stand by that 15 per cent party?

And Congressman Fletcher's troubles are pitiful. The foxy old "guy," as one of the leading Republicans of Hennepin who has labored for years to defeat him dubs him, took no position until assured that the 15 per cent bill was sure of passage, and then squared himself at home, as he thinks, by voting against the bill. The cute Uncle Loren has "squared" nothing. By voting against the bill he simply condemns his party, piling up the indictments the people have against it and which they will see to it that Your Uncle Loren has to face in this campaign. But, Fletcher's statement shows that he approved the 15 per cent wrong, and only voted no because so hardly pressed from home. In short it is another "h—ll of a fix" for Your Uncle.

As to the delegation as a whole, Eddy, Morris (Little Pagey), Tawney (whipper snapper), dunderhead McCleary, and Heatwole and Fletcher, isn't Minnesota proud of the whole trust serving list? Won't it be a delight to see the people throw the gaffs into each next November? There should be no question about the election of a complete congressional delegation by the reform forces—the American anti-monopolist forces.

The unanimity of the important suggestion of Judge Caldwell as the candidate for the American forces for vice president, is a striking incident of the national situation. Judge Caldwell was wanted for the same position with Bryan in 1896, by a very large and earnest element in the Democratic convention, but it gave way to the miserable makeshift of locality and class interest talk, on the idea now about to be thoroughly exploded, that the ticket must straddle from east to west, and recognize the capitalistic class.

And speaking of "American forces," that is a specially appropriate campaign designation for the combined opposition to Hannaism that will be put up under the leadership of Bryan. Our forces are American in opposition to war of conquest, and destruction of republics, in the Philippines; in our adherence to the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution; in advocacy of a financial policy for Americans, and for the interests of all her people; in bearing sympathy with the South Africans struggling against English oppression, plunder and conquest; in demanding the abolition of government by injunction, and governments by the trusts for the trusts and of the trusts; and finally, American is applicable because already, under such patriotic impulses, the American flag is to fly as our emblem of political success. Hurrah for the American Forces!

If the American ticket should be Bryan and Caldwell, it might be called the "A. B. C." ticket, and everybody could understand it.

The flour mill trust has gone to pieces, but only temporarily; is merely spitting on its hands to get a better hold. Incidentally the dupes who placed their money in the trust stock will be squeezed out and the slick geesers who stay in get the cream. Meanwhile the thousands of men out of employment by the consolidations of which these failures are an incident, will have time to reflect on the beauties of Republican gold standard administration.

And the growth of trusts goes on at the same rate as formerly. In January New Jersey chartered $70,000,000, West Virginia $55,000,000, Delaware $12,000,000, and other trust favoring states $66,000,000; total for January, $203,000,000, against $200,000,000 all told in December. The grand total now exceeds 600 trust corporations, with capital of $10,000,000,000, which the people must pay dividends on, water and all.

If flour trust has not yet paid there are plenty of the trusts which have. American Steel and Wire declares a dividend of 7 per cent on its $40,000,000 preferred stock, and has left of 1899 earnings enough for 18 per cent on its common stock of $50,000,000. Standard Oil has just declared a 25 per cent quarterly dividend on its capital of $100,000,000, which rate will duplicate its capital in a single year's profits. Standard Oil raked in $25,000,000 profits from raising oil 3 cents per gallon recently.

And speaking of Bryan's now almost certain election, the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, which opposed him in 1896, gives the figures of Bryan's tremendous and constantly increasing strength, which we thus summarize:

In 1893, '94 and '95 the Democrats lost every Northern state, and were defeated in six Southern states. Bryan on the Chicago platform, the adoption of which sent one-third of his delegates out to sulk, or secretly oppose him, carried all the states that remained Democratic in 1895, and gained eleven states, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, Colorado, North Carolina, Tennessee, Washington and Wyoming and, with a few hundred votes more, would have had all of Kentucky and California, of which he received one electoral vote in each. He cut the Republican majorities in Indiana and Ohio down one-half or more, and carried Kansas by 13,000 when the Republicans had carried it by 70,000 the year before. This year Bryan will have the cordial and enthusiastic support of his reunited party, and the allies will be recruited by thousands on thousands of Republicans leaving their party on account of imperialism, the reign of the trusts, and the surrender of their party body and breeches to the money power in the gold standard banking bill.

And while Standard Oil boosts kerosene, the match trust commences to use cross-grained wood in order that matches may break on being scratched and increase the consumption. But the farmer goes right along enjoying his 50 cent wheat, while barb wire, binding twine, nails, lumber and all else that he needs is boosted under Republican administration.

Hurray for the McKinley trust administration! Barb wire and kerosene up, wheat and cotton down!

The best estimates obtainable, as to the traveling men affected by the trusts, are that the number laid off in 1899 exceeded 150,000. At the low average of $200 per month—and the trust salesmen doubtless averaged twice that, salary and expenses—this means a loss of $360,000,000 to traveling men, railroads, hotels, etc., which sum goes to trust presidents at salaries equal to that of the president of the United States, and to pay immense dividends on real and watered stocks.

The week's biggest chunk of Twin City "prosperity" has been the sale under the hammer, of the celebrated Guaranty Loan building, Minneapolis. Costing, land and building, up into the millions, it brought at foreclosure sale, rising of $570,000, the amount of accrued claims under the mortgage. The ownership is said to be between Thomas Lowry and one of the New York banks, who it is said will redeem. But what of the part they do not "redeem," representing the people's thousands on thousands, the "shrinkage" in property values, and the dollars wrung from people in the Menage swindles? Echo answers what.

On account of the low price of wheat, Senator Knute Nelson has introduced a bill to increase Surveyor General Warner's salary! During all the years of great labors in that office, the pay has been sufficient, but now that the surveys are being completed, and the work of the office next to nothing, the pay must go up. That's like it—is simply Hannacratic, not to say Nelsonian—for Senator Knute is very fond of caring for the poor (political) farmer. And, besides if there ever was a real poor such "farmer" it is Eli S. G. S. O.

TRUSTS AND IMPERIALISM

Twin Monsters That Destroy Business Opportunity and Political Liberty.

Anti-Trust Gems From Bryan's Recent G. A. R. Speech at Brooklyn, N. Y.

Republican Description of Aguinaldo's Last Stand and Our Slaying of Pilar.

Political news readers will recall that the dispatches had but a brief mention of Mr. Bryan's recent speech at Brooklyn, and said that he spoke under the auspices of the local G. A. R. post to a "fair" audience. The reports of the Brooklyn dailies, at least the Eagle's, said that the house, the Academy of Music, which seats 3,000, was filled to overflowing and at least 2,000 people went away. The meeting was as enthusiastic as it was large. The speech which was reported in full by the Eagle, and is reprinted by the Irish World, contains so many effective new points, that our readers will be glad of them, as bearing on the issues of the day, and especially relating to the Trusts and monopoly. Excerpts follow:

"TRUSTS RAPIDLY ENSLAVING THE PEOPLE.

"But, my friends, there is another question, and that is the trust question. If you cannot understand what is going on on the money question, possibly you can see what is going on on the trust question. This is not a new question; the principle is as old as the trust itself, it is the principle of monopoly. But, my friends, if a man has a leech on him and he is a good, strong, healthy man, the leech may get all the blood it wants and yet the man may live; but if the man is covered with leeches, and they all commence to draw blood, then he begins to think something is the matter. We know more about the trust question now because there are more trusts, and I want the people to take up the trust question.

"NO REMEDY IN THE LAWS.

"Suppose you want something done, something in the way of legislation, why the friend of the trust says we have a law now. You say: 'Let us enforce the law and destroy the trust.' The friend of the trust says: 'The law doesn't quite reach that case.' You will find it is a big law when you want a new one, and a very little law when you want to enforce it, and it has reminded me of the boy who was watching his father help the plate, and as his father helped one plate he said: 'Why, all that for grandma?' 'No, my son, that is for you.' 'Oh, what a little bit,' said the boy.

"ONLY THE FEW GET INTO TRUSTS.

"I read within a few days that the Standard Oil Company was making 80 per cent on its capital. That the Barb Wire Trust was making 30 per cent on its common stock. Can men make that money who are not in a monopoly? That is a good thing for a man who is on the inside. What is it for the man who is on the outside? The great majority of the people cannot get into a trust and yet they are the victims of every trust that is organized, and I want the people of this country to study the trust question. I do not want them to be deceived by the talk that there are good trusts and bad trusts.

"THERE ARE NO GOOD TRUSTS.

"I read the other day of a banker in Chicago named Mitchell who said that in the long run trusts could do no harm, but what consolation is that to a short-winded man who can't stand a long run? If long-run trusts can do no harm, what of the man first affected while the process lasts? What of the man who is driven out of business? What of the people who suffer extortion? What of this? My friends, this trust question ought to engage the attention of every thoughtful man. But, my friends, the great objection to the trust is not so much its power to raise prices—that is bad enough—but, to my mind, there is something worse than that in the principle of the trust, and that is that it threatens to destroy the independence of the citizen.

"THROUGH TRUSTS THE FEW RULE THE MANY.

"The time is coming, if this trust development continues, when a few men will own every branch of industry and every man who buys will have to buy at the price they fix, and every man who sells raw material will have to sell at the price they fix, and every man who works for wages will work at the price they fix, and then, when a few men control every great industry, the skilled laborer will have just one employer; every skilled laborer will have to come to that employer and therefore that one man, or a few men who control that monopoly, will hold in their hands the livelihood of all the people. Old men, you men with gray hairs, are you satisfied to leave that system to your children? Middle-aged men, with the children growing up before you, are you satisfied with that condition? Young men, with life before you, are you satisfied with this narrowing of the spirit of advancement?

"MONOPOLY A CURSE TO THE COUNTRY.

"Your monopoly does it; it is a curse to this country; it must be destroyed. You ask me how it can be done? I say that both state and nation should put forth every effort, but when the state has done all it can that is not sufficient. A state can prevent a monopoly from being organized within its boundaries; it can prevent an outside monopoly from doing business within its borders, but that is not sufficient. If the monopoly controls a necessary of life and you shut it out of a state, you leave forty-four others, and it may be able to get along better without the forty-fifth than the people of the state can get along without the necessary of life which it controls. I am not satisfied in shutting it out of one state and leaving it in forty-four, I am not content to shut it up in one state and bar it out of the forty-four. Let me suggest one plan. There may be others.

"HOW TO CURB THE POWER OF TRUSTS.

"Let the government say to any corporation organized in any state seeking business outside the state, it shall secure a license from the federal government, and then before that license is granted compel the corporation to show, first, there is no water in the stock, and second, it has not attempted in the past and is not attempting now to monopolize any one branch of business or any article of merchandise. Squeeze the water out of the stock. You will have a flood for a little while, but you will have honest corporations afterward. Every honest corporation ought to help us to squeeze the water out of the dishonest corporations. It is going along the line of the least resistance. Provide this corporation shall not become a monopoly, and provide for the withdrawal of the license whenever the laws are broken. Give publicity to the affairs of the corporation and I believe you can destroy every private monopoly. If the conditions I have suggested are not sufficient add new ones, because if the monopoly is bad you must destroy it."

A PATRIOT'S DEATH.

How the Heroic Young Filipino General Gregorio Pilar Dies in the Last Ditch.

No more thrilling story of all our war of criminal aggression in the Philippines has been recorded, than the account of the death of Gregorio Del Pilar, who commanded the picked squad of chosen men sent by Aguinaldo to defend a pass and to resist the advance of the American soldiers in one of the last fights in the Philippines. The account was written by Richard Henry Little, special correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, dated Manila, December, 1899, and published in the Tribune of Feb. 4th, 1900. That the Tribune is one of the thick and thin Republican administration papers adds to the interest of the story, and possibly with some might add to the authority of the account. It was as follows:

It was a great fight that was fought away up on the trail of lonely Tilad pass on that Saturday morning of December 2. It brought glory to Major Marsh's battalion of the Thirty-third infantry, who were the victors. It brought no discredit to the little band of sixty Filipinos, who fought and died there. Sixty was the number that at Aguinaldo's orders had come down into the pass that morning, to arrest the onward march of the Americans. Seven were all that went back over the pass that night to tell Aguinaldo that they had tried and failed. Fifty-two of them were either killed or wounded. And among them, the last to retreat, we found the body of young General Gregorio Del Pilar. We had seen him cheering his men in the fight. One of our companies crouched up close under the side of the cliff where he had built his first intrenchment, heard his voice continually during the fight urging his men to greater effort, scolding them, praising them, cursing them; appealing one moment to their love of their native land, and the next instant threatening to kill them himself if they did not stand firm. Driven from the first entrenchment, he fell slowly back to the second, in full sight of our sharp shooters and under a heavy fire. Not until every man around him in the second intrenchment was down did he turn his white horse and ride slowly up the winding trail. Then we who were below saw an American squirm his way out to the top of a high flat rock and take deliberate aim at the figure on the white horse. We held our breath, not knowing whether to pray that that sharpshooter would shoot straight or miss. Then came the spiteful crack of the Krag rifle and the man on horseback rolled to the ground, and when the troops charging up the mountain side reached him the boy general of the Filipinos was dead. • •

We went on up the mountain side. After H company had driven the insurgents out of their second position and killed Pilar the other companies had rushed straight up the trail and never stopped until they were far up above the clouds and there was no longer an insurgent in sight. As we went up the trail we passed dead Filipino soldiers. We counted ten in all. Some had been shot several times. We found bloody trails that led to places on the edge of the cliffs, where wounded men had either jumped or fallen off. We passed the second intrenchment high up on the trail. It was built of heavy rocks well banked with earth. Just past this a few hundred yards, we saw a solitary body lying in the road. The body was almost stripped of clothing and there were no marks of rank left on the blood-soaked coat. But the face of the dead man had a look I had never noticed on the faces of other dead men I had found in insurgent uniforms on the field of battle in the wake of an American firing line. The features were clear cut and the forehead high and shapely. I decided the man must have been an insurgent officer. A soldier came running down the trail. "That's old Pilar," he said. "We got the old rascal. I guess he's sorry he ever went up against the Thirty-third."

"There ain't no doubt about its being Pilar," rattled on the young soldier. "We got his diary, and his letters, and all his papers, and Sullivan of our company's got his pants, and Snider's got his shoes, but he can't wear them because they're too small, and a sergeant in G company got one of his silver spurs, and a lieutenant got the other, and somebody swiped the cuff buttons before I got here or I would have swiped them, and all I got was a stud button and his collar with blood on it."

So this was the end of Gregorio del Pilar. Only 22 years old, he managed to make himself a leader of men when he was hardly more than a boy, and at last had laid down his life for his convictions. Maj. Marsh had the diary. In it he had written under the date of Dec. 2, the day he was killed: "The general has given me the pick of all the men that can be spared and ordered me to defend the pass. I realize what a terrible task is given me. And yet I feel that this is the most glorious moment of my life. What I do is done for my beloved country. No sacrifice can be too great."

A private, sitting by the camp fire, was exhibiting a handkerchief. "It's old Pilar's. It's got 'Doleres Hosea' on the corner. I guess that was his girl. Well, it's all off with Gregorio."

"Anyhow," said Private Sullivan, "I got his pants. He won't need 'em any more."

The man who had the general's shoes strode proudly past, refusing with scorn a Mexican dollar and a pair of shoes taken from one of the private insurgent soldiers. A private sitting on a rock was examining a golden locket containing a curl of a woman's hair. "Got the locket off his neck," said the soldier. • • •

As the main column started on its march for the summit of the mountain a turn in the trail brought us again in sight of the form of the insurgent general far down below us. There had been no time to bury him. Not even a blanket or a poncho had been thrown over him.

A crow sat on the dead man's feet. Another perched on his head. The fog settled down upon us. We could see the body no longer.

We carved not a line, and we raised not a stone,
But we left him alone in his glory.

And when Private Sullivan went by in his trousers, and Snider with his shoes, and the other man who had the cuff buttons, and the sergeant who had the spur, and the lieutenant who had the handkerchief, and another man that had his shoulder straps, it suddenly occurred to me that his glory was about all we had left him.

Senator Hoar of Massachusetts has introduced a bill into the senate of the United States, which, if it becomes a law, will prohibit the importation into the United States of birds for ornamental purposes, but birds for food and for museums, zoological gardens or scientific collections are permitted to be imported, as well as living birds whose feathers can be removed, or feathers taken from living birds without injury to the same.

This story is told of Prof. Pritchard, who recently opened the sixth international otological congress. Reviewing the progress of the last thirty years, the professor referred to "chronic nonsuppurative disease of the middle ear" as being the supreme mystery at present to students of otology. "What is this middle ear?" a lady asked a sage physician. "Madam," he replied. "it is the ear with which we do not listen." In other words, the nose.

Prof. Frederick von Martens, who holds the chair of international law in the St. Petersburg university, is a notable linguist and author, and at the Venezuela arbitration conference in Paris, where he read the decision of the commission, he had a pleasant fashion of addressing each delegate in his own language. One of the English jurists wondered how the professor was able to keep up his knowledge of so many modern tongues. The professor replied: "It is self-defense. You see, in case I lose my chair I wish to be prepared for any offer you foreigners may make."

"The principal sufferers," said a New Yorker, "from the railroad discrimination as to the rates on freight eastbound from Chicago to Atlantic ports are not the few large shippers, but the numerous class of small importers whose orders are brought from Chicago in lots of one to five carloads. Houses whose orders require a train of twenty or more cars have no difficulty in getting grain in Chicago at a price, including its transportation to an eastern port, which leaves them without complaint as to discrimination. It should be observed that the bargains with the railroads are conducted chiefly through freight brokers, a practice which aids in concealing the secret cutting.

Americans going to Paris, who expect to live in anything but the grandest hotels, will do well to accustom themselves to running up and down stairs. Most of the apartment houses have their best tenements on the fourth and fifth floors, and many of them have no elevators. Those that have them provide no attendant, and the dweller or visitor has to run the machine or walk. They are usually dark closets, and the finest look like cabinets for china and glass, being three-cornered and cramped and having "shrine" doors. Accidents are frequent, though not serious. Every newcomer looks upon the French ascenseur with horror. Even in houses supplied with lifts and attendants the passengers walk downstairs. Few ring for the cupboard to come up and take them down. It is considered superfluous luxuriousness and is rather resented. In many apartments there is a rule against it.

Vice Consul Morrison of Dawson City reports to the department of state relative to agricultural experiments in the Yukon district of Alaska: "Grain has done exceptionally well, being well filled, and I see no reason why it should not be extensively and successfully grown here. As far as my observations go, the climate is as suitable for raising winter wheat as in any place in the northwestern or the northern states of America. From my experience of the last two years, I see no reason why this country should not be able to produce its own vegetables and grains. As for flowers, the success I have had proves that all hardy annuals will do well. The coming years I intend planting several hundred hybrid roses; also summer flowering bulbs, a large variety of other hardy and half-hardy annuals, and some of the hardy perennials. Small fruits, such as strawberries, currants, blackberries, and raspberries, should do well. Currants, raspberries, cranberries, strawberries and blueberries grow wild here in abundance."

There is certainly no monarch in all the world who is in so many different places in the course of the year as the German emperor, so it is rather difficult to say where he is most "at home." But perhaps the honors of his domesticity may be pretty equally divided between the Royal Schloss of Berlin and the New palace, Potsdam, which might be called the Hampton court of Prussia. The latter, about half an hour by rail from Berlin, is the summer residence of the imperial family, while from November to Easter the court generally resides in the capital.

WOMEN WHO TOIL AT THE FORGE.

Down in Cape Colony, where Britons are fighting for the remainder of the earth which they have not yet acquired, there is a convent of English nuns who have had enough experience of peace and war to fill a volume.

On the southern slope of the Eland's Berg, near King William Town, the terminus of a little branch from the main line of railroad that runs from East London to Bloemfontein, they built their convent several years ago, and waited for the time to come when they should have a prosperous school filled with coming women. But the time did not come.

The English, true to their prejudice, must send their daughters home to the schools where they and their ancestors had been taught. The Boers did not care for the Anglican church sisterhood nor for their education. So the nuns had to wait; but while they waited they wasted no time. There was nothing else for them to do, so they farmed the land which surrounded the convent. The time came, as it does on every farm, when the pick and the plowshare were dull, and the feet of the horses became worn and tender for want of shoes. Money was not plenty. It never is on farms, but there was a will and a way. They bought anvil, bellows, tools and iron, hired a blacksmith to do the work and overcame their difficulties. One day the blacksmith went off on a long spree. He was discharged. When the forge fire was lighted again there were fair arms and hands to pull the bellows and swing the hammer. The art of sharpening picks and plows was not hard. They burned the points off a few to begin with, and had some funny experiences while learning that castiron is not malleable, no matter how hot you get it, and that it has a very bad way of flying into red hot hail when struck a good blow with a hammer.

Blacksmith work became a pleasure to them; they could fashion housebuilders' hardware that would set a collector wild. Iron candlesticks of Venetian pattern were not so hard to make, and their pride in their achievements was reward for their pains.

Now, ruddy and bronzed, they earn good wages in doing work for surrounding farmers.—New England Home Magazine.

THE INFLUENCE OF THOUGHT.

Life too Short to Nurse One's Misery, Says One Physician.

"'As a man thinketh in his heart so he is.' We have all at some time in our lives realized the evil effect of morbid thought, which is always negative, upon our bodies," says a well-known physician. "This may be manifested in various ways. Take, for example, the nervous dyspeptic, who is constantly brooding over his own condition, thinking he is worse than any one else can be, and manifesting, not only in his words and actions, but in his facial expression, all the morbid conditions within him. Our mental and physical conditions react upon each other, and in many instances originate in negative thought. This not only applies to a dyspeptic, but to all classes of invalids, who are prone to sit down and imagine their conditions much worse than they really are, allowing fear and apprehension (the worst form of negative thought) to entirely possess them. We cannot afford to spend our lives in this unprofitable manner. Nothing is to be gained by it for ourselves or others. We all recognize the fact that our morbid thought quickly affects others unfavorably. There is every reason why we should rid ourselves of all thoughts, except those that are uplifting and health-giving. We must assume a positive mental attitude, and, instead of harboring fear, anxiety, criticism, must cultivate courage, hope, kind thoughts of others, and love for all. It will take time to accomplish this, but it can be done. 'Life is too short to nurse one's misery; hurry across the lowlands that you may spend more time on the mountain top.'"—New York Tribune.

SOME FRONTIER STORIES.

Escapades in Real Life That Eclipse Those of Fiction.

"It is a popular form of amusement to manufacture jokes about the dime novel and to poke fun at the Deadwood Dicks and Calamity Janes who riot through their pages," says John Reading, of Denver, "but the doings of those fantastic heroes and heroines were not more wonderful than some of the things that did happen in the checkered career of many a frontier bad man of real life. Take Wild Bill, for example; some of his escapades read like fairy legends, yet reliable men have told me that they were not exaggerated, and a man I knew was present in a barroom when Bill was playing cards with a man, who, with another, had resolved to kill him. The other man was behind Bill; but when the trap was sprung, he killed both, shooting the other man over his shoulder, with only a looking-glass some distance away to assist his aim. At another time, after having been given the customary notice that he would be shot on sight, Wild Bill walked into the square of the town, to find himself between the man who had served the notice and a crowd of his friends. So short was his time and so dangerous his position that he was compelled to fire at a single man from his hip, but without a glance he swung around and covered the crowd with his guns before they could take action against him; but he knew his skill, and his opponent was dead even before he began to turn. "Cody, while never a killer like Wild Bill and his prototypes, earned fairly his name of Buffalo Bill. My brother-in-law, who is an army officer, told me that Cody was once the scout of an army post to which he was attached, and one day, coming in, reported buffalo in the vicinity and asked for a detail to go out and kill some, in order to supply the post with fresh meat. For some reason the officer in command refused, and, Cody being importunate, finally testily said: 'Oh, well, if you're as great a buffalo hunter as they say you are, why don't you drive them down this way, and then we'll kill them for you.' Bill left at that in high dudgeon, but a few hours later, when the thunder of hoofs announced the coming of a buffalo herd, and in great excitement the garrison rushed out to secure game, there was Cody, riding behind them like a demon, and he had actually rounded that herd and driven it down on the fort, as the commandant had sarcastically told him to."

SHOPPING FROM THE BALCONY

Inhabitants of the poorer quarters of Naples manage to do the greater part of their shopping without leaving the lofty apartments in which the majority of them live, in a simple and effective manner. Outside every window is a small balcony, and resting in the corner of the balcony is a good sized basket, to which is attached a length of string sufficient to reach to the street.

Itinerant venders of all sorts of eatables and goods constantly required for household purposes perambulate the streets, yelling at the top of their voices the goods they have to dispose of, and the price at which they are prepared to sacrifice them. Every here and there you see one of them stop beneath a balcony in obedience to a shout from above, and an animated haggling proceeds until finally a bargain is struck and a basket comes into play.

Requisite copper coins or little paper bills are put into the basket, which is lowered to the street, loaded with the purchases, and hauled up again to the balcony. Italians are proverbially indolent, and this method of shopping without going out of doors has a charm for them that would be scarcely realized by one of our bustling American housewives.

THE PARSON FOUND OUT.

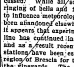
A Pointed Inquiry That Was Pointedly Replied To.

"Terse speech, clever epigrams and the witty bestowal of nicknames have marked every mining camp I have been in," says an old times. "When a man is a prospector, as a general rule, he doesn't possess much else than his 'grub' stake, and if the summer has netted him no discovery or return of any kind the ensuing winter is likely to be one of hardship. Such was the case during the opening of Coeur d'Alene, and the first winter or two found Murray, Idaho, crowded with prospectors, who were traveling on the uppermost part of their uppers. So pressed for money were they that they could not separate from any part of their small supply of the needful except in case of extreme necessity, and would go to the verge of starvation itself before buying a meal, but when they did the havoc they wrought on the eatables was great. This led an observant restaurant keeper at Murray to hang out a sign which read; 'Lunch, $1. Square meal, $2. Grand gorge, $3.' That winter witnessed also the most remarkable legislature ever convened in Idaho, and many and weird were the tales of its doings. As no conveniences in the way of restaurants or that sort of thing were attached to the hall where they met, it was the custom of most of the members to bring liquid refreshments with them, which they left in their overcoats in the coatrooms, and when a regular drink time arrived so general was the exodus that even ex-Speaker Reed would have found it difficult to count a quorum. A parson from Clearwater, who, needless to say, was an advocate of the blue ribbon, noticed this regular departure of his fellow-members, and by snooping around discovered the cause. And so one day when they had returned to their seats after the usual libation to the gods and the gold fields he arose and sarcastically asked: "Mr. Speaker, I arise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Have we a barroom attached to the premises?" Before the chair could answer, Maj. Burke of Shoshone arose and said: 'As the honorable gentleman from Clearwater well knows, no place where liquid refreshments can be secured is attached to the legislative hall, but if it's a drink he's looking for, he'll find a bottle in my overcoat pocket, third hook on the left as he enters the coatroom."

What Is Fear?

Superficial observation has defined fear as that characteristic of living creatures which teaches them to avoid danger and thereby protect themselves from injury or death. But if our study of nature is exhaustive we will find that fear does not protect limb or life. Indeed, nature has furnished one class of living organisms strictly as the prey of another. There are multitudes of creatures that feed upon other forms of animal life and rarely indulge in a vegetable diet. In a state of nature these animals hunt their prey. It is, therefore, a logical inference that if fear were given as a precaution to life many of these living things would be without the means of subsistence. A number of scientists, prominent among whom was Darwin, have given profound study to the psychogenesis of fear and found that it has only a most imperfect relation to the self-preservation of the creature that experiences it. It is supposed that the attitude of kneeling, which is the posture associated with supplication and terror, originally came from the inability of the muscles of the legs to support the weight, thereby causing the individual to sink to the ground. Dogs crouch and whine when frightened and horses become so tremulous that their legs can scarcely sustain them.

THE KRUGER PENNY.



The accompanying little illustration shows the head of that interesting coin of the South African Republic known as the "Kruger penny." This penny is embellished with the classic features of the president of the Transvaal and bears the inscription, "Zuid Afrik, Republick." Although the coin is an interesting one, it is not likely, judging from the present situation, that it will be in general circulation for a great length time.

Prevention of Hail Storms.

In the last volume of the proceedings of the Academy of Georgifili, Florence, the subject of anti-hail stations is discussed. While all schemes, such as ringing of bells and firing of cannon, to influence meteorological effects, have been abandoned elsewhere in the world it appears that experimentation in this line has continued in northern Italy, and as a result recently 800 anti-hail stations have been established in the region of Brescia for the protection of the vineyards. The method adopted consists in establishing stations at intervals of about a kilometer and placing in each of these in a vertical position a small cannon surmounted with a six-foot narrow conical trumpet. This transmits the vortex and concussion of a 2-3 ounce charge of black powder towards the threatening clouds, preventing, it is stated, the formation of hail, and also decreasing the electrical discharges. The originator of the idea, Burgomeister Moritz Stigel, of Stynn, claims that after three years' experience the efficacy of the scheme has been demonstrated by the complete exemption from injury by hail secured through its agency in that district.

Success to Former Country Boys.

It would be interesting to know the proportion of leading business men in the larger cities who were formerly country boys. Among financiers, directors of railroad and other corporations are found many men who twenty years ago held only minor positions in country towns, but who always retain fond memories of their native heath. As an instance of the progress made by those who have energy, the Scranton (Pa.) Republican refers to J. Parker Kirlin, now a leading New York attorney and a practitioner before the United States Supreme court. Twenty years ago Mr. Kirlin was only a carrier boy on the Republican. Congressman William Connell of Scranton, is another whose rise was notable. He began life by driving a mule in a Pennsylvania coal mine at seventy-five cents a day, and today he owns the property in which he started to work. Mr. Connell is reported to be the largest individual coal operator in the country, and his wealth is estimated at $20,000,000.

Vermont Maple Sugar.

More Vermont maple sugar is made every year in Davenport, Iowa, from cheap yellow sugar flavored with vegetable extracts than can be produced from all the maple trees in the whole state of Vermont. Currant jelly is manufactured from the cores and parings of apples utilized after they have been evaporated; glucose, sugar, a vegetable acid and some coloring and flavoring matter complete the delicacy.

BOERS NOT SAVAGES.

AN ENGLISHMAN PAYS THEM HIGH TRIBUTE.

Says That They Are Generous Friends and Pitying Foes and That They Are Being Maliciously Misrepresented by the Capitalistic Press of England.

An officer who took part in the battle of Colenso writes to a London paper, describing the confusion and slaughter that marked Buller's first battle in the campaign. He also recounts an incident which shows the Boer soldiers in a pleasanter light than is often done. He says: "About ten men of the Connaughts and twenty of the Inniskillings, representatives of the green and orange under Col. Thackery, found themselves in this position, and the ambulance wagons being already on the field carrying off the wounded, they were obliged to cease firing. 'Well, men,' said Col. Thackery, 'it is now Pretoria for us (meaning surrender), or shall we do the best we can?' 'The devil of Pretoria for us,' was the cry of all; 'do the best you can, and if the worst comes we'll fight it out.' A Boer officer came up and said: 'You seem to have lost very heavily here.'

"'Yes,' said Col. Thackery, laughing, 'but we shall be at Pretoria for the New Year all the same.'

"'Well,' said the Boer, 'if you are, I promise to stand you the best bottle of champagne in South Africa.'

"After some similar chaff, Col. Thackery said: 'Good-by, I'm going back to camp, and intend to take my arms with me.'

"'Very well, I've no orders about that, but in any case I'm looking the other way.' And so they parted. It has been the custom in England, for the purpose of inciting the passions of the people to the war pitch, to describe the Boers as little better than savages, but many incidents like the above prove them to be something very different. People are too ready to take up cries of treachery against their opponents on partial and one-sided evidence.

"Gen. Joubert has, I believe, challenged inquiry before a court, and two incidents came under my notice in this battle which show how difficult it is to deal with such matters, and how ignorance of what is taking place in the heat of battle, or, perhaps, errors of judgment, may be misinterpreted into treachery.

"Some indignation was expressed because one of our ambulances was struck by a shell. The fact was that these ambulances had been placed by mistake in advance of and directly under one of our naval guns. I understand the arrangements of the medical officer had been altered by a staff officer, but under such circumstances the enemy were quite justified in continuing their fire. Again, the parties whom I have already mentioned as remaining in the advance line after the order for the retirement had been given kept up their fire long after the ambulance had advanced to the field and were picking up the wounded. Of course, the officers and men were ignorant of this, but, naturally, also the Boers were ignorant, and threatened to retaliate. What a cry there would have been all over Europe if our men had been fired at and hit under similar conditions. The truth is, a battlefield is not managed like an electrical machine, by pressing a button. Groups and lines of highly excited men are scattered over miles of country, and are often unaware of much that is happening outside their immediate vicinity, and, to tell the truth, not always even there. Men are often only partially responsible for the result of their own actions, and certainly they can be very imperfectly controlled."

The officer was with the Irish brigade, and says: "Every survivor looks back with bitterness and indignation at the gross folly and mismanagement that led to the certain slaughter of his companions. The brigade was marched into the very jaws of death in mass of quarter columns, and without waiting for the artillery preparation. No scouts were sent forward to discover the exact position of the ford. No skirmishers were thrown out to cover the advance of the main body. No attempt was made to extend till well within the zone of rifle fire and till shells had already begun to burst over their devoted heads. Then it was found for the first time that they had been led, not only under a destructive frontal fire from beyond the river which barred their passage, but into the very midst of a deadly enfilade. For five hours the men were allowed to remain in this position, helpless for good, seeing their comrades shot at every moment by their sides, yet powerless to retaliate. Like the Roman sentry, they kept their posts to the last, but when the orders came to retire nearly 600 lay on the field. A more wanton sacrifice of life has never been made, and there is not an officer or man in the brigade who is not well aware of the facts."

Baby Killed by Whisky.

Peter Lafalc, of 160 West Houston street bought a half gallon of whisky a few days ago and put it away in a closet. His 4-year-old son, George Washington, found it on Wednesday night while his mother was busy, and, filling a glass, handed it to his 2-year-old sister Mary, who gulped down the contents. George Washington poured out another tumblerful, and Mary was in the act of drinking this also when her mother saw what was going on and snatched the glass away. Mary became unconscious a little later. A neighboring physician prescribed for her, but she did not regain consciousness and died.—New York Sun.

A Chestnut.

Ralph Waldo Emerson once told a good story of a friend who always carried in his pocket a horse-chestnut as a protection against rheumatism, just the same as other people wear shields and other specifics. Emerson thus testifies to the results in his friend's case: "He has never had the rheumatism since he began to carry it, and, indeed, it appears to have had a retrospective operation—for he never had it before."

HINTS ON CARVING.

Accomplishment Women Do Well to Acquire Nowadays.

In these revolutionary days when women are usurping most of men's privileges and prerogatives, and are having thrust upon them so many of men's burdens, it is eminently fitting and proper that they should consider seriously the question of carving. Not very many families dine in Russia fashion from the sideboard with the aid of a dignified butler. In most households some one has to carve before the eyes of the assembled diners, and it behooves women that they should be able to perform the little rite with grace and skill. If they succeed in doing this they will do more than their lords and masters have often succeeded in doing. A good knife of moderate size and great sharpness is a necessity. The platter should be placed near enough to the carver to give her control of it. The roast pieces, such as loins, breast, fore-quarters and the like, the butcher should have been told to separate the joints so that carving may not be impossible. In carving beef, mutton, lamb and veal thin, smooth, neat slices are desirable. They should always be cut across the grain, taking care to pass the knife through to the bones of the meat. In carving a leg of mutton the best slices are obtained from the center and the next best from the broad end. The pieces from the part next the knuckle are apt to be dry. A sirloin of beef yields its best slices from the end near the tenderloin. If it is cut through in this part, the pieces must be fairly thick; if long, thin slices are desired it should be cut across. In carving chicken or turkey, place the head to the right, cut off the wing nearest; then the leg, and then the second joint; then slice the breast until a rounded piece appears. Insert the knife between that and the bone and separate them; that is considered the best part of the bird. Next comes the "merry-thought." After this, turn over the bird a little, and just below the breast will be found the "oyster" which can be separated as the inner breast can be. The side bone lies beside the rump and the morsel can be taken out without separating the whole bone. Proceed in the same way with the other side.—Kansas City Journal.

A LEAKY RESERVOIR.

How the Heart of the Disciple of Izaak Walton Was Saddened.

"These gloomy days," said an old citizen, "recall a gloomy day when I was a boy and went fishing in a famous creek not far from my home. It was a well stocked creek. There were bass in it and shiners as big as a man's hand; and quite a lot of whitefish that would run a pound or a pound and a half, perhaps. I got out my tackle on this particular gloomy day and went down to the creek. It was a muggy day and a warm rain fell from time to time in light showers. I found my favorite pool and set to work. By George! I never had such luck! It seemed as if those fish were waiting in shoals to seize my hook. I yanked them up as fast as I could bait my hook and throw in, and they came out so fast that I couldn't spare the time to string them. I looked around. Some eight or ten feet from the stream was quite a good-sized round hole full of water. A heavy rain the night before had filled it up and it must have contained a couple of pails. A happy thought prompted me to toss my captured fish into this receptacle. I fished and fished until I was actually tired of the sport, and then as it came on to rain harder I thought I would quit and tote home the biggest catch of the season. I rolled up the line on the pole and drew from my pocket the stringing string. Then I went to my little pool of captives and, by George! there wasn't a fish in it! No, sir; not one! You see, it was a muskrat's hole and there was a tunnel reaching from it to the creek, and every fish I caught had wriggled through this opening back to his native lair. There was no help for it. I stared at the hole and I started back at the creek and then as the rain began to come down harder, I reluctantly turned away and trudged home a wiser, though a sadder boy."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Bad Spelling a Disease.

A medical authority claims that bad spelling is caused by a disease. In certain conditions of brain and nerves the patient frequently writes "ot" instead of "to." In another slightly varying form, instead of "the," the first letter is omitted, and so in many other short words. The malady usually affects the brain only in connection with words of one syllable, but cases have occurred where longer words have been so distorted that it was difficult to get their sense. It is a question whether one would be comforted by being told that bad spelling was caused by mental disease, or whether one would prefer to have this lack of accuracy set down to ignorance or carelessness. That it is not always a proof of defective education is quite certain.

Sprightly Tempers.

Extremely volatile and sprightly tempers seem inconsistent with any great enjoyment. There is too much time wasted in the mere transition from one subject to another. There seems to be no room for those deep impressions which are made alone by the duration of an idea, and are quite requisite to any strong sensation either of pleasure or pain. The bee to collect honey, or the spider to gather poison, must abide some time upon the weed or flower. Those whose fluids are mere sal volatile seem rather cheerful than happy men. The temper above described is oftener an attribute of wits than of persons of great abilities.

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

Fire-Escape Easy to Use — Scissors Like Pie Cutters—How Electricity Kills — Curious Results of the Cold — Recent Inventions.

How Electricity Kills.

Although with the increasing use of electricity for power, lighting and chemical purposes the world sees increased precaution against accident, there are occasional exceptions to the general rule of safety, and the question how a powerful electric current acts on a human being is therefore a matter of vital interest. Dr. R. H. Cunningham, who has given this subject a good deal of study within the last five years, recounts in "The Electrical World" experiments which he has made on some of the lower animals. These tests lead him to believe that the first and most immediate effect of a powerful shock is to interrupt the heart beat. It does so by impairing the automatic tendency of the muscles to contract rhythmically and in unison. An effect known to physiologists as "fibrillation" is produced. That is to say, the separate fibres of muscle that should act together fail to harmonize, and thus neutralize one another. One result of the quasi-paralysis is that the cells at the chief nervous centers, where sense and will reside, lose the nourishment which the blood supplies, and on which they rely for life. Thus robbed, they rapidly die. Furthermore, the electric current often checks respiration. If the volume is small and the potential (or electric pressure) light, this effect is only faintly observed. But stronger currents, especially if prolonged, interrupt breathing more positively, and thus lead to asphyxia. Convulsions are frequently an attendant symptom. The revival of an animal that had seemingly been killed was effected by Dr. Cunningham in the following manner. He aimed to restore the activity of the heart by two agencies; he injected into the arteries what is called "defibrinated" blood, and at the same time gently stimulated the organ with electricity. So much laboratory preparation would be required to repeat this procedure in the case of a man that it could hardly be employed effectively in cases of pure accident, unless the necessary means were close at hand, in consequence of unusual forethought. It is doubtful whether a central light or power station will ever be equipped with these facilities for restoring injured men, and it would probably take too long to carry one who had received an apparently fatal dose of electricity to the nearest doctor.

Cheaper Gas in Sight.

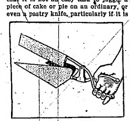
It has recently been ascertained in Germany that illuminating gas of a low candle-power, when used with incandescent burners, will give extremely good light, and in some cases even better than a richer gas. So extensive is the use of the incandescent mantles that in certain cities, such as Magdeburg, it has been proposed to gradually reduce the candle-power of the gas from 14, the present value, to 10, and then to 8. As the poorer gas contains a considerable amount of hydrogen, it is quite as useful for this purpose, and as there have been devised recently improved methods for making water-gas, which is particularly rich in this substance, it is believed that the cost of gas can be considerably cheapened.

Novel Motor Carriage.

A motor carriage has recently been introduced in France which combines many novel features. It is normally propelled solely by an oil engine, but on hilly ground is helped by an electric motor. The oil engine works at constant speed, and when the vehicle does not absorb all the engine power, the excess drives the motor as a dynamo and charges the accumulators. Then the accumulators are only used occasionally, and they are kept fully charged. The engine is directly connected to the dynamotor, which is shunt-wound, and this is in turn used to start up the engine. The changes in speed are effected mechanically.

Scissors Like Pie Cutters.

It is a matter of common experience that it is not an easy task to juggle a piece of cake or pie on an ordinary, or even a pastry knife, particularly if it is pie. A Pennsylvania genius of Connelsville, realizing this fact, has devised a very effective pie cutter. As shown in the illustration, it consists of a flat triangular blade for insertion under the lower crust and a sharp knife-blade, supported in a vertical position, with relation to the base piece. This knife blade is manipulated by means of a scissor-like arrangement, and, as both the bottom and the end have cutting edges, it is quite a pleasure to cut through a hard cake or delicate pie crust with this device.

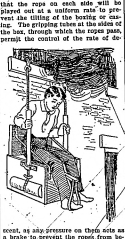


Mosquitoes and Malaria.

The discovery that mosquitoes are responsible for the spread of malaria is giving rise to exalted hopes of banishing one of the most dreaded scourges of the tropics. Maj. Ronald Ross' researches in India show that this is probably the only source of infection, and give grounds for believing that not all kinds of mosquitoes are dangerous. Thus far the "spotted-winged mosquitoes" seem to be the only offenders, the malaria parasite having been only found in two species of these creatures in India and one in Italy. Their breeding places are rare in India, being only shallow puddles of rain water that do not dry up under a week or more, while the common species find breeding places near every dwelling—the "brindled mosquitoes" in pots and tubs of water, and the "gray mosquitoes" in cisterns, ditches and drains. The problem of dealing with malaria, therefore, is greatly simplified if the present conclusions prove to be correct. It is simply necessary to drain or treat with chemicals the comparatively few pools yielding spotted-winged mosquitoes, and the disease will very soon disappear through the extermination of its carriers.

Fire-Escape Easy to Use.

Most of the fire-escapes installed in hotels and similar buildings, where they are required by law, are simply makeshifts, hardly suitable for women or children to manipulate, as they usually require some dexterity and considerable muscular exertion on the part of the user. In the fire escape here shown the descent to the ground from a window or other egress opening can be made comfortably and without exertion. All that is necessary is to seat oneself on the bench shown, which has previously been hooked to the window ledge or other convenient point, and to grasp the two handles at the sides. Mechanism concealed in the box underneath plays out the rope from two reels or drums, which are so arranged that the rope on each side will be played out at a uniform rate to prevent the tilting of the boxing or casing. The gripping tubes at the sides of the box, through which the ropes pass, permit the control of the rate of descent, as any pressure on them acts as a brake to prevent the ropes from being rapidly unwound from the reels or drums. The same object is also accomplished by means of the brake strap, shown as coming out of the front of the casing, and designed to be operated by the foot, which is slipped into the stirrup provided for that purpose. This interesting device, the invention, is adapted to be stored away in a compact form, and yet is ready for instant use without arrangement or adjustment, other than fastening to the window sill.



Curious Results of the Cold.

A traveler in Siberia tells of a remarkable occurrence among the frozen regions of that country. In the intensely cold nights, he writes, the silence was sometimes broken by a loud report as of a cannon. This was the bursting of one of the ice bubbles on a river—a phenomenon I had neither heard nor read of before. The streams coming down from the hills were frozen on the surface some six to nine inches thick. The water beneath flowed faster than it could escape, and the pressure, on the principle of a hydraulic press, became irresistible. First, the elasticity of the ice was seen by the rising of circular mounds some six to eight feet high. The bursting point came at last, with a report like an explosion. The water escaped, but soon froze again. I have seen scores of these ice hillocks in a few versts of the river.

Some New Inventions.

To prevent a stepladder from tipping over and steady it while in use a new attachment has a hinged leg set on either side of the top, to extend out on either side of the ladder, with sharp points at the lower ends to engage the floor.

An automatic disinfector for closets has a reservoir for the storage of a disinfecting liquid, with a valve having a lever attached to the lever of the water reservoir, to dischage a small quantity of the purifier with the water. —Patent Record.

Electricity is used to operate a new automatic bicycle pump, which has a small motor to run the pump, a coin being inserted in a slot to form a connection between two plates placed end to end, which complete the electric circuit and operate the motor.

A convertible turban and visor cap has been designed by a Minnesota man, the visor being suspended on pivoted links, which allow it to be raised or lowered as desired, snap buttons being provided to secure the visor in either of the two positions.

An improved blowpipe utilizes a liquid fuel, which is stored in an upper reservoir and flows into a spherical chamber underneath which the outlet of the blowpipe is set, the heat from the latter turning the oil into gas and forcing it out through the pipe.

An Australian has designed a perpetual calendar which can be attached to any pencil, being formed of a series of metallic tubes, joined together to revolve freely, with the days, months and years cut in the faces, to be adjusted to correspond with the time desired.

The hair can be rapidly dried after washing by the use of a new comb, which has coarse teeth, formed of porous material, capable of withstanding great heat, whereby the moisture absorbed by drawing the comb through the hair is evaporated by holding the comb over a flame.

A newly designed street sweeper has one of the rear wheels replaced by a large drum, with an opening in proximity to the end of the brush, the latter throwing the dirt into the drum, whence it is carried upward by the revolution of the drum, and emptied into the receptacle at the top.

The Last Links Are Broken.

(Old Favorite Series.)

The last links are broken
That bound me to thee!
The words thou hast spoken
Have rendered me free.

Thy sweet glance, misleading,
On others may shine—
Those eyes beam'd unheeding
When tears burst from mine.

The chain that enthrall'd me
In sadness was worn;
The coldness that gall'd me
In silence was borne.

Though sorrow subdued me,
It did not appear;
Though thy scorn hath pursued me,
Long, long wert thou dear.

If my love was deem'd boldness
That error is o'er;
I have witness'd thy coldness,
I love thee no more.

I have not loved lightly:
I'll think of thee yet—
I will pray for thee nightly,
Till life's sun has set!

And the form my heart cherish'd
Still in it shall dwell!
But affection hath perish'd,—
And, love—fare the well.

—F. Stewers.

A Hint as to Table Linen.

The preferred table linen is of fine damask with an embroidered cipher. This device is no longer made very large and conspicuous, and is not much greater for the tablecloth than for the napkins. There is nothing so difficult to judge as table linen; no fabric where adulterations or exact qualities are so difficult to discern. In other than high-grade establishments, where one must depend upon personal judgment for the purity of a fabric, there are a few points to keep in mind. Pure linen is hard and slippery, never soft and pliable. If a moistened finger be applied to an all-linen cloth the moisture will at once appear on the other side, whereas in mixed goods it will appear slowly or not at all. The flax odor is always noticeable in linens, and every woman should learn to recognize it or its absence. Sheets with ruffled tops are again used, after being long abandoned. Sheets and pillowcases, with the bolster cases, if a bolster is employed, are made in sets to match. Yellow or grayish lace, now seen on underwear, is likewise adopted for bed linen. Hemstitching is another decoration which is much elaborated with drawn work for bed linen and towels. The laces which are chosen for trimming this class of household linen are Mechlin, Valenciennes and guipure. Beb covers of Richelieu embroidery over a lining of colored taffeta are seen. The most satisfactory ones, however, are those of fine white Marseilles fringed or embroidered around the edge and always fresh by reason of their capability of being frequently laundered.

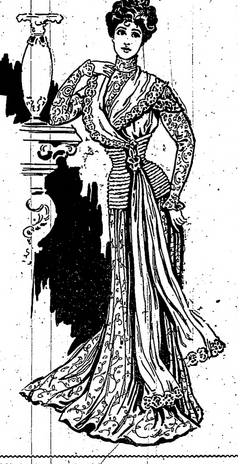
Training Wives.

One of the most indefatigable advocates of woman's rights used to say that it was the greatest possible mistake for girls to be brought up to regard marriage as a profession. The danger nowadays seems to lie in the opposite direction, and women appear to think that no kind of training is necessary in order to fit them for the duties that will devolve upon them if they do become wives and mothers, says the Ladies' Pictorial. That mothers should train their daughters to snare husbands and to regard matrimony as their predestined end is unquestionably a mistake; but that our modern system does not make for domestic felicity is, unhappily, only too evident. However, we get over all our troubles at this end of the century by the use of serum or by technical schools, and it is therefore not in the least surprising to learn that a training college is in course of formation where girls can be taught their duties as matrons. Naturally, housewifely duties come first in the course of studies, then care of children, then the preservation of personal appearance. And it may be here noted that this is by no means an insignificant subject for wives to study. We know, alas! that the average woman looks older than the average man, who is very susceptible to good looks and that indefinable attractiveness that clothes can give a woman if they are well chosen and well put on. Every wife cannot have unlimited dress money or credit at her modiste's, but she can be careful to keep wrinkles and dowdiness at bay. One can easily imagine that the classes for this subject will be well attended at the school for wives; but it is impossible to imagine how pupils are to be practically trained in tact, which is also included in the curriculum. If the professors can teach this, then future rulers in the divorce court should have a very easy time, and matrimonial misunderstandings become exceptional. But how is it to be done? Can the leopard change its spots or the Ethiopian his skin? And Edwins and Angelinas all the world over are daily giving each other all manner of provocation for making those rifts within the domestic lute which so often widen and widen until the music that at the outset of their matrimonial life was so full of harmony becomes altogether mute. When Edwin shows a disposition to seek society away from home, when he grumbles unceasingly and unreasonably, when he flings his relations, so to say, at Angelina; when he sulks, when, in short, he does any of the aggravating things that he always does, Angelina must hit the happy mean that lies between absolute silence—which goads a man to madness—and the addition of fuel to the fire which inevitably results from "answering back"—any argumentation. But if women are made so perfect as to hold their tongues when provoked, it is difficult to see where the material for plays and novels is to be found.

The Importance of Neat Apparel.

The woman who is always well and neatly dressed is able to exercise a greater influence for good than one who is the reverse. The neatly dressed woman is more attractive to the eye, and the eye is one of the main avenues to the heart. Other things being equal, her influence is more potent than her neighbor's, whose reputation of dressing "just as it happens" at home, in some indefinable way casts a shadow over whatever virtues she may possess. A woman neatly dressed is ready for emergencies. The chance caller and unexpected guest finds her ready to receive them. But, perhaps, the greatest necessity for looking well at home is the home itself. To the members of our own family circle do we owe the first duty. Neatly dressed does not mean richly dressed. A cheap, plainly made gown may be the perfection of neatness, and take only a few minutes to assume after the dinner work is out of the way. A woman in slatternly garments is shorn of her dignity and womanly influence just as surely as was Samson of his strength when betrayed by Delilah. Curl papers and soiled wrappers represent the Delilah of many an otherwise strong personality.

PEARL GRAY FOULARD WITH SASH MOTIF.



A Bad Habit—Have You It?

Again attention is called to those essentially feminine habits of putting pins in the mouth or moistening a pencil with the lips. A pin swallowed means only a surgical case, but the greater danger lies in the contagion that may be lurking in the pin itself. Under the head of the pin, or in the point of the pencil, all kinds of malignant germs may be located, which will be transmitted by the mouth quicker than any other way. It hardly seems possible that anyone needs to be cautioned against holding money between the lips, yet a person can scarcely go a block on a street car without noticing some one indulging in the dangerous habit.

Hygienic Bathing.

An authority on hygiene says that systematic use of salt baths will prevent one from taking cold, and avert chapping and roughness of the skin. A handful of common coarse salt dissolved in a basinful of water as cold as one's vitality permits is sufficient for a sponge bath over the entire body. No soap should be used in this bath. It is better to use cold water for the face and neck, adding a little hot for the remainder of the sponging, if desired.

OUR COOKING SCHOOL.

Sultana Pudding.

In a double boiler scald one pint of new milk. Scrape one square of chocolate and mix it with two tablespoonfuls of sugar and just enough boiling water to reduce to a thin paste. When the lumps have been rubbed out add it to the hot milk. Beat two eggs and add to them gradually one and one-half cups of granulated sugar, and when well mixed beat in two level teaspoonfuls of flour and half a teaspoonful of ground cinnamon. Pour the scalded milk upon this, beat a moment, and cook until well thickened. Stir constantly to prevent curdling, and when cold add a tablespoonful of vanilla and a quart of good cream. Have ready a cupful of seeded raisins and chopped dates and stir them into the pudding after it has been partly frozen.

Fricasseed Parsnips.

Two tablespoonfuls of broth, a piece of mace, one-half cupful of milk, one ounce butter, a little flour, pepper and salt, parsnips. Peel and wash the parsnips and boil them in milk till quite soft; drain them and cut them in pieces lengthwise two or three inches long; put them in a sauce made of the broth, milk, butter, flour and seasoning; simmer all together for a quarter of an hour and serve.

A Cheap Icing.

An icing for cake, that will be found inexpensive and good, may be made by taking three tablespoonfuls of milk and letting it come to a boil. Then set it aside and when it is cool add one teaspoonful of vanilla or other extract and stir in confectioner's sugar until thick enough to spread without running.

Hints.

Isinglass forms a most delicate starch for fine lace, muslins, etc.

To cleanse tarnished brass cut a lemon in two; take one-half and rub on the brass, then wash with warm water, and rub with a leather.

Ground mustard mixed with a little water and rubbed over the hands removes strong odors from them. Linseed meal answers the same purpose.

When bamboo furniture is filled with dust it may be cleaned with a small brush dipped in warm water and salt. The salt prevents it from turning yellow.

Varnished and Painted Floors.—If, once a month, the floors be first wiped clean with a cloth wrung out of warm water, then rubbed with a cloth wet with kerosene and finally rubbed briskly with a coarse woolen cloth, they will keep bright and handsome for years.

Simply a Matter of Business.

"Glorious sport!" cried the man by the roadside as the scorchers went by.

"I can't see it," returned his companion, who was watering the horse.

"That must be because you are prejudiced," said the man who had first spoken. "It has everything in its favor. I even find it an excellent thing for business."

"I don't," replied the other sullenly.

"I am. And you?"

"Oh, I'm a surgeon."

A Juvenile Phenomenon—A Little Hero —An Ostrich Policeman — A Florida Bird Keeps Watch Over the Farm — Bearing the Ills They Had.

A Juvenile Phenomenon.

He can't be got to stop up late,
Whatever folks may say;
At half-past seven every night
He puts his toys away.

He puts his toys away, remark—
He doesn't leave them all
About the floor where "grown-ups" may
Trip over them and fall.

He keeps his collar and his clothes
Immaculately clean;
He wipes his boots upon the mat
When through the mud he's been.

He learns his lessons with a will,
And never skips them—no!
He never plagues his sisters, and
That's why they love him so.

When with his trumpet and his drum
He innocently plays,
If he is told to "stop that noise,"
He instantly obeys.

A sullen brow he never wears,
He never says, "I shan't!"
Nor does he ever cry, "I won't!"
Nor does he whine, "I can't!"

He's ne'er been seen to tease the cat,
And when his dinner's o'er,
He doesn't, as he leaves the room,
Contrive to bang the door.

That I can't quite give you his name
I am obliged to own,
But he is Madame No-one's son,
Who lives in Nolandknown.

A Little Hero.

"Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" It was the black kitten that said it. At least, it sounded like the black kitten's voice to the little girl who had started up to listen, in her bed upstairs. She was alone and the house was dark. "Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e," came the call again, plaintively, as the shivering kitty sat on the window sill, wondering why his little mistress had let that new servant sweep him out on such a cold night. On other nights little Marie had carried him down cellar to his nice bed of shavings by the furnace, and there he had slept, all warm, until morning. He did not know that little Marie had hunted for him upstairs and down, and had gone to bed very unhappy because she feared that he might be suffering somewhere out in the cold. He called again: "Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" It may have been only a common meauow. It certainly did not sound like any common meaouw to the black kitten's little mistress. She knew that he was calling her, and reproaching her; and as she heard the wind whistling around the corner of the house, and thought of her darling little cat, shivering outside in the cold, she could stand it no longer. She sprang out of her bed and started down the hall. She soon found that she could not go so rapidly; so carefully waving one hand in front of her, with the other she felt her way along until she came to the stairs. She bravely took the first step, and then stopped short, for up and down the hall window something was waving its long black arms. She turned and went scurrying back to her bed and drew the bed clothes over her head. She lay very still for several minutes; but then there came plainly through the blankets, the call, "Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" The little voice was full of reproach now. She thought her kitty knew that she had been a coward, and that she was not going to come to him, even when she knew he was suffering in the cold. He called again, again, until little Marie could endure it no longer: "Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" "I'll just run past the window," she whispered to herself, and once more crept out of bed, and felt her way along the hall. But at the first stair step she stopped again. She could never, never, never run past that window, and she stood clinging to the newel post and shivering. But "Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" came plaintively up stairs. Marie took another step slowly, clinging close to the banister. Her eyes were fastened on the awful window, as step by step she crept down. When she came opposite it, she was afraid no longer; she laughed softly, for she could see that the "waving arms" were the branches of the apple tree. The rest of the stairs were quickly past, and she felt her way on through the library. Once she stopped and kept hold of the back of a big chair for a long time, for just in front of her the floor creaked loudly. But it was only a little further now; and soon, gathering up all her courage, she went forward. She knew just where to find her kitty, for he always came to the same window when he wanted to come in. She drew up the curtain and there he was. In a moment she raised the window, and he sprang into her arms. She put both paws around her neck, and together they went up stairs. She was not afraid now, for the furry little body that rested so lovingly in the hollow of her shoulder, was a comfort, and a protection to her. She could laugh at the waving arms and the creaking floor. Together they cuddled down in the bed, and her kitty sang her a loving song of praise for her courage. Together they fell asleep, and in the morning when Mamma found the little cat's black head close to the sunny curls, and heard the story of his midnight rescue, she wondered that her little girl had not been afraid. "I was awfully afraid, Mamma," said Marie; "but I did it anyhow." "That's what makes heroes," Mamma answered.—Charlotte W. Eastman, in Little Folks.

A Word for the Sparrow.

Why should the English sparrow be considered such a pest? Any one that takes the trouble to study their habits, will see that much that has been said about them is untrue. They are not so quarrelsome as the petted canary, and much less greedy. They are considerate of their fellows, and ready to help them when in trouble. And they are so cheerful and active—always on the alert, no matter how gloomy the day—that a group of the bright-eyed, chattering things is a practical illustration of the beauties of contentment. Sparrows should be protected, not only for the good they do, but for the pleasure they bring even to the slums of great cities, enlivening even the garrets of the sick with their gentle chirrup. They are undoubtedly the scavengers of cities, clearing away waste from every corner, and they have brought soft and loving feelings to the heart of the roughest prisoner, who from his stinted pittance of bread and water will save no small share for the sparrows at his window grating. They are the best of insect destroyers; they have attached themselves to man most confidingly; they are beings with flesh and blood and brains, and most affectionate in their own way to those that love and care for them. Therefore let us care for and protect them in summer as well as in winter. For although the farmers may have good reason to object to their presence about their grain stacks, there are many reasons for encouraging them to thrive in our cities.

An Ostrich Policeman.

On a Florida ostrich farm one of the birds acts as watchman. This ostrich, who has been dubbed Napoleon, patrols the camp, giving at intervals a cry which may be said to mean "All's well." If anything alarms him, he at once communicates it to his companions by a series of yells as he advances to the attack. Napoleon stands nearly ten feet high, and weighs upwards of four hundred pounds. He is a savage bird, of unusual intelligence. At night he is unusually ferocious, and often his keeper is obliged to stand off. To see the keeper force Napoleon back to his pen in the morning, with a large fork, is one of the sights of the ostrich farm. The enormous bird screeches with rage and strikes out with his feet, but all the while slowly giving way. One night the farm hands were awakened by the roars of Napoleon and the agonizing shrieks of a human being. Rushing to the pens, they saw the ostrich chasing a negro. The negro made an effort to get over the fence, when the bird struck him a glancing blow on the thigh, which ripped it open and exposed the bone. For a time it was thought the poor pheasant thief would bleed to death. The fame of this episode has naturally caused the pheasants' quarters to be shunned by other depredators.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Bearing the Ills They Had.

In the Laccadive Islands in the Indian ocean the food of the natives consists almost wholly of palms and fish. When, therefore, a number of rats took to living in the tops of the trees and eating up the young nuts, black ruin seemed to stare the people in the face. They appealed to the Madras government for help, and a small army of cats was sent to the island. Pussy, however, finding fish plentiful, did not see the fun of climbing up trees seventy feet high for food, and so remained below. Then tree snakes were sent to the islanders, who thought the remedy worse than the disease and killed the serpents without delay. But they still complained. So government sent them mongooses, which not only refused to climb the trees but also consumed the natives' fowl. Government next decided to send owls. Here, again, the people objected. In their eyes the birds were "devil birds," that would terrify the bairns and set every old wife prophesying evil. The folk accordingly made up their minds to bear the ills they had rather than fly to others they knew not of, and so as soon as they could, packed cats, owls and mongooses into a boat and rowed them to an uninhabited reef, where the creatures were left to their own sweet wills.

The Captive Thrush.

One day a Lochaber lad caught a thrush and took it home. No cage was to be had, so the bird was placed in a basket with a lid. The boy's mother having told the Rev. Dr. Stewart of the capture, the minister—a naturalist well known throughout the Western Highlands of Scotland—came to see the bird. Whilst they were all talking about the prisoner, the lad spied a similar bird on an elder bush, and Dr. Stewart at once noticed that this was the captive's mate. He persuaded the boy to put the basket outside. This was done, and by-and-by the male bird flew down and began caressing the prisoner in many pretty ways. Then he attacked the basket lid furiously, hoping to peck a hole in it big enough for his consort to escape by. This so touched the boy's mother and even the boy, that the latter agreed to let the captive free. Taking the basket back to the spot where the thrush had been caught, the lid was opened and the bird flew off with a wild scream of joy, its mate joining it in the wood—both thrushes, no doubt, happier far than kings.

Animal Chivalry.

No self-respecting dog will bite a female, except in the extremest need of self-defense; though the female, as a rule, has no scruple whatever about punishing to the full extent of her power, any individual of the opposite sex that happens to be inferior to her in size or strength. So strong is this unwillingness to strike a female that few male hounds will attack a she-wolf, or even follow her trail. Something of the same deference to the gentler sex may be seen among horses. Although a horse will promptly attack any other horse that may interfere with him, either in the field or in harness, he will very seldom attack a mare. Farm horses, which cannot be worked alongside of any other horse on account of their savage tempers, may be safely yoked in double harness with a mare. Mares, on the other hand, will attack their own or the opposite sex without the slightest hesitation whenever they feel disposed, yet I have never seen serious or retaliatory resistance offered by the latter.—Contemporary Review.

Cured the Curious Youth.

"Pawing over the unclaimed mail is a favorite amusement among a certain set of idle youths," said a hotel clerk yesterday. "'Any letters for So-and-so?' they will ask, giving an imaginary name, their object being apparently to gratify idle curiosity by studying the superscriptions and reading the postals. Last fall an idiot of that type received a severe lesson here in this house. He made the usual request, giving rather a peculiar name, which he afterward admitted he had thought of on the spur of the moment. By a remarkable coincidence two central office detectives were standing near the desk at the time, and the name he gave was that of a noted crook who was wanted by the police of Chicago very badly.

"Without a word more than was necessary they took the young gentleman by the arm and carried him off to police headquarters. He was so astonished that he was unable to make a coherent explanation and really presented a picture of guilt. His story at headquarters that he had asked for letters under an assumed name was regarded as so improbable that they held him until telegraphic inquiries could be made. Of course it turned out that he was not the Chicago crook, but he got the scare of his life, and you may rest assured that he has dropped that form of amusement from his indulgences."—New York News.

He Wasn't "Soaked."

"When I go over to the old country I am going to get a lot of clothes to bring back with me," said a well known Windsorite, who went abroad recently.

"Oh," said his hearer, "if that is the case, I have a brother who is a tailor in London, and I will give you a letter of introduction and write him telling him to use you right."

In course of time the traveler stepped into the tailor shop in London and presented his letter of introduction. He got a warm handshake from the tailor, who said he had received a letter from his brother telling of the traveler's expected arrival, but could not understand part of the letter. The letter, when produced, read:

"Dear Brother—The bearer, Mr. ——, is from our place and wishes to get a lot of clothes in London. He has all sorts of money. Soak him. Yours affectionately."

The part of the letter that could not be understood was the concluding phrase. The traveler of course understood the Americanism, but managed to keep his face straight while he gave it a favorable construction. He saved the laugh until he could have it on his American friend. — Chicago Inter Ocean.

His Plea For Water.

"If there is anything I dislike," remarked Colonel Stilwell, wiping his mustache with impressive deliberation, "it is a bigoted person. Some of the people at my home in Kentucky came very near taking permanent offense at me, but I held out and finally convinced them."

"What was the discussion about?"

"It was the old controversy. Somebody mentioned water, and Judge Morgan stated his opinion that it was something that ought to be abolished. The major argued for its use in moderation, but the judge wouldn't have it. I was sorry to disagree with the judge, but I stated my arguments and clinched them so that he had to give in. I called his attention to the great achievements which all the world is now engaged in applauding. I recalled to his mind the glories of our naval heroes, the men who are so proud of their country, the men of whom their country is so proud. Then I pointed my finger at the judge and asked him how those naval heroes could have done these glorious deeds if there hadn't been plenty of water for them to sail their ships on."—Washington Star.

Trains, Worry, Disease and Death.

Late trains are a source of annoyance to everybody. The British Medical Journal dwells upon the very serious result produced by them upon the health of travelers. The rush to the station to catch the train which may perchance be punctual; the weary wait on drafty platforms or in stuffy waiting rooms; the dilatory journey—all these, we are told, add seriously to the labor of the day even in the best of times, but when the weather is cold and damp they are still more injurious and in that they are largely responsible for those "colds," as they are called, those conditions of depressed vitality which are the starting points of most of the acute diseases from which men suffer and from which the elderly and the feeble die.

Genuine Courtesy.

Surface manners are like cut flowers stuck in a shallow glass with just enough water to keep them fresh an hour or so; but the courtesy that has its growth in the heart is like the rose-bush in the garden that no inclement season can kill and no dark day force to forego the unfolding of a bud.

Nomenclature.

"Have you studied any language beside English?"

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne, "three—golf, baseball and yachting."—Washington Star.

The man who reaches the railroad station two minutes after time and sees the train steaming out of the other end derives no satisfaction from the proverb, "Better late than never."—Berlin (Md.) Herald.

HIS VISIT TO VESUVIUS.

And What He Thought as He Gazed Into the Fiery Pit.

An American who detests sightseeing upon principle loafed for six weeks at Sorrento without stirring in the direction of places most travelers would have thought it criminal to omit. His only dread was the cross questioning of kind friends when he got home. To confess that he had deliberately staid away from all those celebrated spots of interest would bring down no end of scorn and denunciation upon him. But sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof, and the American resolved to trust to inspiration to get him out of such possible scrapes. The first person he met after leaving Sorrento was an American woman on the train, and the first thing she wanted to know was if he had climbed Vesuvius.

"I did," said the American without a quiver.

"Oh, tell me all about it!" cried the woman. "How interesting it must have been! My husband never would let me go up, but I'd just love to hear your experience."

The American, having heard the whole story many, many times, plunged into it with much detail. He described the long drive from Naples to the foot of the mountain and the steepness of the inclined railway and the way the women of the party squealed and all the rest of it. From time to time the woman interrupted with some searching question, but so well did he know his lines that never once did she catch him napping. At last, after a realistic account of how, after leaving the train he had plunged his way on foot through the hot, powdery lava to the crater's very edge, the American paused for breath.

"And what," asked the woman, "were your sensations as you gazed down into that fiery pit?"

"Madam," said the American, "I thought of the fate that awaited all liars."—New York Sun.

DANGEROUS MAN EATERS.

The African Crocodile Is a Swift, Silent and Fatal Foe.

"The most dangerous foes we have to meet on the Kongo," says Stanley, "are the crocodile, the hippopotamus and the buffalo. On my last visit to the Kongo three of my men were killed by crocodiles, one by a hippopotamus and one by a buffalo. There are herds of hippopotamuses along the Kongo and its tributaries and thousands of crocodiles. The latter are the worst foes, because they are so silent and so swift. You see a man bathing in the river. He is standing near the shore, laughing at you perhaps, laughing in the keen enjoyment of his bath. Suddenly he falls over, and you see him no more. A crocodile has approached unseen, has struck him a blow with its tail and seized him instantly.

"Or it may be that the man is swimming. He is totally unconscious of danger. There is nothing to stir a tremor of apprehension, but there in deep water, under the shadow of that rock or hidden beneath the shelter of the trees yonder, is a huge crocodile. It has spotted the swimmer and is watching its opportunity. The swimmer approaches. He is within striking distance. Stealthily, silently, unperceived, the creature makes for its prey. The man knows nothing until he is seized by the leg and dragged under, and he knows no more. A bubble or two indicate the place where he has gone down, and that is all."

One of Harrison's Jokes.

"Benjamin Harrison once played a mean trick on me at Miami university," said William P. Fishback. "We boarded with a widow in Oxford, and there came to be a discontent among the boys about the food not being sufficiently generous in supply. A meeting was held in Harrison's room to arrange a formal protest. Lots were cast as to who should present the case at the breakfast table. The ballot box was stuffed, and I was elected. I spoke at the breakfast table and stated that the boys objected to paying so much for so scant a menu. I expected to be supported by the others.

"Benjamin Harrison spoke and, to my dismay, said: 'We don't know how. Mr. Fishback has been living at home—he may have been a pampered son of luxury—but, as for the rest of us, we have no complaint to make.'

"And that disposition of fun and humor never left Benjamin Harrison."

Warmth of Birds' Blood.

The blood of birds offers some data for thought not found in the blood of any other class of animals. The blood corpuscles are shaped differently, being oval instead of round. But this is not the difference to which I refer. Birds' blood is several degrees warmer than that of other animals. To man such a temperature of the blood as birds possess would be a fever. This high temperature causes molecular changes in the tissues and brain to take place more rapidly, which would cause the consumption of more food, and brain activity would be more intense, so that for the same amount of work a smaller brain would meet all the requirements, which at a lower temperature would require one of greater size.—Phrenological Journal.

The House military committee has endorsed two pet schemes of the administration to provide promotion for favorites—that to give the adjutant general of the army the rank, pay and allowance of major-general, which will be in the nature of a reward to Gen. Corbin for his subserviency to Alger, and his underhand attacks upon Gen. Miles, his superior officer; and that authorizing the President to select a retired brigadier general for promotion to major general, which is intended to give Gen. Shafter the difference between the pay and emoluments of a brigadier general and a major general, retired, as a reward for the Cuban campaign, the greater part of which he spent lying in a hammock. Unpublished anecdotes of Henry Ward Beecher are rare, and the two pages of the March Ladies' Home Journal devoted to them are worthily filled. "College Girls' Larks and Pranks too, are sparkling with fun, revealing the American girl's love of a partical joke. Edward Bok's editorial will command widespread attention. It shows by accurate statistics that women have been tried and found wanting in business, and are fast being barred from competing with men in commercial pursuits. Molly Donahue is presented by the author of "Mr. Dooly" as a literary light, and "The Autobiography of a Girl" and "The Theatre and Its People" are continued; "Her Boston Experiences" and "Edith and I in Paris" are concluded. Easter is anticipated by a solo and an anthem. The latest styles are shown in hats, gowns and women's attire generally. Howard Chandler Christy's drawing, "The American Girl at Church," and A. B. Frost's picture, "The Country Store as a Social Centre," are notable art features. Scarcely less interesting are the pictures of "In California Gardens," admirably reproduced. The practical, helpful features of the March Journal are numerous and possessed of exceptional interest—every one of its forty eight pages offering something worth while. Why does the boy hate the beer?

He doesn't—he loves it because it is Hamm's delicious brew. It is the medicine his kind aunty has mixed in it that he dislikes. Never mind he is to have a drink of the pure article afterwards to take the bad taste away.

Cosmopolitan and Spectator.

To secure for you the best and most interesting of the great illustrated magazines at the lowest possible price has been the aim of the editor of this journal. That we have succeeded we will leave our readers to judge. A special contract recently entered into with The Cosmopolitan, which seeks to become better known in this neighborhood, has enabled us to offer you a year's subscription to the greatest of the illustrated magazines together with a year's subscription to this journal, both together one year for only $1.50.

50 cents per year. Read by a greater number of Northwestern farmers than any other agricultural paper published. Are you among the number? If not, Why not? Every department in the hands of a specialist. Short talks department. A department where all kinds of questions are answered for the benefit of subscribers, is a leading feature of the paper. No northwestern farmers list of papers is complete without it. This paper and Spectator one year for $1.35.

OUR TERMS ARE STRICTLY CASH IN ADVANCE

Cosmopolitan, New York World and The Spectator.

You wish to keep in touch with metropolitan life, through the medium of a great daily. The Thrice-a-Week World of New York is the equivalent of a daily and is a marvellous fund of knowledge concerning the happenings of the day. Each issue contains six to eight pages of eight columns each or over eight thousand columns of reading matter a year. In former days this would have cost you probably as much as $6.00 a year, by itself. Now you can have it, if you wish, in connection with your home paper and The Cosmopolitan Magazine, Three together one year for only $2.50.

$16.75 Warranted High Grade

We Dare to Describe All Our Sewing Machines, a thing that dealers in cheap rattle-traps dare not do. We sell you a high-grade machine at less than half factory list, calculating that each machine put into a home will sell many others for us without great expense. This machine—Corella No. 4—is constructed of the best material in use, every bearing being of steel or case-hardened. The woodwork is of best quality, either Light Antique or Golden Oak finish. The motion is easy and light. It does not vibrate. It is a lock-stitch shuttle. The operation of the feed mechanism is positive, giving an accurate 4-motion movement to the feed without the use of springs. It has a self-lubricating needle-bar, which is always kept clean, well oiled, and the oil cannot drop on the work. The needle is absolutely self-setting. There is but one hole to thread through—the needle's eye. It is thoroughly inspected and tested before leaving the factory, and is strongly crated, each being accompanied by the factory warranty for 10 years. Accessories and Attachments complete free. TERMS: $4.00 cash with order; balance C. O. D. At our remarkably close price this machine (usually sold at $25 to $35) will sell itself at sight. Your friends need but to see it to buy it. Customers may retain $1.00 from every cash order they send us (remitting $15.75 net).

SPECIALISTS FAILED.

Mrs. C. A. Merrill, of Chetopa, Kans., suffered from a peculiar nervous trouble which baffled the skill of leading specialists. She says: "I cannot say enough in praise of Dr. Miles' Nervine. I suffered agonizing pain in left side of my head and I thought it would drive me insane. Specialists in Cincinnati and Kansas City treated me without benefit. Then I began taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and obtained prompt relief, and finally a permanent cure."

Commissioners' Proceedings.

Red Lake Falls, Minn.

Feb. 19th, 1900.

Special meeting board of county commissioners of Red Lake county, Minn.

Pursuant to call dated Jan. 6th, 1900, board met in extra session this day.

Meeting called to order by the chairman

All members present.

Hearing was then had on school petition of Sophia Gamoll.

Motion made by Johnson seconded by Hebert to lay the same on the table.

Motion carried unanimously.

Hearing was then had on school petition of Jacob Bonfain and others asking for the formation of a new school district in the town of Louisville.

On motion made by Hebert and seconded by Hansen and carried unanimously the same was granted and the following order was made:

Order forming new school district.

Whereas, A petition signed and duly acknowledged by a majority of the freeholders who are entitled to vote at school meetings in their respective districts, residing within the territory of the proposed new school district, with the approval and recommendation of the county superintendent endorsed thereon, asking for the formation of a new school district, which shall embrace the territory hereinafter described, was presented to the board of county commissioners of this county, at a session of said board held on the fifth day of January A. D. 1900, for the action of said board thereon;

And whereas, It was then ordered by said board that a hearing should be had on said petition, at a session of said board on the nineteenth day of February, A. D. 1900, at the office of the county auditor in Red Lake Falls.

And whereas, Due notice of the time and place of such hearing has been given by posting a notice setting forth the substance of said order in one public place in each of the school districts to be effected by said petition, and by handing to and leaving with the clerk of each of said school districts so effected thereby a notice of such order, at least ten days before the time appointed for such hearing, and by the publication of said notice one time in the legal newspaper printed and published in said Red Lake County, to-wit:

The St. Hilaire Spectator on Feb. 7th, 1900, which said newspaper last mentioned is printed and published in said county, and was duly designated by said county commissioners for the publishing of the same, and due proofs of the posting and service and publication of said notice of hearing having been made and filed by the affidavit of Regis Huot, who posted said notice, and by the certificate of the county auditor of said county, who caused the said notice to be served upon each of the clerks of said districts affected thereby, and by the affidavit of the publishers of said newspaper in which the same was so published, respectively;

And whereas, At the session of said board of county commissioners on said nineteenth day of February A. D. 1900, said petition was publicly read and considered, and arguments of all persons interested therein for and against the organization of said proposed new district duly heard and considered,

It is hereby ordered and determined, that said petition be granted, and the following described territory to-wit

Sections 19, 20, 21, 28. 29. 30, 31 and 32 and all of section 33 except the e½ of s e¼. All in twp 152 n of range 45 w, and the north ½ of sec 4, twp 151 r 45.

Be and the same is hereby organized and constituted a school district and shall be hereafter designated and known as Common School District No. 17 of the county of Red Lake and State of Minnesota.

By order of the board of county commissioners of Red Lake county, Minnesota.

Wm. C. L. Demann,
Chairman of said Board.

Attest:
Adam Zeh,
County Auditor
of said Red Lake County,
Minnesota.

Dated this 19th day of February, 1900.

Motion made by Hebert seconded by Johnson that road petition of Alphonse Lacombe and others, asking that a road be established as follows: Beginning at the corner, where sections 5 and 6, town of Garnes, join sections 31 and 32, town 152 range 41, thence running north one mile, between sections 31 and 32, town 152 range 41; thence north 7 rods, more or less, between sections 29 and 30 to the Red Lake reservation line, thence running northwest on said reservation line to the north line of section 30 in said town, thence west to the town line between said town and the town of Wyandotte.

Motion carried unanimously.

Motion made by Hebert seconded by Hanson that Alphonse Lacombe be and is hereby appointed roadoverseer in said road district No. 1.

Motion carried unanimously.

On motion duly carried the applications for correction of assessment and abatement of taxes were recommended as follows:

Vassau Bros.
Adolph Plante.
C G Rapp.
Matt Skala.

On motion duly carried a recess was taken to 8 o'clock p. m.

8 o'clock p. m.

Board reconvened.

Meeting called to order by the chairman.

All members present.

Commissioner Hansen offered the following resolution:

Resolved that each commissioner in his own district is hereby appointed to investigate all the justice dockets in his commissioner district and report to this board as to the amount of fines collected and returned to the county treasurer,

Which resolution was seconded by Commissioner Hebert and on motion carried unanimously the same was adopted.

On motion duly carried a recess was taken to 9 o'clock a. m.

9 O'CLOCK A. M.

Board reconvened.

Meeting called to order by the chairman.

All members present.

Commissioner Hansen offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

Whereas, the board of county commissioners of Polk county, Minnesota, have petitioned the district court in and for Polk county, Minnesota, in an action now pending therein wherein said board of county commissioners are relators, and against the board of county commissioners of Red Lake county, respondents, to obtain a peremptory writ of mandamus from said court commanding this board to levy a tax upon the taxable property of Red Lake county sufficient to provide for the payment of a certain portion of the bonded indebtedness of Polk county, Minnesota, which existed at the date of the formation of Red Lake county:

And whereas, we deem it for the interests of Red Lake county that we employ the services of an attorney-at-law other than the county attorney to appear for the county and protect its interests in said action and proceeding, and advise this board in relation thereto; therefore

Resolved, that Chas. E. Boughton be and he is hereby employed by this board of county commissioners to appear for this board and for Red Lake county in said action and protect this county's interest therein in said district court and such other courts as such action may be hereafter removed to, at such rate of compensation as may hereafter be determined, which shall be paid out of the county funds.

PETITION FOR A PUBLIC DITCH.

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake county, Minn.

The petition of the undersigned respectfully shows:

That your petitioners are the owners of certain lands in Red Lake county over and through which the hereinafter described ditch, drain or watercourse, as well as the hereinafter described side, lateral, spur or branch ditch or ditches will pass, and which lands will be liable to be affected by or assessed for the expense of the construction of the same: and that the construction of the said hereinafter described side, lateral, spur or branch ditch or ditches is necessary to secure the object of the improvement contemplated by the construction of said main or principal ditch;

That the following is a general description of the proposed starting point, route and terminus of said proposed main or principal ditch, viz.:

Commencing at or near the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of southwest quarter of section twenty-four (24) in township one hundred fifty-four (154), range forty-four (44), and running thence east along the north side of the section line through section twenty-four (24) and section nineteen (19) to the southeast corner of section nineteen (19), in township one hundred fifty-four (154), range forty-three (43); thence along on the west side of the section line to the southeast corner of section thirty (30); thence east along on the north side of the section line to the southeast corner of section twenty-nine (29); thence south along the west side of the section line to the southeast corner of section thirty-two (32); thence east along on the north side of the section line to Red Lake river.

Your petitioners further state that there are large tracts of lands lying adjacent to and in the vicinity of the line of the said proposed main or principal ditch which will be, directly and greatly benefited by the construction thereof, said lands being low and wet, and at certain seasons of every year they are covered with water, thereby rendering said lands unproductive and useless.

That said water, during portions of every year, becomes stagnant and foul, rendering the atmosphere in the vicinity thereof impure and unwholesome, thereby endangering, imperiling and affecting the health of the occupants of said lands and the public.

That for the reasons aforesaid the construction of such ditch or ditches is necessary, and also for the reason that by the construction thereof there will be removed from off said lands said waters, thereby promoting the health of the public at large, that the same will be of great benefit to the public highways in the vicinity thereof, by preventing in many places the overflowing of such highways;

That large tracts of lands that are unproductive and useless will thereby be very greatly increased in value, all to the great benefit, utility and convenience of the public as well as your petitioners.

Therefore your petitioners respectfully ask that such proposed ditch or ditches be constructed as provided by law, and that the same may be of such width and depth as to insure the effectual and permanent drainage of said lands.

Dated this 21st day of October, A. D. 1899.

On motion of Commissioner Hansen seconded by Commissioner Johnson and carried unanimously, the following order was made:

ORDER APPOINTING VIEWERS.

In the matter of the petition of Geo. M. Knox and others for a drainage ditch in the county of Red Lake, State of Minnesota.

State of Minnesota, }
County of Red Lake. } ss

Whereas, A petition bearing date the 21st day of October, 1899, signed by Geo. M. Knox, L. O. and T. E. Deveraux, Dennis Connelly, Emma C. Purdy, Chas. A. Robbecke, Ole O. Nyhus, C. L. Dobner, H. G. Dobner, G. K. Haavi, E. M. Evenson and Anton Erickson, praying for the establishment of a certain drainage ditch in said county, the route of which is more fully described in said petition, and a proper bond accompanying the same, have been filed with the county auditor of said county, as by law required;

And Whereas, It appears, by satisfactory proof to the board of county commissioners of Red Lake county, that at least thirty (30) days' notice of the pendency of said petition, and the time and place at which the same would be heard, has been given as required by law;

And Whereas, Said board has determined that the construction of such ditch as proposed in said petition would be of public benefit and utility, conducive to the public health, convenience and welfare:

Now, Therefore, We, the board of county commissioners of said county, at a special session held this day, do hereby accept said petition, do hereby appoint Ole J. Johnson, J. B. Hebert and Gust. Naplin, three resident freeholders of said county, and not interested in the construction of said proposed work, and not of kin to any parties interested therein, as viewers, and do specify the 7th day of March, 1900, at one o'clock p. m., at the terminus of said ditch, as the time and place for said viewers to meet, preparatory to commencing their duties as such viewers, as prescribed by law, and after completing their duties as such viewers, to make and file their report with the county auditor of said county, on or before the 1st day of April, 1900.

Dated February 20th, 1900.

By the board.

BOND RESOLUTION.

State of Minnesota, }
County of Red Lake. } ss

Whereas, At a session of the board of county commissioners of the county of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, held on the 5th day of September, 1899, a petition signed by Chas. Hellborg and others, land owners, whose lands were liable to be affected by, or assessed for the expense of the construction of, the work proposed therein, praying for the establishment and construction of a public ditch along a route described therein, accompanied by a bond duly approved as provided by law, was filed with the county auditor of said county; and it appearing by proper evidence to the satisfaction of said board of county commissioners that at least thirty (30) days notice has been given of the pendency of said petition and of the time at which the same would be heard, as by law provided, whereupon the said board did at its session on the 5th day of September, A. D. 1899, proceed to hear and determine said petition; and said board having determined that the construction of such ditch would be of public benefit and utility, and conducive to the public health, convenience and welfare, we did accept said petition, and thereupon did appoint as viewers of said proposed work three (3) resident freeholders of said Red Lake county, who are not interested in the construction of said proposed work and are not of kin to any of the parties interested therein, and directed them to meet preparatory to commencing their duties as such viewers at the terminus of said ditch in said county at 1 o'clock p. m. on the 9th day of October, 1899, and certified copies of said petition and order of said board appointing them as said viewers was issued to and served upon said viewers as by law provided, as will more fully appear from the certificate of Charles Sampson as sheriff of said county, now on file in the office of the county auditor of said county, they proceeded at the time set in said order, with a surveyor who is a civil engineer, and made an accurate survey of the line of said ditch from its source to its outlet, and did cause stakes to be placed along said line at each 100 feet, as numbered, progressing down stream from its source, and made and filed a report thereof, and reported that said ditch would be of public utility; and in this said report made the necessary computations and assessments, description of location, the land through which the same would pass, the names of the owners, and the damages or allowances thereto, the expense attending such work and the estimates as required by law, duly sworn as required by law. And the auditor of said Red Lake county did, after the filing of said report, cause a notice to be given, to be published, posted and mailed, as by law provided, of the pendency of said petition and of the time and place set for the hearing thereof.

And Whereas, Said board of county commissioners of the county of Red Lake, Minnesota, did meet in session at the time set for the hearing of said petition, to-wit, the 5th day of January, 1900, and did then proceed to hear the same, and having found that the report of said viewers was made according to the provisions of law and that the proposed ditch will be of public utility and conducive to public health, and of public benefit and convenience, and from the evidence before said board it was determined that the estimated benefits of said work are greater than its total cost, including damages awarded, and said board did then locate and establish the said ditch according to the report of said viewers, which report, together with the plats and exhibits accompanying the same, was then made a part of the resolution establishing said ditch.

And said board of county commissioners having from said viewers report and the evidence before them determined upon the benefits to be assessed and the damages to be awarded to the several tracts of land in said report described, and having assessed said benefits and awarded said damages to the said lands, as appears from the record of the proceedings of said board had on said 5th day of January, 1900, and having accepted as true and correct the itemized statement and report of said viewers, which itemized statement was on the 14th day of November, 1899, filed in the office of the county auditor of said county, which said report and itemized statement shows that the total sum of all expenses incurred or to be incurred in locating, constructing and establishing said ditch is the sum of $8,066.31, which sum is hereby declared to be necessary for the construction of said ditch;

Now, Therefore, It is hereby resolved by the board of county commissioners in and for the county of Red Lake, Minn., that bonds of said county in the aggregate sum of Nine Thousand Dollars be negotiated for the purpose of raising necessary funds for defraying the expense of the construction of said ditch; said bonds to be issued and dated the first day of May, 1900, to bear interest at the rate of five (5) per cent per annum, payable annually, to be 18 in number, and to be in denominations of $500 each, maturing the first day of May, 1910, principal and interest payable at the office of the county treasurer of Red Lake county, Minnesota; each of said bonds to contain a recital to the effect that they are issued in accordance with the provisions and pursuant to the authority of Chapter 97 of the Laws of Minnesota for the year 1887 and acts amendatory thereto;

And It Is Further Resolved, That the county auditor be and is hereby instructed to advertise in the St. Hilaire Spectator and St. Paul Globe for sealed bids upon said bonds, each bid to be accompanied by a certified check in the sum of two hundred ($200.00) dollars; all of said bids to be opened at a special meeting of said board of county commissioners, to be held for the purpose at the office of the county auditor of said county at two o'clock in the afternoon of the 10th day of March, 1900, such advertisement reserving to the commissioners the right to reject any and all bids and to, if deemed proper, continue said sale from day to day.

Commissioner Hansen moved the adoption of the foregoing resolution and Commissioner Johnson seconded the motion to adopt the same.

The resolution was then declared carried upon the following vote:

Yeas — Hansen, Johnson, Hebert and Demann.

Nays, none.

Strange Comrades for Men.

Dr. R. Hauthal, an Argentine savant, has put forward a startling theory concerning the remains of gigantic sloths, related to the great megatherium and the mylodon, recently found in Patagonia. In his opinion, these animals, whose race is now extinct, were kept in a domesticated state by the prehistoric inhabitants of Patagonia. A cave at Ultima Esperanza, where many indications of the former presence of the huge sloths have been found, is regarded by Dr. Hauthal as having been used by the ancient Patagonians as a stable for the beasts.

To Stamp Out Consumption in Germany.

An organized attempt is being made to stamp out consumption in Germany by scientific methods of treatment. Already twenty sanatoria for patients have been opened, and others are to be provided. A congress is to be held in Berlin for the purpose of making the war against consumption a national movement throughout the German empire.

Fargo (N. D., [illegible]) to the Minneapolis Times: A new phase of the prohibitory law was tested at Ellendale recently in the case of the State vs. Snow. The defendant was a salesman and drove over the southern part of the state. On one of his trips he gave a woman a drink of whisky out of a bottle he was carrying. There was no evidence to show that he gave the whisky with any intention, or hope, of its being an agent to assist him in his sales, but he was arrested and taken into court on the charge of treating, which is against the law. The jury was out for a long time and finally disagreed. It is the first case in the state against a man on the charge of treating. Many people are unaware of that provision in the law, and it has always been regarded as a dead letter.

EASY LIFE IN NICARAGUA.

When the Family Is Out of Money Somebody Goes Out and Gets a Little Gold.

From the New Orleans Times-Democrat: "When I was in the Olancho district, in Nicaragua, last month," said a visitor who is largely interesting in mining in Central America, "I had an opportunity of seeing how the lazy natives tap nature's till when they need some small change. Near our camp by the river was a hut occupied by a typical Honduranian family, consisting of husband and wife, grandfather and grandmother, and a dozen or so assorted children. The only one of the crowd who did anything except rest and smoke was the wife. At intervals of perhaps a week she would sally out with the family tin-pan, erstwhile used for cooking, and proceed to an old placer digging on the river bank. There she would squat, throw a few gourds full of dirt into the pan, fill it up with water and begin the usual circular motion of gold-washing. She was very skillful and would keep a little sheet of dirty water spraying over the edge like a miniature cataract. When the water was exhausted a few spoonsful of sand would be left in the bottom of the pan, and, spreading it out thin, with a bit of stick, she would go over it, grain by grain, looking for 'color.' Whenever she saw a speck of gold she moistened the stick upon her tongue and picked up the particle by adhesion. Each bit of the precious metal was stored away in a quill plugged with clay at the ends, and I have know her to take out as much as a quarter of an ounce in the course of a day. Usually her limit was about $2, and when she got that she stopped. Then the head of the house would arise languidly and start for the nearest store twelve miles away. Sometimes he would trade the whole amount for whiskey, but as a rule he brought back tobacco, salt, meal and calico. There are hundreds of native families who live in exactly the same manner in Olancho. Sometimes the woman will be lucky enough to strike a rich pocket, that will yield a dollar or more a pan, but they never dream of washing it out at once and getting a stake. It simply means that they can secure their usual amount with less work."

ANOTHER AIRSHIP.

Inventor Declares It Will Remain in Air a Week at a Time.

The Swiss newspapers announce the forthcoming "launch" of a new airship over—not on—the Lake of Constance, says the London News. Its inventor is Count von Zeppelin, a retired German officer, who has for many years studied the question of steering balloons. He now claims to have solved the problem of the light motor. An aeroplane built by him is reported to have developed sufficient power to tow a boat on the River Inn at a speed of nine miles an hour. To minimize the risks of an unforeseen fall the count has selected the Lake of Constance as the scene of his decisive experiment. Its area of over 300 square miles will, he believes, be sufficient to enable him to execute all necessary evolutions. The vessel is "moored" at Friedrichshafen and is supported by sixty pontoons. There is a gas works in the vicinity. The inventor keeps the mechanism of his airship secret and has taken stringent precautions to warn off the curious. All that is known is that the vessel's proportions are immense—over 550 feet long and nearly fifty feet in diameter. It is cylindrical, with conical extremities, and is divided internally by strong partitions. The "hull" is of silk, stretched over a skeleton of aluminum. The power is supplied by two motors, placed beneath the cylinder, one at each end. The propelling principle is the ordinary screw, but there are three special devices for steering. Count von Zeppelin declares that his machine will be able to rise to a height of over 3,000 feet, lift a weight of nearly two tons, travel at a speed of ten yards a second, and remain in the air for a week at a time.

Meteors Prefer Morning.

An interesting and significant fact is that the average hourly number of meteors is only half as great in the evening as in the morning, and in the evening their velocity is lower, says Prof. C. A. Young in the New Lippincott for November. The reason is that at sunset we have before us the point in the heavens from which we are movin in our orbital journey around the sun, while in the morning we face the point toward which we are advancing; in the evening we are in the rear of the earth, at sunrise in front. This increase in the numbers and speed of the morning meteors is just what ought to happen if they are bodies moving indiscriminately in all directions under the sun's attraction, and with the velocity (about twenty-six miles a second) which a body would acquire in falling toward the sun from a distance very great as compared with the size of our planetary orbits.

Strange Story of a Watch.

A strange experience recently befell George Dietz, formerly a resident of Chester, Pa., but at the present time in the jewelry business in Honolulu. Mr. Dietz has recovered a watch which he lost over thirty years ago at Gettysburg. He was fighting for the north on that bloody battlefield when he dropped it. The watch was recently brought into the jeweler's shop by Harry Ellis of the Kansas volunteers. The soldier, who was bound to Manila, wanted to sell it. On being asked where he got it he said his father, who had found it on the battlefield of Gettysburg, had given it to him. The jeweler opened it and saw his name scratched on it. He lost no time in making a trade with the soldier.

Banquet and Ball.

Last Wednesday the people of St. Hilaire enjoyed the privelege of entertaining their many friends of Thief River Falls and neighboring townships at the Hotel Markham. Landlord McAndress had orders to prepare a great feast for a multitude, and right well he obeyed orders. The dining room was tastefully decorated, the veranda shone resplendent with colored lights, and the entire establishment wore an air of comfort and hospitality. The guests commenced arriving early and they kept coming until standing room only was almost at a premium. Among other attractions present was the Thief River Falls orchestra, which discoursed sweet music for several hours, in fact the music especially the dance numbers was so irresistable that every one felt like tripping the light fantastic toe. Mr. Richardson of Thief River Falls delivered a short but happy address giving a short account of how we laid out the bond question and he was followed by Mr. Hannay who dwelt upon the importance of counties and towns as well as private people keeping out of debt. Considerable fun was indulged in by some of the jolly boys by being tried before a jury of their peers. Certain gentlemen who it appears had been guilty of divers and sundry offences—which seemed to have been omitted from the state laws. A good many convictions took place and the imaginary offenders were let off very easily—the court and jury being inclined to lean to the side of mercy. The brothers had a fine opportunity to cultivate closer friendly relations and get better acquainted and the meeting in this respect was everything that could be wished. The spread, both solid and liquid was all right. No one went away either hungry, thirsty or unhappy. Come again good people. You will always find that the latch string hangs outside at St. Hilaire.

Erick Olson of Sanders was in town yesterday and invested in another quarter section of land. Consideration $760.00 cash.

Landlord McAndress of the Hotel Markham promises the dancers a good time on March 17th. Prof. Juliott, the harpist will furnish the music.

Dougless Martin of Newton, Iowa, who was here last summer and bought land in Sec. 1, in River Falls arrived with a carload of stock and machinery.

Herny Norland came up from Crookston Saturday and Monday started in with a crew to drive piling in the river. They will be kept busy for the next six weeks.

A landlord not over a hundred miles from here was short of dining room girls and for several days had been asking traveling men if they knew of, any waiters that could be induced to come at good wages. He was relieved as one of his guests stated he knew where he could get two and would speak to them as he would visit that town in course of a week. Immagine the landlord's surprise a week later when he received a telegram stating the girls could not come as their trunks were froze to the floor.

My mother suffered with chronic diarrhoea for several months. She was attended by two physicians who at last pronounced her case hopeless. She procured one 25 cent bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and five doses gave her permanent relief. I take pleasure in recommending it as the best on the market.—Mrs. F. Black River, March 1900.

Editor Spectator:—

Having read the last issue of the Spectator a fellow can't feel otherwise than to chuckle a bit, anyway as "fools" this side the court house.

The election is something of the past and its funeral we have attended, may we learn this much that such beginning such end, "Born in deceit, died in disgrace" is indeed fitting.

We hope that the Red Lake Falls people have learned one thing and that is you can fool all the people for some time, some of the people all the time but not all the people all the time.

I think the people at this last election have fully demonstrated that they are able to think for themselves and that no work hatched nights can be worked onto them, why, we all could see that there was no Samaritan spirit among them but that they wanted to get the first grip on the whole county to make the farmers as well as everybody else help to redeem the 4,720 city lots of Red Lake Falls and put that town on its peggs from where it undoubtedly had fallen off.

We had some of the Red Lake Falls people helping us to vote out here, that is, telling us how to vote with a few whiskey bottles and cigars seemed to be their most fitting instrument to operate our town with but it seems that their work was not sufficient to stop the 39 cold water waves from Black River.

This last election has shown us one thing and that is the people in this northern end of the county may have something to say at another election so that the leaders of Red Lake Falls may rest assured that we may not always be lead into their track. If this end of the county should again be ignored at a convention, then look out for the Scan. Anti Bond League. H.

Notice of Sale of Ditch Bonds.

Notice is hereby given, that at the office of the county auditor, in and for the county of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, on the 19th day of March 1900, beginning at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of said day, the county commissioners of said county will sell Ditch Bonds of said county in the aggregate sum of $9,000.00; said bonds are issued for the purpose of defraying the expense of constructing the Sanders-Black River Ditch in said county of Red Lake. Said bonds to be issued and dated the 1st day of May A. D. 1900, to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, to be eighteen in number and to be in denominations of $500.00 each, maturing on the 1st day of May 1910, principal and interest payable at the office of the county treasurer of Red Lake county Minn; each of said bonds to contain a recital to the effect that they are issued in accordance with the provisions and pursuant to the authority of chapter 97 of the laws of Minnesota for the year 1897 and acts amendatory thereto. Bids for said bonds will be received at any time prior to the hour of beginning said sale, at which time all bids will be opened. Each bid will be required to be accompanied by a certified check in the sum of $200.00 to be forfeited to Red Lake county in case of failure to comply with the terms of said bid if accepted.

The County Commissioners of said county hereby reserve the right to reject any and all bids and to continue said sale from day to day if deemed necessary in the interests of said county.

Dated at Red Lake Falls this 6th day of March A. D. 1900.

[SEAL] Adam Zeh
County Auditor of Red Lake County Minnesota.

FORFEITED TAX SALE.

Not to be Confused with the Delinquent Tax Sale Which Occurs Annually. Absolute Title will Be Given To purchase at This Sale and no Redemption Remedy Available to the Owner.

The approaching sale of forfeited lands, which will occur in every county in the state, is a matter of so great moment, we are very anxious that every one of our readers whose property may possibly be on the list, should fully understand the situation. And we therefore again take up the subject in order to make a more detailed explanation of it, than we have heretofore done. Questions have been asked us which indicate the direction in which the public is most in need of information and we will try and cover this ground.

In the first place this sale should not be confounded with the ordinary delinquent tax sale of lands on which taxes are delinquent for the previous year. This sale is of lands on which the taxes for the years 1881 to 1895 (including both these years) are still delinquent and which are not paid prior to May 7, next, and is to be held under provisions of Chapter 322 General Laws of 1899. Under the provisions of this law all lands so delinquent are declared absolutely forfeited, and will be offered at auction, to be sold to the highest bidder on the 7th day of next May.

The tracts will be offered separately, and no bid will be received of an amount less than 50 per cent of the tax against it, but will be struck off to the highest bidder above that price, and absolute title with right to immediate possession given.

There is a further provision in the law that unless the validity of the sale is attacked within nine months, the question of validity is forever closed, and cannot thereafter be reopened. The law provides that any person interested in the land may pay the amount of the original tax on the land with ten per cent interest, and be relieved from paying the penalties which have attached, instead of paying 12 per cent, and in addition thereto the penalties which have been added under former existing laws, provided such payment is made before May 7. This in some instances amounts to quite an advantage to the unfortunate delinquent. The fact that a bid of 50 per cent of the tax against the land will be received, may tempt some owners of the forfeited lands to await the sale and take the chance of bidding the land in at this reduced amount. But this is a hazard which is too great to justify a man in risking the title of his farm or his home.

Abundant provisions is made in the law for giving owners notice of the forfeiture, but still it will be very strange if there is not some instances, in which no notices is received. And every one should look out for their lands, to see they are not on the list. This sale does not in any way affect the taxes for the years 1896 and subsequent thereto, and taxes for those years must be paid with addition of penalties and interest the same as was required previous to the passage of this law.

This sale will furnish an open door to an opportunity for speculators which they are preparing to take an advantage of. It will be an immense advantage in the way of settling doubts in regard to titles, and furnish a new date from which to reckon in the future. It will also result in carrying into the various treasuries where it belongs, a vast amount of moneys which have long been witheld, and so necessitated a higher rate of taxation to meet the expense of government. And on the whole it is a beneficent and wise law.—Polk County Journal.

—It is better than ready money because it cures rheumatism, constipation sick headache, indigestion. Imperial Blood and Rheumatism cure.

Notice of Annual Election.

The Arnewood Mystery

BY MAURICE H. HERVEY.

Author of "Dead Man's Court," "Somerville's Crime," "Dartmoor," "Maravin's Money," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XXI—(Continued.)

"Oh! Information received, as a matter of course," was the reply. "A tipsy newsvendor came here, gave us a tip, and lanted a few hundreds by way of reward, right off. It seeds he followed you and that dwarf chap last night. By the way, this Dirk Vanston seems to keep a sort of private asylum. Who's the lunatic you just now bailed out?"

"The man we thought was murdered in Greek Street."

"What on earth do you mean?"

"Why, Dirk's lunatic is none other than the real Luke Arnewood. The murdered man was an imposter, killed in error. Wait until you hear the evidence at the trial. It's the most complicated case you ever heard of."

"I wish to Heaven I had heard of it!" was his half-angry retort. "I shall never hear the end of having my eye wiped by Hawkins & Co. The Chief has been at me already about it."

"Don't be absurd, and don't be so jealous," I rejoined. "You can very well spare me one case out of your dozens. If this business ends all right—and I can't see any possible breakdown now—it will be the corner-stone of a bright career for me. To you it would simply have meant a little official praise and a slice of the reward, which I'll take care you shall have as it is. So, just shake hands, and don't be disagreeable."

"You're a good chap, Weston," he said, all his ill-humor vanishing, "and if you want a best man for your wedding, don't forget Tom Traill!"

CHAPTER XXII.

Found Guilty.

It would be superfluous to recapitulate the evidence given at Bow Street, and which resulted in the committal for trial upon the capital charge of Philip Blake and James Blogg. Tom Webb was ultimately remanded, sine die for a medical report as to his mental condition; while Spratt was committed as an accessory after the fact. Moreover, the serious nature of Blogg's injuries made it necessary to allow a reasonable limit of time to elapse before he could possibly be brought into the court of justice; and, in this delay, two months passed away.

Had Blogg died during this interval without regaining consciousness, and had Spratt been possessed of sufficient common sense to keep his mouth shut, it is quite possible Philip Blake would have been acquitted, because, the direct evidence against him was, after all, by no means conclusive. But, unfortunately for him, Blogg eventually regained his reasoning faculties, just sufficiently to realize that he was dying, and made a full confession before he actually died. Hearing this, Spratt, in a panic of terror, offered himself as "Queen's evidence," and was accepted by the Crown. These two events sealed Blake's fate.

Blogg's death-bed confession was indeed alone sufficient—if believed—to have hanged him, especially as it was confirmed by Spratt and Billy in many particulars. He stated how, acting on Spratt's suggestion, he had determined to "shadow" the passenger known as Mr. Arnewood, and how he had traced the brougham and dog-cart to the house in Rodney Avenue. Suspecting the short, stout man (whom he afterwards knew as Walsh) of designs upon the newly-landed passenber's money, of which he was quite resolved to secure a good share himself, he kept a careful watch upon the house. Late in the evening, a tall gentleman in evening dress arrived, entered the house, and apparently dismissed the stout man, who went away. Feeling more convinced than ever that foul play had been or was going on, he contrived to gain admission through a scullery window and, following the sound of voices in angry altercation, found himself outside the parlor door. The unmistakable noise of a scuffle presently followed, and he boldly entered the room.

The Wairora passenger had pinned the gentleman in evening dress by the throat, and was apparently choking him. Blogg, himself a very powerful man, at once interfered by throttling Arnewood. The visitor (none other than Philip Blake) profited by this diversion to regain his feet, and, in a frenzy of rage, offered Blogg £1,000 to strangle his late adevrsary. Whether the offer of this large bribe really swayed him, or whether he merely pressed too hard and too long, through inadvertence, even at the point of death he seemed unable to declare positively. But the certain thing was that, when he did relax his grasp, Arnewood had ceased to breathe.

Murder quickly engenders friendship. Within five minutes Blake and Blogg were debating how they might best dispose of the body, as though they had known each other for years. Blake insisted upon removing it to as great a distance as possible, upon the very reasonable grounds that, if Blogg could trace the dead man to Rodney Avenue, other might do so, too. The idea of the hansom cab was Blogg's. He went to a distant cab-rank, and, favored by the thick mist, drove boldly off in a hansom while its owner was in a shelter. Into this vehicle he carried the corpse, and, having exchanged overcoats and hats with Blake, the latter took the reins and drove westward, shortly after midnight. The horse proved to be an unusually good one, and Blake avowed his intention of putting at least ten miles between them and Rodney Avenue before getting rid of the body. Putney seemed to be the spot he had decided upon. But the mist presently thickened into a fog, which grew denser every minute, and their progress became slower, until they could scarcely see their way even at walking pace.

Just past Long Acre, Blake had to confess that he could not find his way, and they very nearly decided to abandon the cab and its ghastly freight in the fog. However, they struggled on, in the hope that he fog might lift, and, after some further wandering, almost at random, Blake had to get down and lead the horse. Blogg, having no fancy for being found with a corpse, should any accident happen, got out, also, shutting the doors to keep the body in, and went ahead to try and ascertain their whereabouts. It happened that he had formerly lived in Soho for some years, and soon recognized some old landmarks, notably, Greek Street.

Then came some luck in the shape of a drunken man, who could scarcely stand, and could only just ask the way to his room in Greek Street. This was too good a chance to be missed, and Blake readily assented to his plan. He saw the drunken man to his room, and watched him collapse into a drunken heap. No necessity to stun him by a blow; drink had done its work. He simply carried the dead man into the same room and left him stretched upon a sofa. The fog had thus served them admirably; and the responsibility for Arnewood's death was shifted to other shoulders. The cab they soon abandoned to its fate.

The rest of the confession was mainly a record of interviews between Blogg and Blake's agent, Walsh, there being a difficulty about the paying of the reward. Billy's evidence fully corroborated this, and the evidence as to the final quarrel between Blake and Blogg was; of course, overwhelming.

A thorough examination of the house in Rodney avenue resulted in the discovery of a portmanteau marked L. A., containing nothing, apparently, except some clothing. A sort of pocket, however, had been made by means of a slit in the lining of the portmanteau, and in this were found two letters from Messrs. O'Bren & Grudgery and Philip Blake, respectively, addressed to Luke Arnewood, together with a well-thumbed copy of my advertisement in the "Queenslander." These documents not only threw light upon the tactics of the murdered man in personating Luke Arnewood, but Blake's letter, clearly foreshadowing his intention of meeting him upon his arrival.

The apparent absence of motive (upon which Blake's counsel took such a desperate stand) proved to be a rotten reed. The result of the post mortem, insisted upon by Dr. Redwood, revealed the presence in Captain Arnewood's system of a little-known but extremely deadly drug called cyanide of mercury, which has the property of causing paralysis of the heart; and a small quantity of this obscure poison had been found in Blake's pocketbook after his arrest. He had certainly had frequent opportunities of administering the drug to Captain Arnewood; and though direct proof of his having done so was wanting, the general belief was that he was guilty of Richard Arnewood's death as well as the fictitious Luke's.

Moreover, although it did not directly enter into the charge upon which he was tried, a very strong suspicion existed that he had murdered the fat man, known to me as the stranger and to Blogg as Casey. What is certain is that Casey, who had been his valet, had disappeared as though the earth had swallowed him.

It was somewhat of a disappointment to me to find that, although an imprint taken of Blogg's thumb and a measurement of his span tallied with the marks on the murdered man's collar, and my conjecture as to his trade had proved correct, it was all superfluous evidence, in the face of Blogg's own confession. However, it elicited a remark of interested approval from the judge who tried the case, which was some consolation.

The end was never in doubt from the first. In the face of such overwhelming evidence the judge's summing up was as brief as was the time required by the jury to decide upon a verdict.

"We find him GUILTY!"

Very impressive was the judge's address to the prisoner before he passed sentence of death upon him.

"Philip Blake, you have been convicted upon the clearest and most convincing evidence of causing the perpetration of a most brutal murder, for the sake of worldly gain. It is clear that you planned the decoying of your intended victim to a lonely house and, as no one can doubt, with the intention of removing him from your path. You did so, little dreaming that you were but sending to his long account an imposter, who had himself endeavored to to murder the man you thought you had slain. Even this crime did not place you in possession of the estates you coveted, but it left only one other life between you and them. That life also passed away very soon afterward, and, in the eyes of all men, you were the master of Arnewood hall. You have not been tried for the murder of Richard Arnewood, and, therefore, the question of your guilt of that is one you need answer before your Maker alone. But mark how, in the very hour of your apparent triumph, the vengeance of heaven overtook you! Your mercenary confederate, Blogg, sought to share in your blood-stained spoils and you slew him; but, with his dying breath, he denounced you and made escape from the penalty due to your crime impossible for you.

"Let me implore you to make your peace with the God you have so terribly offended while yet it lies in your power to do so, for certain death awaits you."

Sentence in the usual form followed; and Philip Blake, pale but self-possessed, followed his gaolers to his cell.

He was not hanged. How it was effected was never made known, despite the outcry raised in the Press, but a sufficient number of drops of prussic acid were somehow smuggled into his cell to enable him to cheat the hangman, as the phrase goes.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Madge's Postscript.

My husband insists upon my writing the concluding lines to his account of the Arnewood mystery. I cannot quite make out why, but I fancy he still thinks I treated him rather badly when my poor brother Tom was in that awful scrape, and wants me to admit that he was not to blame after all. And, really, as things turned out, I'm afraid I was too hasty in saddling him with the responsibility for Tom's disappearance.

But how could I, a mere country girl down in Dorset, imagine that Tom would alter so greatly for the worse in so short a time? It just shows what a dreadful place London really is for a young man, without a home and a wife to look after him. Well, of course, we were all overjoyed at home when Ralph sent us (or rather me) the glad news that Tom was alive and well, though I must confess my joy all vanished when, after hurrying up to London, I found that he was in prison and almost insane. He knew me at once, though, poor, dear fellow, when they took me to his cell, and Ralph said it was a sure sign his intellect was returning.

Ralph told me all about the great case, which half-filled the newspapers and that everyone was talking about, and I couldn't help feeling very proud of the part he played in it. Indeed, after listening to his praises as sung by Mr. Hawkins and an inspector named Traill (such a nice man I thought him!) I began to wonder whether he would condescend to take any further notice of an ordinary little girl like me. But, to do him justice, Ralph was not the least bit conceited about his work, and he told me he only valued the success because it brought him nearer to me. After that, what could I say?

Then he pressed me and worried me until I had consented to marry him as soon as ever Tom should be set at liberty. That was on February 13th, by order of the Home Secretary; and we were married upon St. Valentine's Day. Papa being too infirm to travel, Tom gave me away, and seemed to understand quite well what he was doing. Inspector Traill was best man, and Mr. Hawkins insisted upon providing the wedding breakfast. He gave me quite a lot of wedding presents, but his gift to Ralph was best of all. It was a deed of partnership in the firm, which has ever since been known as Hawkins, Weston & Co.

We had to curtail our honeymoon on account of the trial, which Ralph had, of course, to attend. He got me a seat in court on the last day, and I could not help crying when the judge passed sentence. Of course, he was a very wicked man, Mr. Blake, but he looked so handsome, with his pale, aristocratic face and lovely white teeth, that it really seemed a pity to hang him. And, as everyone knows, he escaped the gallows after all, by poisoning himself.

We often receive a visit from Mr. Dirk Vanston, who now owns a gymnasium near Sloane Street. The claim of his protege to the Arnewood estates is in a fair way to be established, and the doctors seem hopeful of his recovery, in course of time, from the strange loss of memory that followed his fall down the shaft in Queensland. He is, in other respects, almost if not quite as sensible as most other people; and he simply worships his friend Mr. Vanston.

Tom is living at home, absolute quiet being the condition most urgently insisted on in his case. He is a rigid teetotaler, and has a harmless fad for writing stories in which Ralph always figures as the greatest detective of the age.

Mr. O'Brien sent us two beautiful cycles, as wedding presents from himself and his partner, while Mr. O'Flynn seriously compromised himself in my eyes by forwarding Ralph a six-gallon keg of Irish whisky.

What can I add except that I am very, very happy in our villa in Abbey Road, and that I am conceited enough to believe that there is not a more contented husband in England than Ralph.

The little woman is quite right. She always is.—R. W.

The End.

Predicted Better Than He Knew.

Knox—I am astonished to hear that during my absence abroad Mrs. Wiggin has been married again; I confidently predicted that no man would ever have her.

Fox—You hit it to a dot; no designation could better fit the individual that married her.—Boston Courier.

of tuberculosis. He recommends as preceutionary measures that the fonts and pillars be carefully washed and disinfected, that the font itself be daily disinfected, and the water be treated with some antiseptic.

There are no doubt many other sources of far greater danger in spreading infectious diseases than holy water, but when it has been shown that such a danger exists, be it ever so slight, the wisest course is to take measures to avoid it. Prejudices in such matters of hygiene are no longer so strong as formerly, and the same enlightenment that has led to the introduction of the individual communion cup in many churches will no doubt lead to the removal of this source of infection as soon as it is recognized. — Philadelphia Medical Journal.

A Philosophical Convict.

Mrs. Ballington Booth and her aids once won the confidence of a prisoner who was feared by all his companions. One day in speaking of his past he told them that he was absolutely innocent of the charge, for which he was suffering imprisonment, and he thanked Mrs. Booth for some reading matter she had brought him.

"I have got witnesses to prove my innocence, even if they are in prison now," he asserted.

"Why don't you try to secure a new trial?"

"Well, you see," he replied after a little pause, "I was acquitted of a number of charges where I was guilty, and so when I was convicted of something I never did I said to myself, 'It's just about even balance,' and I took my medicine without any kicking.

Natural.

"Heard about the discovery made in Boston?" asked Scientificus of a friend yesterday.

"No, what was it?"

"Fellow down there giving a lecture on liquid air—"

"Yes."

"He passed a lot around to the people—you know it's about a million times colder'n ice, and still liquid."

"Yes."

"Well, strangest thing in the world happened—"

"What?"

"Fellow spilled a dipperful on a Boston girl—"

"Yes—what then?"

"It froze solid."—Detroit Free Press.

Owned It All.

John I. Blair in his earlier days owned a western railroad along the route of which he established a series of lunchrooms at which employes of the road were to be charged 50 cents and all passengers 75 cents. Mr. Blair once dined at one of these places, and, concluding his meal, laid down a half-dollar. "Hold on!" cried the cashier, "you don't belong to this road." "I know that," replied Mr. Blair, "the road belongs to me."

Appropriate.

Philanthropist—What is your name, my good man?

Tramp—B'iled Cider, sor.

Philanthropist—My, my, how peculiar. How did you ever get such a name? Your parents didn't give it to you, I hope.

Tramp—No, sor; the man I had my first job with give it to me. He said I was that because I wouldn't work.—Detroit Free Press.

An Untimely Conceit.

Cholly—"Your friend, the author, seems quite taken up with me. You needn't be surprised if he makes me one of the characters in his next book."

Miss Tart—"Oh, of course not. He told me he intended writing a book soon entitled 'Strange Freaks of Nature.'"

THE SERPENTINE SOMERSAULT

These, ladies and gentlemen, are the brothers Cassini, Alfredo and Ruggero, acrobats. Observe them well, for you are not likely to see them in the flesh for a couple of years at least.

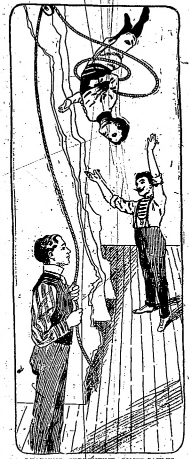
But when Alfredo and Ruggero do appear before the public they are confident that in a short time they will have proved themselves the premier acrobats of the world.

Just at present they are eating no candy, and are doing breathless "stunts" under the direction of their papa.

Their training continues every morning at rehearsal on the playhouse stage.

First the little fellows limber up by knee practice—100 times without stopping they stoop forward then rise to their full height. After this a long strip of felt an inch thick is stretched across the stage, so that falls may not break young bones. Alfredo, leaping to his father's hands, balances himself, then turns a somersault backward landing on another man's shoulders.

"Bravo!" cries the father, encouragingly. Alfredo's bright eyes sparkle with delight.



LEARNING SERPENTINE SOMER SAULTS.

Then the "mechanic" belt is fastened cinch-wise around his waist, a "mechanic" rope is attached with a swivel on each side of it.

For the most difficult feat of all is the pirouette somersault, in which the lithe little body turns swiftly in the air—a somersault with fantastic muscular variations.

A year more of constant daily practice, and Alfredo will add another somersault in midair to the pirouette.

His lungs are not in the least winded by the exercise. He is sorry that it is Ruggle's turn. He amuses himself by standing on his head and watching Ruggero from that inverted point of view. He and his brother have traveled all over the globe and can speak four languages.

Alfredo has blue eyes, Ruggero black. Their years combined would not make a dozen. If they stood together on scales they would not stir the 100-pound weight. They live on soup, meat and claret, with a view to building blood and bone and muscle. Neither of them would touch butterscotch, for that might ruin the future of the brothers Cassini, premier acrobats of the world.

THINGS SOME VALETS DO.

One Rocks His Master to Sleep, Another Breaks in His 24-Inch Corset.

Applying for a situation as valet, a young fellow of 25 was, to say the least, somewhat astounded after an interview with the companionless gentleman. In addition to the orthodox requirements, the latter requested that his servant should rock him to sleep after dinner, a cushioned hammock stretching from wall to wall of his smoking room being pointed out as his couch. While gently swinging the net, the valet would perfume the air by smoking scented cigarettes, leaving the room noiselessly with the first snore. The Japanese valet of a much traveled gentleman was burdened with many and peculiar duties. Not only did he dress and overlook his master's toilet, from no other hands would his master accept his daily cup of tea. An admirable artist, the valet tattooed the body of his master in all styles of fanciful designs—fans, umbrellas, scaly monsters in rainbow tints, executed with faithful minuteness. One advertisement was to this effect: "Wanted, a young gentleman as valet, educated, refined, etc., etc., and able to wear No. 5 shoes and 24-inch corsets." This wearing of the master's tight clothes to ease them of newness is a great trial to many valets. Few people care to entrust the writing of their love-letters to others. One valet, however, pens sentiment to the dictation of his employer, the latter observing no embarrassment.—Stray Stories.

A Little Learning.

We have been often told that "a little learning is a dangerous thing," and we may be just as well assured that a little bread is not the safest of all things; it would be far better to have plenty of both; but the sophism of those who use this argument is that they represent the choice between little and much, whereas our election must be made between little and none at all. If the choice is to be made between a small portion of information or of food and absolute igorance or starvation, common-sense gives its decision in the homely proverb, "Half a loaf is better than no bread."

Color of the Eyes.

A clear, light blue color, with a calm, steadfast glance, denotes cheerfulness, good temper and constancy, but blue eyes with a greenish tint are not so strongly indicative of these traits. A slight inclination to greenish tints in eyes of any color is said to be a sign of wisdom and courage. Pale blue or steel colored eyes, with shifting motions of eyelids and pupils, denote deceitfulness and selfishness. Dark blue or violet denote great affection and purity, but much intellectuality.

WHY MEN SIT ON TABLES.

About Ten Million Women Are Exasperated by It Daily.

About 10,000,000 women are exasperated every day by men sitting on tables, says the Criterion. So far as I am aware, women do not pay for the furniture, and it is none of their business how it is used. The habit of men sitting on tables had led to the invention of the cushioned billiard table and will no doubt ultimately result in other clever notions. At one time it was supposed that men chose to sit on tables because they could get exercise without exertion by swinging their own legs and by kicking the legs of the table. The scientific fact is that tables are more magnetic than chairs. If three men walk into a room where there is no woman, two of them will make for the table naturally. The third one will try two or three chairs and finally give up in despair and join the others. The source of this magnetism is the friction that women create by polish tables so frequently. Of course, women say that they only polish tables because men sit on them and spoil them, but this is illogical and feminine. No really clever men sit on chairs. They use their chairs for keeping their papers and things on, also their feet. Chairs are notoriously immoral. You will notice that a well-bred man, when he finds himself losing his temper, invariably gets up from his chair and makes a direct line for the nearest table. This enables him to keep his temper and to argue reasonably.

Eye Pictures.

A good deal has recently been written about "eye pictures," and lovers of novelty have been making collections of photographs each showing a single eye of some friend. But nothing is new under the sun, not even the latest of late fads. Long ago the Duke of Sussex developed a fancy for eye pictures. The camera wasn't so ubiquitous then as now, and even if it had been, the ducal eyebrows would have been elevated in scorn at the idea of anything so common as a collection of photographs. The Duke employed the most noted miniature painter of his day to paint the eyes for his collection. Each eye was painted on ivory and set in a circle of pearls. A number of the miniatures now belong to Queen Victoria, and the rest are in private collections throughout England.

ALABASTINE is the original and only durable wall coating, entirely different from all kalsomines. Ready for use in white or fourteen beautiful tints by adding cold water.

LADIES naturally prefer ALABASTINE for walls and ceilings, because it is pure, clean, durable. Put up in dry powdered form, in five-pound packages, with full directions.

ALL kalsomines are cheap, temporary preparations made from whiting, chalks, clays, etc., and stuck on walls with decaying animal glue. ALABASTINE is not a kalsomine.

BEWARE of the dealer who says he can sell you the "same thing" as ALABASTINE or "something just as good." He is either not posted or is trying to deceive you.

AND IN OFFERING something he has bought cheap and tries to sell on ALABASTINE'S demands, he may not realize the damage you will suffer by a kalsomine on your walls.

SENSIBLE dealers will not buy a lawsuit. Dealers risk one by selling and consumers by using infringement. Alabastine Co. own right to make wall coating to mix with cold water.

THE INTERIOR WALLS of every church and school should be coated only with pure, durable ALABASTINE. It safeguards health. Hundreds of tons used yearly for this work.

IN BUYING ALABASTINE, customers should avoid getting cheap kalsomines under different names. Insist on having our goods in packages and properly labeled.

NUISANCE of wall paper is obviated by ALABASTINE. It can be used on plastered walls, wood ceilings, brick or canvas. A child can brush it on. It does not rub or scale off.

ESTABLISHED in favor. Shun all imitations. Ask paint dealer or druggist for tint card. Write us for interesting booklet, free. ALABASTINE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

I Am Not a Bald Head

"I had a very severe sickness that took off all my hair. I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor and am glad to say that it brought my hair back again and I am not today obliged to be classed among the bald-heads."
—W. D. Quinn, Marseilles, Ill., Aug. 25, 1899.

Makes Hair Grow

One thing is certain,—Ayer's Hair Vigor makes the hair grow. This is because it is a hair food. If it were a hair stimulant simply, it could not do this. You must have food to live; stimulants cannot take its place. Ayer's Hair Vigor feeds the hair and it grows. It could not do differently, for it's Nature's plan. It stops falling of the hair, too, takes out all dandruff, and always restores color to gray hair.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

Write the Doctor

If you do not obtain all the benefits you desire from the use of the Vigor, write the Doctor about it. He will tell you just the right thing to do, and will send you his book on the Hair and Scalp if you request it. Address,

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Wisconsin Horticultural Convention.

Condensed from Farmers' Review Stenographic Report.

The Wisconsin State Horticultural Society held its annual meeting in Madison Feb. 5 to 8. The attendance was fair. The program was well followed and much matter of interest was discussed. The session devoted to the nursery business was taken up largely with brisk discussion on the tree peddlers. There are among peddlers honest men representing reliable nurseries, but there are, on the other hand, many unscrupulous men who do not stop at anything to gain their ends. The tree-peddling business offers many inducements to dishonesty, as a man can sell the most worthless of stuff and go for years without being found out. The only way to prevent the frauds complained of seems to be scattering information more fully among the people. The English-speaking farmers, or at least the English-reading farmers, have become so wary that they are no longer easily caught; but the foreign-bred farmers are being caught right along, and for them there seems to be no hope of escape—they are paying the price of ignorance.

One session was devoted to the discussion of the culture of small fruit. Papers were read by M. S. Kellogg, J. L. Herbst, Frank Stark, Frederick Cranefield, A. J. Edwards and S. H. Marshall. An extended discussion followed these papers, and this will appear later in the Farmers' Review.

The forestry session was one of unusual interest. The subject was opened by B. S. Hoxie, president of the State Forestry Association. He reviewed the attempt to get a bill passed by the state legislature looking to the beginning of the work for the recovery of our forest domains, and pointed out what other states are doing in this matter. He said that New York had purchased an immense area of land in the Adirondacks at a cost of only $1 per acre, and that now is the time for Wisconsin to take steps to purchase forest lands, since they can now be obtained at a small price; while twenty-five years from now the cost is likely to be much greater.

S. M. Owens of Minnesota delivered a very instructive address on the forestry of the Old World. He contrasted what is being done there with what is being done here. He showed how Germany, France, Austria-Hungary and Switzerland are conserving their forests with the result that they can cut a large amount annually without decreasing the main source of their supplies. Switzerland has made immense strides in the matter of the preservation of her forests, which are owned very largely by the public. There the public-owned forests are much better kept and handled than are the forests that are owned by private persons. To preserve American forests and to restore them it is but necessary that a sensible system of cutting off be employed.

Ernest Bruncken, secretary of the Wisconsin State Forestry Association, read an interesting paper on forestry legislation. He said that the greatest obstacle to obtaining forestry legislation is the popular misunderstanding of the term "forestry," which is assumed to include our parks and shade tree systems. Forestry relates exclusively to the management of trees in great masses. He said that our lands can become reforested by simply cutting off the trees and removing the rubbish to prevent fires; that nature will do the planting; but that where the ground has been eaten up by forest fires it will not be in a condition to bear trees for generations.

A session was devoted to orchard trees, and papers were read by E. S. Goff, Martin Penning, A. J. Phillips, G. J. Kellogg and one was sent by O. M. Lord. Three of these papers treated of plums. The Japanese plums were condemned as being utterly unfit for use in Wisconsin. It was the belief of the convention that our hope lies in the native plums. G. J. Kellogg's paper was on top-grafting. It will appear later in the Farmers' Review.

A. L. Hatch spoke on what we can do to make trees bear fruit. He believes that we must cultivate and feed our trees if we expect results, just as much as we have to feed our animals for results.

Frank Yahnke spoke on the growing of vegetables for market. He said that the man that makes vegetable growing his business must grow all kinds and put them on the market in the best shape. He must not try to grow all kinds of vegetables on the same kind of soil, but must give to each vegetable the kind of soil it requires.

One session was devoted to the memorial addresses on J. C. Plumb, F. W. Loudon, M. A. Thayer and Peter Gideon.

Wm. Toole spoke on what to plant to beautify our school grounds. This address will appear later in the Farmers' Review, as will other talks and discussions that enlivened the meeting.

The election of officers resulted in the following choice: President, Franklin Johnson; vice-president, T. E. Loope; secretary, J. L. Herbst; treasurer, R. J. Coe; member of trial orchard committee, L. G. Kellogg.

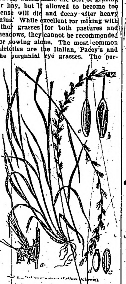
The discussion on place of holding the next annual meeting did not result in definitely fixing the place, but the expressions were strongly in favor of Oshkosh.

Yellow Clover Seed.

A German professor—Menke—once made some experiments to ascertain if there is any difference in the germinating power of the differently colored clover seeds. He picked out the yellow, green, brown, light brown, dark brown and black seeds and planted them by themselves. They were carefully watched and all were treated to identical conditions. Very few of the green seeds developed enough to form cotelydons, and they were very weak. Practically all of the yellow seeds developed and formed strong plants. The light brown also did well, but did not give so good returns as the yellow seeds. In the first place the number of seeds that germinated was less than with the yellow, and the plants were not so thrifty. The brown and dark brown and black seeds were of value only according as they approached the lighter shade, and the darker ones were practically of no value. We do not know that any like experiment has been carried out here, but it is one that is easily carried through. We do not know that the above experiment was repeated enough times to make it valuable as an indicator. If it can be used as an index at all, it teaches that the seed that contains the most yellow grains is best.

Italian Rye Grass.

This grass is known scientifically as Lolium Italicum and L. Perenne. A government report says: These are among the oldest cultivated grasses, and are probably grown more widely than any others in Europe. They have been used largely in the Northern states, where they are often satisfactory, but in the South they have not done well except in a few especially favorable locations. They succeed best on a rich, moist, sandy soil containing a fair amount of lime, and on such soils are fairly permanent, but on dry, thin soils and heavy clays they soon disappear. They will cover the ground sooner and make a better sward in a few weeks after planting than most other grasses, and are valuable where quick results are wanted and for covering the ground while other and more permanent sorts, like redtop and orchard grass, are becoming established. When sown alone on rich soils their growth is so rank that the ground is soon covered with a dense mat of long leaves, which make the best of grazing or hay, but if allowed to become too dense will die and decay after heavy rains. While excellent for mixing with other grasses for both pastures and meadows, they cannot be recommended for sowing alone. The most common varieties are the Italian, Pacey's and the perennial rye grasses. The perennial, or English rye grass, is the longer lived and so the best for permanent pastures. The Italian rye grass makes a ranker growth and covers the ground more quickly. Seed may be sown in either fall or spring, and from two to three bushels per acre are required when sown alone, or one bushel when sown with other grasses.



Utilize All Manure.

Of every 1,000 bushels of corn fed to stock 800 goes into the manure pile. That is, only about 20 per cent of the whole is utilized by the digestive system of the animal. The provident farmer will, therefore, see to it that this large per cent of his corn crop is returned to the land. Another fact that should be considered in connection with this one is that a very large part of the nutrient is contained in the liquid manure.

The practice therefore of hauling out the manure often is to be commended. In the ordinary barnyard there is no possibility of conserving all the manure if the pile is allowed to grow unmolested from fall till spring. The reason is plain. Every barnyard to be serviceable must be well-drained, and this means that there is provision for carrying off the surplus water or liquid. The manure is frequently drenched and suffers most from the spring rains. Not only is all the liquid manure carried away, but the solid manure has much of its virtue washed out of it.

Experiments have shown that the loss is often half of the total manure. Let a man consider that this means say 400 bushels of corn for every 800 bushels he should have put back on his land, and he may begin to consider the feasibility and the necessity of taking the best of care of this indirect wealth. A very few farmers have tanks and reservoirs under their barns for the conservation of both the liquid and solid manure, but by far the greater number of farmers have no such arrangements, and, what is more, never will have such. The only plan that stands any chance of being universally adopted is that of hauling out the manure often through the winter and having it dumped in small piles where the rains can wash it into the ground at will, the residue being scattered over the ground as soon as the weather permits in the spring. We feel certain that if the plan of hauling out the manure often through the winter were adopted it would mean millions of dollars annually in the pockets of American farmers.

Big Shipment of Pigeons.—Robt. Cox shipped from Chicago on Tuesday the 17th inst. a straight carload of pigeons to the number of 13,000, using L. P. T. Co. car No. 784. The birds were shipped to Nashville, Tenn., to be used by the various gun clubs in their annual shoot, which occurred there on the 19th, 20th, and 21st inst. These patent live poultry cars are also suitable for shipping rabbits or other animals in quantity, a car of live jack rabbits containing 3,000 head having been shipped in one of them from a point in California.—Ex.

CALVE MAKES A CONFESSION.

Why Once She Wore Pads and Why She Has Never Since Worn Them.

Mme. Calve tells this story of herself: "When I went to the Theater de la Monnaie in Brussels, in 1881, I made my debut as Marguerite. My second performance was to be Cherubino. At that time I was very slight. My neck and arms were thin, and so, of course, were my legs. I did not think I could possibly appear in breeches without something to make me look a little plumper. So I went to the costumer of the theater and told him I wanted some pads. He made them according to his own ideas of what they should be, and sent them to me so late that I had no time to try them on. I don't know what I must have looked like when I stepped on the stage, thin and girlish from waist up, but provided with the most enormous calves.

"After the first act the manager rushed around to my dressing room. 'Gracious!' he exclaimed, 'where in the world did you get those legs? They certainly are not your own?' I admitted that they were not, and said I thought I was too thin to dispense with pads. 'Don't you know,' he said to me, 'that a young girl with straight, slender legs is far better suited to the part of a page than when she disfigures herself with such things as those? Take off the pads and go out on your own legs.' I determined to follow his advice. When I came on the stage again I was thin, but at least symmetrical.

"The effect on the audience was startling. I seemed to see the people in the theater craning their necks to discover what had happened to change me so. The conductor of the orchestra stared at me as if his eyes would pop out of his head. After a moment or two the cause of the astonishing alteration in my looks seemed to be understood, and there was a titter of laughter throughout the audience. Since that time I have never worn pads."—Collier's Weekly.

Titled Lady Scrubbed the Officer.

There is an amusing story, which we give with all reserve, told of a titled lady who is at the seat of war with the laudable desire of nursing the sick and wounded. Her zeal, however, is exceeding her technical ability, and her principal occupation, so far, has consisted in washing the faces of the patients. One wounded officer, on whom she had bestowed this attention some ten times in the course of one afternoon, at last begged the doctor to interfere, pathetically adding that if he must die, the results of a Boer bullet would prove a less painful ending than Lady ———'s continual scrubbing.—London Leader.

Two Letters from Women Helped Through the "Change of Life" by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—When I first wrote to you I was in a very bad condition. I was passing through the change of life, and the doctors said I had bladder and liver trouble. I had suffered for nine years. Doctors failed to do me any good. Since I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, my health has improved very much. I will gladly recommend your medicine to others and am sure that it will prove as great a blessing to them as it has to me."—MRS. GEO. H. JUNE, 901 DeKalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Relief Came Promptly

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I had been under treatment with the doctors for four years, and seemed to get no better, I thought I would try your medicine. My trouble was change of life, and I must say that I never had anything help me so much as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Relief came almost immediately. I have better health now than I ever had. I feel like a new woman, perfectly strong. I give Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound all the credit, and would not do without her medicine for anything. I have recommended it to several of my friends. There is no need of women suffering so much for Mrs. Pinkham's remedies are a sure cure."—MAHALA BUTLER, Bridgewater, Ill.

Sore Hands

Red, Rough Hands, Itching, Burning Palms, and Painful Finger Ends.

One Night Treatment

Soak the hands on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of CUTICURA SOAP. Dry, and anoint freely with CUTICURA, the great skin cure and purest of emollients. Wear, during the night, old, loose kid gloves, with the finger ends cut off and air holes cut in the palms. For red, rough, chapped hands, dry, fissured, itching, feverish palms, with shapeless nails and painful finger ends, this treatment is simply wonderful, and points to a speedy cure of the most distressing cases when physicians and all else fail.

Sore Hands 8 Years Cured.

Pain So Intense Would Nearly Twist Fingers From Sockets. Hands Puffed Up Like a Toad. Water Ran Through Bandages to Floor. Had to Walk the Floor Until Would Fall Asleep. Fingers Would Peel Like an Onion. Doctors Could Not Cure.

Eight years ago I got sore hands, commencing with a burning sensation on my fingers and on top of the hand. When I rubbed them, you could see little white pimples. I felt like twisting my fingers out of their sockets. I had high fever, and cold chills ran over me, and so I kept it going until I was tired out. Nights, I had to walk the floor until I fell asleep. My hands peeled like an onion, the finger nails got loose, and the water ran out, and wherever there was a little pimple there the burning fire was—that happened at least ten times. I am running a blacksmith shop, horseshoeing, and I would not shut up the shop for anybody, but it was hard. My hands puffed up worse than a toad. When I drove horse nails, the water from my hands ran through the bandage, on to the floor. My customers refused to look at my hand. I had a friend take me to the doctor; he gave a solution of something to bathe my hands. I went to another doctor, I think, for a year. I found your advertisement in a Utica newspaper, and I got the CUTICURA remedies. As soon as I used them I began to gain, and after using a small quantity of them I was entirely cured. I would not take fifty dollars for a cake of CUTICURA SOAP if I could not get any more. I would not suffer any more as I did, for the whole country.

Millions of Women Use Cuticura Soap

Exclusively for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, in the form of baths for annoying irritations, inflammations, and chafings, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, and especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. No amount of persuasion can induce those who have once used it to use any other, especially for preserving and purifying the skin, scalp, and hair of infants and children. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odors. No other medicated soap ever compounded is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, viz., TWENTY-FIVE CENTS, the BEST skin and complexion soap, the BEST toilet and BEST baby soap in the world.

BRITONS DELIRIOUS

NEWS OF LADYSMITH'S RELIEF SETS THEM WILD.

Tornadoes of Patriotic Excitement Whirling Through the Country—Lansdowne Takes Advantage of the Movement to Announce Estimates of Over 61,000,000 Pounds and Makes the Startling Announcement That 50,000 More Men Will Be Sent to the Front—Joubert Assembling a Large Force Near Bloemfontein.

London, March 3.—Britons feel that they are living in the precinct of momentous events. Tornadoes of patriotic excitement are whirling through the country. Even the dullest soul must have been stirred by the emotions of yesterday, and London's 6,000,000 were raised to a high pitch of patriotic exhaltation. It was a wonderful sight. Old men have nothing in memory with which to compare the day. Some likened it to Lucknow, others likened it to the fall of Sebastopol. It was a time of singular abandon. The usual conventions of society ceased to control and everybody knew everybody else, all joining in smiles or bellowings as their dispositions moved them.

Lord Lansdowne chose the psycological moment to announce estimates exceeding £61,000,000, and rather startled the public by unfolding the programme of the war office to send out, in addition to the 30,000 troops now afloat, 50,000 fresh soldiers. Lord Roberts will ultimately have a force of a quarter of a million. An order has reached Woolwich for the construction of 224 new guns, from three-pounders to twelve-inch guns. Of these 140 are to be naval guns. Already 25,000 workmen are employed at the arsenal and 3,000 more will be engaged. The decision to send out more troops and to increase the home armament met with universal approval.

The Boers seem to have gotten quite away from around Ladysmith without losing a gun or their baggage. Van Reenan's Pass is only about twenty miles from Ladysmith. The enemy had artillery in action Tuesday, and they probably utilized both railways in retreating, seending the heavy pieces to Pretoria and the lighter ones into the Free State. Dr. Leyds says that Gen. Joubert is assembling 50,000 men at Weinberg, seventy miles Northeast of Bloemfontein.

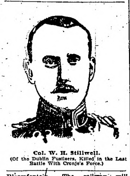
Col. Albrecht, according to a dispatch from Paardeberg, affirms that the Boers have 75,000 men left. Whether Lord Roberts is at Bloemfontein now or not, he doubtless soon will be dating his dispatches there and using the town as his advanced base.

Lord Kitchener's mission is to combine the forces under the Generals Clements and Gatacre and then advance along the line of railway to Bloemfontein. The railway will simplify immensely the perplexities of transport. The conditions at Ladysmith, some of which were explained by Charles Williams and cabled to the United States, are now better understood as the military authorities are no longer retaining their special information. It appears that since the middle of January horses have been half-starved and were too weak either to drag artillery or to carry cavalrymen, making it an impossibility to dash out to help Gen. Buller attack the Boers. These half-starved animals were carefully saved for food. The disposition to find fault, though mildly, with the passivity of Sir George White disappears as the facts become known. No one is in the mood now to criticise anybody, although two or three of the morning papers gently refer to the fact that the war office at the outset of hostilities rejected Lord Dundonald as unfit to be a soldier, whereas it was he who organized the colonials.



Col. W. H. Stillwell.
(Of the Dublin Fusiliers, Killed in the Last Battle With Cronje's Force.)

Emperor William, Emperor Francis Joseph and King Humbert have telegraphed congratulations to the queen.

Buller in Ladysmith.

London, March 3.—Gen. Buller wires from Nelthorpe that he has just returned from Ladysmith. He adds that the whole country south of that place is cleared of the Boers. The following is the dispatch:

"I have just returned from Ladysmith. Except a small guard north of Surprise Hill, the whole of the enemy lately besieging the town have retired in hot haste, and to the south of the town the country is quite clear of them. The garrison were on half a pound of meal a man per day and supplementing the meal ration by horses and mules. The men will want a little nursing before being fit for the field."

Lord Roberts Visits Kimberley.

Kimberley, March 3.—Lord Roberts and Gen. Kitchener arrived here yesterday morning and were warmly welcomed by the municipal officials and thanked for the successful relief of the town. Lord Roberts said it had given him great pleasure to assist Kimberley in her time of need and he was glad he had an opportunity to visit the town. He found that he had a day off, so he come, but would have to leave to-day. There is great excitement and rejoicing here over the relief of Ladysmith.

Canadians Rejoice.

Toronto, Ont., March 3.—The news of the relief of Ladysmith was received here with extravagant rejoicings. Church bells pealed, factory whistles shrieked and every band played. On the board of trade "God Save the Queen" was sung lustily. Crowds round the newspaper offices cheered lustily. The children in all the schools of the city sang the national anthem. The special dispatches from many parts of the dominion report the greatest enthusiasm.

Colesburg Occupied.

Rensberg, March 3.—Gen. Clements, escorted by a squadron of Inniskillings, entered Colesberg Wednesday morning and received an enthusiastic welcome. The Boers are in full retreat. A number of leading men have been arrested. The inhabitants are well and not starving. They have suffered many indignities at the hands of the Boers, but no violence.

Concentrating on the British Front.

Paardeberg, O. F. S., March 3.—It is understood that some 7,000 Boers are concentrating on the British front. The British cavalry is in touch with them to the eastward and skirmishing began Wednesday.

A Significant Inquiry.

Melbourne, Victoria, March 3. — The secretary of state for the colonies, Joseph Chamberlain, has cabled to the Australian governments asking whether they would be able to send additional troops to South Africa in the event of imperial troops being required elsewhere.

FOUR LIVES LOST.

Passenger Train Goes Through a Wash-Out.

Murdered by a Negro.

Birmingham, Ala., March 3.—At Talladega yesterday morning the mutilated body of Pinkney Dobbins, a wealthy planter, was found lying in the street in front of Talladega female college. The corpse was entirely without clothing and the man's throat had been cut from ear to ear. Elber Curry, a young negro, was arrested on suspicion, and later confessed to the murder and gave up a sum of money which he had taken from his victim. There is great excitement over the murder and Curry may be lynched.

For Shipping Obscene Matter.

Philadelphia, March 3.—In the district court yesterday George Y. Jordan, J. H. Jordan and John R. Inscho, trading as the Jordan Publishing company, pleaded guilty and were convicted of the charges of depositing and conspiring to deposit with an express company non-expressable matter. The defendants had expressed to a Chicago firm a number of obscene publications and the attention of the postal inspector was called to the fact by the express company, the arrests following.

Dropped Dead.

Birmingham, Ala., March 3.—F. Y. Lipscomb, a prominent lawyer of Bessemer, dropped dead yesterday afternoon in the court room of the circuit court. Mr. Lipscomb had finished an exciting speech and the judge had just completed his charge to the jury when the attorney fell back in his chair and expired.

Will Dine With Loubet.

Paris, March 3.—After the presentation of the Lafayette dollar on Saturday President and Mme. Loubet will give a private luncheon in honor of Frank J. Thompson, secretary of the Lafayette monument committee. Only a few people, among them Ambassador Porter, will be invited.

"Alvin Joslin" Dead.

Pittsburg, March 3. — Charles L. Davis (Alvin Joslin), a noted character actor and owner of the Alvin theater of this city, died last night aged fifty-two years. He had been sick for four weeeks with pneumonia and died after much suffering.

Attempted Suicide.

Dixon, Ky., March 3.—Postmaster J. G. Monroe attempted to commit suicide yesterday by shooting himself with a pistol. Physicians say his chances of recovery are flew. He gives no reason for his act other than that he is in trouble.

Charged With Larceny.

Boston, March 3.—Laurent M. Cook, receiver of the Monarch Nail company, was before the municipal court yesterday, charged with larceny of $5,000 from the funds of the company. Cook was held in $12,000 bonds.

He Sold "Sapho."

Philadelphia, March 3. — Frederick Kahler, a dealer in books, was sentenced by Judge Finletter, in the criminal court, to one year imprisonment for selling copies of Daudet's novel "Sapho."

Two Killed by a Train.

South Bend, Ind., March 3. — Julius De Walle and Peter Van Derviere were caught in a blizzard and were run down and killed by a Grand Trunk passenger train.

Estimate of Australian Vote.

London—The total representatives under the federation scheme, based on population, will be sixty-two, divided as follows: New South Wales 23; Victoria, 20; Queensland, 8; South Australia, 6; Tasmania, 5.

Famous Publisher Dead.

Irish Land Owner Dead.

Dublin—William Bird, a wealthy Irish land owner and agent, was found murdered in his office in Bantry. No arrests have been made.

Abolished by Loubet.

Paris—President Loubet has abolished the punishment of putting men in irons on board French men-of-war.

The Hottentots would be out of their elements in Chili.

KENTUCKY WELL EQUIPPED.

Two Completely Officered State Governments, Each Claiming to Be the Real Thing.

Frankfort, Ky., March 1.—Two state governments completely officered and each claiming to be the regular and legal officials, are now in Frankfort, and will remain here, each claiming the right to administer the affairs of the state until the question is adjusted in the courts. As anticipated, the banks refuse to recognize either of the contending factions, and, as a result, both are without money and the state funds are as securely tied up as they could be. Legislators, county, as well as state officials, and all kinds of contractors with the state will have to wait until somebody is authorized by a decision of the court to pay them, and the state will have to wait on what is due it until the courts say who is authorized to receive it. The Democratic state officers have opened offices in the Capitol hotel. The charitable and penal state institutions are among the sufferers.

TO OPPOSE ROBERTS

RE-FORMED BOER ARMY NOW FACES HIM.

Probably Receiving Accretions From the Late Besiegers of Ladysmith and Other Points—Roberts Has Ample Troops to Cope With Them—British Entry of Bloemfontein Daily Expected—Buller Reports That His Defeat of the Boers Was More Complete Than He Had Dared to Expect.

London, March 3.—Lord Roberts, at Osfontein, six or eight miles east of Paardeberg, faces the re-formed Boer army, from 5,000 to 6,000 strong. This may be merely a corps of observation, ready to retire on prepared positions. Doubtless it is receiving accretions from the late besiegers of Ladysmith and other points. Whatever the forces may be Lord Roberts has ample troops to cope with them. A steady rain is falling on the veldt and the grass is improving. This will be a good thing temporarily for the Boers. Lord Roberts has surprised observers by the excellence of his transport during the first advance, and he is likely to do so again, although military men here think he must wait for some days before going much farther. The Boers, presumably, will use this delay for all it is worth, pulling their resources together. Dr. Leyds gives out the opinion that the British is daily expected as Commandants Dewet and Delarey had been instructed to retard the advance of Lord Roberts only until the concentration under Gen. Joubert had been accomplished. No adequate explanation is yet made of the 50,000 reinforcements that are preparing for Lord Roberts. Such explanations as are advanced tentatively suggest either that the Cape Dutch have become more restive or that the imperial government has a hint of foreign suggestions as to the future status of the allied republics. The admiralty board has telegraphed to the Cape commander an expression of admiration and thanks on the part of the lords of the admiralty to the marines and blue jackets engaged in the war for the "splendid manner in which they have upheld their branches of the service and have added to its reputation for resourcefulness, courage and devotion."

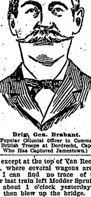
Buller Says He Did a Good Job.

London, March 3. — The war office has received the following from Gen. Buller, dated at Ladysmith, Friday, March 2, 6:30 p. m.: "I find the defeat of the Boers more complete than I had dared to anticipate. This whole district is completely clear of them, and, except at the top of Van Reenan's Pass, where several wagons are visible, I can find no trace of them. Their last train left Modder Spruit station about 1 o'clock yesterday and they then blew up the bridge. They packed their wagons six days ago, moving them to the north of Ladysmith, so that we had no chance of intercepting them, but they have left vast quantities of ammunition of all sorts, herds, grass, camps and individual necessaries. They have got away with all their guns except two."



Brig. Gen. Brabant.
(The Popular Colonial Officer in Command of the British Troops at Dordrecht, Cape Colony, Who Has Captured Jamestown.)

Thanked by Gen. White.

Ladysmith, March 3.—Surrounded by cheering soldiers, townspeople and coolies, celebrating the relief of the town, Sir George White, at the post-office, addressed the throngs. He said: "People of Ladysmith—I thank you for the Heroic and patient manner in which you assisted me during the siege. It hurt me terribly to cut down the rations, but, thank God, we kept the flag flying." Then, profoundly moved, Gen. White led the assembly in singing "God Save the Queen."

Boers and Britons Like Brothers.

London, March 3. — Lord Roberts wires to the war office from Osfontein, under date of March 2, 4:15 p. m., as follows: "I have just returned from paying Kimberley a hurried visit. I was much gratified at finding the enthusiasm among the Kimberley people regarding the care of the sick and wounded. All the houses had been converted into hospitals and the men had been made most comfortable. I was struck with the friendly manner with which the wounded Boers and the men chatted together upon the experiences of the campaign. It delighted me to see our soldiers sharing their rations and biscuits with the Boer prisoners before they commenced their march for Modder River. Some of the poor fellows were very hungry after having been half-starved in the laager."

Siege of Mafeking Raised.

New York, March 3.—A Boer report is published from Brussels that the siege of Mafeking has been raised. The news is unconfirmed, but is probably true.

Gatacre Moves Toward Stromberg.

Sterkstroom, March 3. — Gen. Gatacre made a reconnaissance in force toward Stormberg yesterday. The Boers opposed him with two guns and the British artillery pitched some shells into the Boer laager.

CAUSES ALARMING RUMORS.

Confidential Communication to Australian Premiers From Chamberlain.

London, March 3.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Sydney, N. S. W., says it has developed that the premier received a few days ago a cablegram from Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, marked confidential, with a request that its contents be communicated to the other premiers. Secret cabinet meetings have been held in all the colonies to consider the dispatch. The premier of New South Wales has asked Mr. Chamberlain's consent to publish the text of the message, and Mr. Chamberlain has replied that he is consulting the war office regarding the request. Meanwhile alarming rumors are in circulation.

NEWNES' ENTERPRISE.

Will Bring Out an English Edition of the Sheldon Newspaper.

Topeka, Kan., March 3.—Sir George Newnes, publisher of the Westminster Gazette and the Strand Magazine, has made arrangements to bring out an English edition of the Topeka Capital during the editorship of the Rev. C. M. Sheldon. A cablegram announcing this fact was received yesterday, and the arrangement means the exploitation of the most interesting newspaper experiment of the century by the progressive British publisher.

SHORT NEARLY $20,000.

B. and L. Official at Waterloo Arrested for Alleged Embezzlement.

Waterloo, Iowa, March 3. — A. I. Breckenridge, for several years secretary of the Perpetual Building and Loan association, has been arrested, charged with embezzlement. His shortage is nearly $20,000. Wine and women are the alleged cause of his downfall.

WILL NOT SELL.

No Offer for the Danish West Indies Likely to Be Accepted.

Paris, March 3.—A dispatch to the Temps from Copenhagen says it now appears certain that the Danish government will not accept any offer from America to acquire the Danish West Indies, the king and Premier Hoerring being opposed to the cession of the islands.

ARMY ESTIMATES.

Giving Some Idea of What the War Is Costing England.

London, March 3.—The army estimates, just issued, show a total expenditure of £61,499,400, an increase over last year of £40,882,200. The total number of officers and men is placed at 430,000, an increase over last year of 245,147.

G. A. R. Adjourns.

Minneapolis, March 3.—The G. A. R. encampment concluded business with the election of the following officers: Department commander, Gideon S. Ives, St. Peter; senior vice department commander, William H. Harries, Caledonia; junior vice department commander, C. E. Bullard, Verndale; medical director, R. O. Craig, Janesville; chaplain, W. F. Stockdill, Hamline; council of administration, J. F. Wyman, Northfield; J. O. Milne, Duluth; J. F. R. Foss, Minneapolis; Augustus Koerner, Litchfield; Blinn Converse, St. Paul.

Suicide of a Child.

Burlington, Iowa, March 3.—At Fort Madison, Iowa, Hazel Burr Rogers, the twelve-year-old daughter of Henry Rogers, a fireman on the Santa Fe, committed suicide by shooting. The powder set fire to her clothes and she was badly burned. No reason is assigned except a possible childish love affair.

Strathcona Horse.

Winnipeg, March 3.—Fifty men of the Strathcona horse, for South Africa, passed through here at midnight. There is great rejoicing throughout Western Canada over the relief of Ladysmith.

Stover Would Succeed Pettigrew.

Sioux City, Iowa, March 3. — Lee Stover, late lieutenant colonel of the First South Dakota, has announced himself as a Republican candidate for United States senator from that state.

Congressman Epes Dead.

Washington, March 3.—Congressman Sydney Epes of Virginia who was operated on for appendicitis yesterday, died at Garfield hospital at 12 o'clock last night.

Candians Will Garrison Halifax.

Ottawa, Ont., March 3.—The offer of Canada to garrison Halifax by the Canadian militia and allow the regulars to be sent elsewhere, has been accepted.

Eight Buildings Destroyed.

Vienna, Ill., March 3. — Fire last night destroyed a business block of eight buildings in this city, entailing a loss of $70,000.

Fresh Cases of Plague.

Sydney, N. S. W., March 3. — Two fresh cases of the bubonic plague have developed here.

Estimate of Australian Vote.

London—The total representatives under the federation scheme, based on population, will be sixty-two, divided as follows: New South Wales 23; Victoria, 20; Queensland, 8; South Australia, 6; Tasmania, 5.

Famous Publisher Dead.

London—Andrew White Tuer, the famous publisher, is dead. He was an ardent student of old prints and engravings and an acknowledged authority on these subjects.

Welsh Coal for British Navy.

London—The admiralty has just engaged 100,000 tons of Welsh coal for the navy, paying at the rate of $5.75 a ton, to be delivered from March to June.

Irish Land Owner Dead.

Dublin—William Bird, a wealthy Irish land owner and agent, was found murdered in his office in Bantry. No arrests have been made.

Abolished by Loubet.

Paris—President Loubet has abolished the punishment of putting men in irons on board French men-of-war.

The Hottentots would be out of their elements in Chili.

BOERS IN RETREAT

GEN. BRABANT'S COLONIALS TAKE STRONG POSITIONS.

Vigorous Engagements in Cape Colony, the Boers Gradually Retiring Before the British Fire—Queen Victoria Abandons Her Intended Visit to Italy—Lord Roberts Says Nothing of His Movements—Boers Will Now Confine Themselves to a Defensive Campaign, Abandoning the Offensive.

Dordrecht, Cape Colony, March 5.—Gen. Brabant's colonial division, after a night's march, is now attacking the Boers in a strong position at La Bus-chagnes Nek, on the road from Dordrecht to Jamestown.

Later—The engagement is proceeding with great vigor and the Boers are gradually retiring before the British shell fire from three positions. A heavy rifle fire is being exchanged where the British are engaging the Boers on the right flank. So far the Boers have brought no big guns into action.

Evening—Gen. Brabant's advance was most satisfactory. After marching and bivouacking over night the force reached the strong intrenched positions which they occupied and now hold, the Boers being on the opposite hill.

The British will remain over night in the captured positions, although the Boers brought two guns into action and made determined efforts to retake them. The British losses are six killed and eighteen wounded.

Queen Abandons Her Holiday.

London, March 5.—Her majesty has abandoned her intended visit to the Italian Rivera and has decided to remain at home. Her decision to give up her customary spring holiday is accounted another proof of her deep interest in and devotion to the welfare of her people. On Thursday she will come to London for a brief visit, remaining until Saturday, and she will undoubtedly receive a splendid ovation. Her heartfelt, homely dispatches to the generals in the field and her visit to Nettley hospital have greatly endeared her to her people.

Beyond the signs of a general retreat of the Boers throughout Cape Colony there is little news from the front. Lord Roberts, in his dispatches to the war office thus far published, says little, but he is undoubtedly active in some direction.

The Onsland, the organ of the Afrikander bund, says: "The Boers will now confine themselves to the defensive, abandoning the offensive policy."

Abraham Kraal, as shown in the war office maps, is a group of three kopjes, situated at the junction of Kraal spruit and Modder river. It is a natural point of concentration which the Boers could make exceedingly strong, but, after the proofs of the mobility of the army of Lord Roberts, it may be doubted whether they will make a really serious attempt to bar his advance there. A noticeable feature of all the recent operations at the theater of war has been the active employment of colonial forces, which is in marked contrast with the policy adopted at the beginning of the war. The Australian colonies have decided to provide the 2,500 men Mr. Chamberlain recently asked for.

It is now seen how near Ladysmith was to starvation and the exhaustion of ammunition. The town could hardly have withstood another Boer assault or have held out much longer. The Daily News has a dispatch from Ladysmith which says that the supplies on hand were only enough to provide full rations for four days. The town might have held out another week, but scarcely beyond that.

Boers Were Surprise.

Colesberg, Cape Colony, March 5.—A reconnaissance with two troops of Australians and two guns found the wagon bridge over the Orange river intact. Fifty Boers on the other side were taken by surprise and the British galloped to their laager some miles on the Free State side. Price's command has moved seven miles north of Colesberg. The Boer during their occupation denied themselves rather than see the British wounded suffer.

Ovation for Canadians.

Cape Town, March 5.—The Canadian artillery has just started for the front. The loyalists gave them an ovation. At Graaf Reinet, about 200 miles north of Port Elizabeth, some seventy Dutchmen, incited by Bondites, attacked with sticks and stones a body of loyalists who were celebrating the relief of Ladysmith. Many persons were injured. The loyalists demand military protection.

Boers Attempted to Escape.

Cape Town, March 5.—It is reported that the Boer prisoners, while on the way from Paardeberg, unsuccessfully attempted to escape from the train. Eleven hundred of Cronje's men have been placed temporarily on board the British steamers Mongolian and Manila in Table bay.

Encountered Boers in Force.

London, March 5.—The Morning Post has the following dispatch from Osfontein, dated March 3: "Gen. French made a reconnaissance and encountered the enemy in force. They were occupying a table-shaped kopje. Shots were exchanged, a Boer gun replying."

NO PLACE FOR BUFFALOES.

Proposition to Establish Preserve in New Mexico Is Rejected.

Washington, March 5. — The house committee on public lands has acted adversely on the proposition to establish a buffalo preserve of certain townships in New Mexico, and stock it with a herd of 100 of these animals, to be given by C. J. Jones of Kansas. A subcommittee was appointed to prepare a bill granting a similar tract for a buffalo range as a private enterprise and at a rental.

Object to Typesetting Machines.

Rome—Two hundred and fifty typesetters in the parliament printing office are on a strike because they object to the introduction of typesetting machines.

Will Not Punish Contractors.

London—For some reason contractors who have supplied inferior stores to the army are not to be prosecuted. However, all are to be cut off from further orders.

The dressmaker may feel ill when she seams well.

News of the Northwest

THAT $30,000.

After Being on Exhibition It Will Go Back Into the Montana Treasury.

Washington, March 3.—The $30,000 used by Mr. Whitesides in his exposure in the Clarke case before the Montana legislature, and which was brought to Washington when the hearing in that case was begun by the senate committee on elections and held by it ever since, was returned yesterday to State Treasurer Collins of Montana. The money was brought to this city for the purpose of identification and for any other use to which it might be put by the committee. Concluding that the fund could be no longer used it was turned over to Mr. Collins. The money will be held by the treasurer for five years, and if, in the meantime it is not claimed by any one, it will be covered into the state sinking fund. Congressman Campbell was on the stand before the committee during the entire day, and was subjected to a cross examination by Mr. Faulkner.

CONCEALED A DISEASE.

Albert Lea Man Charged With Not Reporting to Health Board.

Albert Lea, Minn., March 3.—L. P. Peterson was arrested on a warrant sworn out by the chairman of the local board of health, charging the concealment of an infectious disease, the allegement being that the disease was in Peterson's house, and he, although knowing the nature of the disease, never reported to the board of health or called a physician. He was released on bonds and will have a hearing Saturday before Justice Stacy.

WEAK EVIDENCE.

The Eden Valley Murder Suspects Are Dicharged.

Litchfield, Minn., March 3. — When the state rested in the trial of Jack Bush for the murder of Miller, the defense moved to dismiss. The motion was granted, and the county attorney then dismissed the cases against all the other defendants. Thus all the cases end without a conviction. The cost to the county is about $3,000.

GREENWAY DUPLICITY.

Another Instance Brought to Light Since the Change of Government.

Winnipeg, March 3. — Hon. J. A. Davidson, in a public utterance, says Manitoba will be surprised to learn that the province has had a system of separate schools supported by the government, in spite of the fact that Greenway thundered so much on that subject in several contests.

Lingered by the Roadside.

Crookston, Minn., March 3.—Mathias Johnson froze both his feet, both hands and also his knees quite badly while returning to his home near East Grand Forks. He was bitterly cold and stopped to rest and drink some alcohol to keep warm and remained by the roadside longer than be originally intended, with the above result. He was brought to Riverside hospital here, his condition being very critical. Amputation will probably be necessary.

Fought to a Draw.

Milwaukee, March 3.—Charles Burns of Cincinnati and Owen Zeigler of Philadelphia fought six fast rounds to a draw before the Milwaukee Athletic club last night. Burns was a favorite at the end of the fourth round, but the fifth was Zeigler's. The bout closed with both men in a hot mix-up. It was one of the best bouts ever given in the city. Jim Barnes of Chicago and Sam Bird also fought a draw.

Hemlock Goes Up.

Milwaukee, March 3. — The Northwestern Hemlock Lumber Manufacturers' association met in Milwaukee yesterday and passed a resolution advancing prices 25 cents a thousand feet on dimensions and 50 cents to $1 on boards, the change to go into effect immediately.

Articles Signed by Stuart.

Hot Springs, Ark., March 3.—Dan A. Stuart, representing the manager of Jack Root, signed articles of agreement for a fight between Root and Tommy Ryan, the battle to take place inside of three months before the club offering the greatest inducements. The battle will carry with it a side wager of $3,500 to $5,000.

Foot Sawed Off.

Stewartville, Minn., March 3.—Henry Labbs, who resides three miles south, lost a foot while working around a buzz saw.

CALLED FROM EARTH.

Bishop Gilbert Dies Suddenly at St. Paul.

St. Paul, March 4.—Rt. Rev. Mahlon N. Gilbert, bishop coadjutor of the Episcopal church of the diocese of Minnesota, died at 3:45 o'clock yesterday morning. Mrs. Gilbert is lying very ill at Faribault, and has been unable to be with her husband during his illness.

Pneumonia was the cause of the bishop's death. A week ago Monday he returned to St. Paul from a long visit in the East, having stopped over for two days to visit Mrs. Gilbert in Faribault. That day he was taken with a severe chill and was forced to go to bed. The following day Dr. Hutchinson was called and examination showed that pneumonia had set in in the lower lobe of the left lung. Twice before Bishop Gilbert had had pneumonia in his right lung, once six years ago and the second time two years ago. Consequently the right lung was very weak and the disease soon affected that as well. At midnight Dr. Hutchinson visited the bishop and found him sleeping comfortably. At 2 o'clock there was a change for the worse, and the doctor was again summoned. When he arrived at the house Bishop Gilbert was still conscious, but very weak. Shortly after 3 o'clock he passed away without recovering consciousness.

From the first of his illness Bishop Gilbert expressed the opinion that he would never recover. At the last he did not think of death but passed out into the great beyond as peacefully as a child.

The hardships which the bishop has had to go through in the past few years, the enormous amount of work which has been thrown upon his hands by reason of the inability of Bishop Whipple to attend to it, undermined his health, and death is directly the result of the great labors which he has performed.

Bishop Gilbert was born March 23, 1848, at Lourens Morris, Otsego county, N. Y. At the age of twenty-two he was principal of the second Gentile school in Utah. In 1880 he was married to Miss Fannie Carvill in Philadelphia by the Rev. C. A. Pool. The early part of 1881 saw him rector of Christ church, St. Paul. In 1886 he was elected assistant bishop of Minnesota. Just eleven years after his ordination to the priesthood he was consecrated bishop in St. James' church, Chicago.

H. J. PFEFFER ARRESTED.

He, With M. L. Fuller, Is Charged With Kidnapping.

Albert Lea, Minn., March 4. — Last week the grand jury of Freeborn county indicted Mert L. Fuller and Henry J. Pfeffer on the charge of kidnaping and assault, the alleged victim being Laura L. Fuller, wife of the first named defendant. Fuller was brought into court on a bench warrant and gave bond to appear at the next term of court, but Pfeffer was out of the city. He has since returned and late Thursday night he was taken into custody and slept in the county jail. But yesterday habeas corpus proceedings were in preparation; and it is expected he will [illegible] in his freedom. Mrs. Fuller is a daughter of the late Judge Whytrock, and is pressing a suit for divorce.

Clothesline Larceny.

Montgomery, Minn., March 4.—The case of the state vs. M. Wondra and wife, accused by Mrs. Finnegan of stealing bedclothes from the wash line, had its second trial yesterday. The jury disagreed in the first trial, but the second gave a verdict of guilty. They were fined $25 or sixty days. The case will be appealed.

Result of the Cyclone.

Hudson, Wis., March 4.—Fred Hawkins of New Richmond was taken to the state insane hospital at Mendota last night. He is the eldest son of Hon. S. N. Hawkins, whose family were nearly all killed in the cyclone last June. Fred has not been right since that calamity.

Quite a Floor in Duluth.

Duluth, March 4. — A twelve-inch water main broke on First street. Fifteen basements were flooded in buildings on the lower side of the hill. Damage to the amount of several thousand dollars was done. The break in the pipe was due to a flaw.

Not Enough Signers.

Alexandria, Minn., March 4.—A petition was circulated for the privilege of voting on license again this spring, but, as the law requires the signature of twenty freeholders and voters, and some of the signers were not freeholders, the question will not be voted upon.

Fast in the Ice.

Racine, Wis., March 4. — The Goodrich steamer City of Racine, heavily loaded with freight, is fast in the ice about 200 yards from the harbor piers, and should the wind shift to the northeast, the boat will be driven ashore.

North Dakota Democrats.

Fargo, N. D., March 4. — The state Democratic central committee is to meet in Fargo March 12 to determine the date of the state convention to select delegates to the national convention, and also the state nominating convention.

Blaze at Sebeka.

Sebeka, Minn., March 4. — B. W. Bordsen's hotel barn burned here. All of the horses were saved. It is supposed that the fire was started by a negro tramp who was sleeping in the hay loft. Loss, $800: partly insured.

Caught on a Shaft.

Graceville, Minn., March 4.—Thomas O'Phelen, a wheat buyer here, was accidentally caught on a shaft going at a high rate of speed which carried him around, almost killing him. He will recover.

Opera House Deal.

Owatonna, Minn., March 4.—A. K. Ware of Northfield has leased the Metropolitan opera house here, and will run the same in connection with the Northfield and Mankato houses.

Druggists Indicted.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, March 4.—The grand jury has returned true bills against L. O. Heiber and George S. Mornin, druggists, for the illegal selling of liquor. The general feeling is that the indictments will not be sustained when they come to trial.

CONSTERNATION

HAS FALLEN ON THE G. O. P., STATE AND NATION.

The Porto Rican Tariff Bill Opens the Eyes of the People to the Grip of the Trusts on the Hanna-McKinley Party, and Makes Clear That We Are on the Road to Imperialism — Universal Condemnation From the State Republican Press—Flippety-Flop. McKinley — How the Puerto Rico "Lightning" Affects the State Situation—The Minnesota Delegation in Sack-cloth and Ashes—Other State and National Politics of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, March 12, 1900.

The wave of condemnation of the Minnesota Republican delegation, for its course on the Porto Rican bill, has been followed by consternation among Republican leaders and press over the situation. This is the case: The majority of the delegation simply followed the party leadership, yielding to the president himself. The latter dragged the leaders into support of the bill, when he himself was on record with a message to congress declaring for free trade for the island. Condemnation of the delegation, therefore, is condemnation of the president, as the head of the party. Thus all Minnesota can be said to be in revolt against the national party. Where in the world will this lead to in the campaign, is the inquiry? And so the whole party in the state is in consternation, which is best indicated by the comment of the G. O. P. state press, which has not until now awoke to the real situation, or to where the imperialism they have been quietly acquiescing in logically leads to. From the summaries below, it will be seen that the Republican press is almost a unit with our reform press on this subject. We condense comment as follows:

Cambridge Press: Congressman Tawney has made a political fool of himself.

New Ulm Journal: The Second district will call McCleary to account for his vote.

Litchfield Review: We thought Porto Rico had become a part of the United States. Then, why discriminate?

Rush City Post: The Porto Rican tariff bill will not strengthen the Republican party.

Marshall Republican: These mammoth trusts don't need any more favors, and votes at their dictation are against the best interests of this country.

Preston Times: Congress is playing into the hands of the trusts instead of crushing them, and making campaign material for the Democrats at a furious rate.

Glenwood Herald: It is difficult to see how the Republicans could have been guilty of so clumsy a piece of politics.

Henderson Review: The Porto Rican mess and shipping subsidy will make the old Republican band wagon squeak. More statesmanship and less trust influence in Washington is wanted.

St. Charles Union: The tariff is wrong for it might with equal justice apply to the different states.

Madelia Messenger: Porto Rico should be considered as one of our own and no tariff laid on her products.

Minneapolis Register: The 15 per cent tariff is in favor of certain private interests and against the spirit of the American people.

Winnebago City Press-News: McCleary has played from the start to finish the sneak act. That he is owned by the trusts is self evident.

Aitkin Republican: It is apparent that the Republican leaders have made a mistake.

Owatonna Chronicle: There may be good reasons for the bill, but there are certainly good reasons against it.

Goodhue County News, simply quotes President McKinley's own declaration that it is our plain duty to impose no tariff.

Vermillion Journal: The 15 per cent tariff bill is a disgrace to the party which gave it birth, and if passed will make a gaping wound in this administration.

Farmington Tribune: No defense can be given the Republicans, and the Democrats have been given a strong argument to use in the coming campaign.

Albert Lea Tribune: We have not been able to find a Republican in Albert Lea who is not opposed to Tawney in this instance.

Morris Tribune: The bill is a direct repudiation of fundamental Republican principles.

Mankato Free Press: The Republican leaders have made a mistake and are entirely at sea as to the sentiment of the people.

Ortonville Herald-Star: The people are right and the Republican congressmen are wrong.

Ortonville Journal: The members voting for the bill should hear something drop with a dull, sickening thud when they come before the people for reelection.

Windom Reporter: The members seem willing to be whipped into line to help the sugar and tobacco trusts to grind the people of this country. This makes the issue between the trusts and and an imperialist policy and an expansion policy on the other hand.

Princeton Union: Tawney belittled himself when he impugned the motive of Congressman Littlefield for opposing the bill.

Alexandria Post-News: We hope the fight will be kept up against the committees' dictum.

As to the delegation, the week has but accentuated the situation individually. Commencing with Tawney, punishment is promised him doubly severe as the pliant tool of the trusts, to whip the others into line. That he will be laid out cold is everywhere conceded. Poor Schoolmaster McCleary is marked for a worse skinning than ever he gave obstreperous lad in school. He may not even be re-nominated. Stevens in the Fourth, has the quasi-support, at least the tolerance of the two, home organs, and may have to be slain at the polls. Little Pagey Morris in the Sixth, concedes in Washington that he cannot be returned, and the last word from him was that unless he changed his mind he would not even be a candidate for renomination. As to Eddy, he has wrapped himself in the sheet of self-complacency and may keep on thinking that he is it, until election.

The latest regarding Heatwole is that he expects the nomination for governor on the promise, said to have come from Hennepin county, that he could win by 60,000! The spectacle of the lovely Joel running on a platform condemning his party and excoriating the president is amusing to say the least.

Apropos of the Heatwole ambition, the question is where does the great steamboat captain come in, and what are his views on the Porto Rico bill? Is he for the bill, in defiance of the people, or will he run on an anti-McKinley platform? Or will Captain Van have been so closely confined to his steamboating by that time, that he will not have heard of the Porto Rican question? Maybe he will be visiting in Wisconsin, as he was at the time of the pro-Boer meeting and unable to respond.

The McKinley flippety-flop on Porto Rico, recalls his record for inconsistency and juggling.

Take the silver question. In congress and on the stump he constantly supported silver legislation, saying in one speech:

"You are setting up gold, the money of the rich, and you are destroying silver, the money of the poor, you are destroying one of our precious metals, one of our own products, destroying silver and enhancing the price of gold. You are determined to contract the circulating medium, limit the volume of money among the people, make money scarce and therefore dear."

In another he said: "I want the fullest use of both metals. I want the double standard."

What does he do as president?

Advocates and signs a law fixing gold as the only standard, making silver mere token money to be redeemed in gold, retiring the greenbacks that saved the nation's life and cost no interest, in fact a law which changes our whole system into a perpetual gold bond debt, increasing the special privileges of the national banks into whose hands is surrendered complete control of the circulating medium.

What did he say as president of the policy of this country toward those peoples which might fall under our care by our war against Spain? He said in his message to congress April 11th, 1898:

"I speak not of forcible annexation, for that cannot be thought of; that by our code of morals would be criminal aggression."

What did McKinley do in the Philippines!

He listened to the corporation siren whispering to him to seize those islands that they might have the trade and he the glory; permitted the soldiers of the Philippine republic fighting for independence to join with us as our allies; used Aguinaldo's leadership and means against the Spaniards, and permitted our soldiers then to make a war of extermination against those allies. This he has relentlessly followed up until the Filipino republic is well nigh exterminated, when he doubles his "criminal aggression" by exterminating as bandits, Filipinos caught fighting for liberty and independence.

Finally, what did McKinley say, as to the status of the Porto Ricans, as to taxation, under the benign protection of the flag?

He said in his message to congress only last December:

"The markets of the United States should be opened up to her products. Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Porto Rico, and give her products free access to our markets."

What did he do?

He had a free trade bill framed for the committee of ways and means. Then the American tobacco and sugar trusts took a had at the administration bat, and lo, through his war officer Root the bill was changed to a 25 per cent duty, for which McKinley labored and brow beat members for votes, and later, under the stress of public condemnation, that reduced the rate to 15 per cent, sand-bagged enough Republican members of the house to squeeze the bill through by the aid of two renegado sugar truster Democrats from the South.

The sum total stamps William McKinley as the most vacillating, insincere and hypocritical occupant of the White House that has ever been called to the head of this sovereign people.

Governor Lind on Thursday evening last fulfilled an honored invitation to address the divinity students of Ausberg seminary, Minneapolis, in response to the injunction to talk politics, made by President Sverdrup, making some very pertinent allusions to the history of Norway and Sweden. Those countries had never been invaded and conquered. The governor spoke of the Boer war, and of American sympathy with the Boers, but had to confess ourselves estopped from saying much, considering our course toward the Filipinos. If we had finished the Spanish war as we began, the governor said, it would have been one of the grandest in history. Whenever our flag stood for government without the "consent of the governed," it was nothing more than a rag. The dangers of militarism were commented on, and the fact pointed out that the United States is now spending more for armament than for bread.

Governor Lind is to deliver the anniversary address on Norwegian day, May 17, as well as on St. Patrick's day.

Much of Governor Lind's time is occupied in hearing and noting complaints against Republican officeholders. The long drawn out case of the Itasca county commissioners is closed. The commissioners resigned to escape removal. In the Hennepin county register of deeds case, the officer, Metcalf, is removed, having been found guilty. "And there are others."

ROBERTS WINS AGAIN

BOERS MAKE STUBBORN RESISTANCE AT DRIEFONTEIN.

But Were Driven From Two Strong Positions at the Point of the Bayonet — Column Advancing on Bloemfontein Unexpectedly Finds Boers in a Strong Position and Severe Fighting Ensues—British Succeed in Reaching Their Destination — Lord Roberts Warns Boers Regarding the Abuse of the White Flag.

London, March 13.—A dispatch to the war office from Lord Roberts, deated Driefontein, March 11, 7:15 a. m., says:

"The enemy opposed us throughout yesterday's march, and from their intimate knowledge of the country gave us considerable trouble. Owing, however, to the admirable conduct of the troops the enemy were unable to prevent us reaching destination. The brunt of the fighting fell on Gen. Kelly-Kenny's division, two battalions of which, the Welsh and Essex, turned the Boers out of two strong positions at the point of the bayonet."

Boers Resisted Stubbornly.

Driefontein, O. F. S., March 13. — Broadwood's cavalry brigade, advancing on Bloemfontein, unexpectedly found the Boers in a strong position in the Driefontein kopjes Saturday. Gen. Kelly-Kenny's division arriving, severe fighting ensued. The Boers resisted stubbornly, but were driven from their center position, leaving a number of dead and forty prisoners. The British force is moving forward to-day. During the fighting, in which five regiments took part, with artillery, the Boers, though forced from their center position, clung tenaciously to the other kopjes, shelling the british freely from three guns and two Vickers Maxims. The British cavalry began to turn the Boer position, but night fell before the movement was completed. The Boers retired during the night. All of Saturday was occupied in fighting. The Boers maintained a stubborn rear guard action along a running front of twelve miles on a very difficult ground. The British were advancing in three columns. Gen. Tucker, to the Southward.

Occupied Petrusberg Unopposed.

Gen. Kelly-Kenny, after following the river bank, moved in the direction of Abraham's Kraal. At Dreifontein, about eight miles south of Abraham's Kraal, the Boers were found posted in considerable strength on the ridges connecting several kopjes where they had mounted guns. The action began at 8 in the morning with an artillery duel. Gen. French's cavalry and Gen. Porter's brigade supported our guns. The Boer artillery was accurately handled and the British cavalry found a task harder than they had expected. Gen. Broadwood, with dogged perseverance, moved altogether six miles southward, trying to find a means to get round, but the Boers followed, behind rising ground, and even attempted to outflank him. Meanwhile the Sixth division of infantry, advancing on the Boer left, slowly forced the enemy to retire. Had the infantry been able to move faster the Boers would have been enveloped. The last shot was fired at 7:30 p. m. In the morning not a Boer was to be seen. The prisoners belonged to President Kruger's own commando.

Warned by Roberts.

London, March 13.—The war office has received the following advices from Lord Roberts, dated Sunday, at Driefontein:

"The following telegram has been addressed by me to their honors, the state presidents of the Orange Free State and the South African Republic: 'Another instance having occurred of gross abuse of the white flag and of the signal of holding up hands in token of surrender, it is my duty to inform you that if such abuse occurs again I shall most reluctantly be compelled to order my troops to disregard the white flag entirely. The instance occurred on a kopje east of Driefontein Farm yesterday evening, and was witnessed by several of my own staff officers as well as by myself, and resulted in the wounding of several of my officers and men. A large quantity of explosive bullets of three different kinds was found in Commandant Cronje's langer, and this has been the case after every engagement with your honor's troops. Such breaches of the recognized usages of war and of the Geneva convention are a disgrace to any civilized power. A copy of this telegram has been sent to my government with the request that it may be communicated to all neutral powers.'"

Boers in Force at Biggarsberg.

London, March 13. — The dispatch from Durban as to the engagement near Pomeroy seems to explain the Boers' accounts of skirmishing in the Helpmakaar district, and although Col. Bethune's force numbered only a few hundred, the news shows that the Boers are in considerable numbers in Biggarsberg. There is no confirmation of the rumors of the raising of the siege of Mafeking, concerning which the gravest anxiety continues to be felt. The British reported casualties up to this date are as follows: Killed, 2,418; wounded, 8,747; died of disease, 1,290; missing, 3,483; total, 15,677.

Rebels Laying Down Their Arms.

Cape Town, March 13.—News from Ladygrey, Herschel and Aliwalnorth show that the rebels are laying down their arms in large numbers, and that the Boers all along the border are in serious straits. The rebels assert that the Boers are subsisting on bread and water and so-called coffee, made of rice. Other rebels are leaving to fight in the Free State. British rule has been restored at Ladygrey, where a big fight is reported to have occurred, many rebels being killed. It is reported that thousands of rebels contemplate surrendering to Gen. Brabant.

Presidents Make Peace Proposals.

London, March 12.—The Daily Mail has received the following dispatch from Pretoria, dated Saturday, March 10, and censored by the Boer government: "President Kruger and President Steyn have wired to Lord Salisbury peace proposals on condition that the independence of the two republics be respected and the rebel colonials amnestied. Yesterday the foreign consuls were called into conference and were requested to invite the intervention of the powers they represented in order to prevent further bloodshed."

Boers Say Mafeking Will Fall.

London, March 13.—A correspondent of the Daily Mail at Lourenzo Marques, telegraphing Saturday, says: "According to Boer reports the fall of Mafeking is certain. There has been heavy firing this week, and the Boers have been shelling the town from all the outlying forts which they have captured. Col. Baden-Powell cleared all the natives out of town but the Boers drove them back. The Boers are preparing for a final assault, with the idea that the capture of Mafeking will raise the drooping spirits of the burghers."

Siege of Mafeking Raised.

London, March 13.—The Daily News has the following from Asvogel kop, dated March 11: "The march was continued to-day to this point. No Boers were seen on the way. The British are now only twenty-five miles from Bloemfontein. One of the Boer prisoners says the siege of Mafeking has been raised."

ARMED FOR THE TREATY.

Opposing Factions at Frankfort in Dead Earnest.

Frankfort, Ky., March 13.—The Democrats and the Republicans in Kentucky are, for the first time since the recent political complications assumed acute form, divided into two armed and organized factions. Surrounding the capitol and the state executive building and camped in the grounds around Gov. Taylor's home are nearly 200 state militia, well provided with ammunition, while in the corridors of the Capitol hotel in which the Democratic state executive officers are located, and in the streets adjacent to the building are sixty special officers and the men and boys of a militia company that was organized in Frankfort yesterday as the nucleus of Gov. Beckham's state guard, besides scores or more of heavily armed citizens, partisans of the Democratic claimant. Rumors reached the Democratic leaders that an attempt was to be made by the state militia to take Gov. Beckham into custody, and inside of an hour after the report was circulated, a petition had been circulated and signed by the requisite number of men necessary to form a military company. The men will guard the Capitol hotel against any possible attempt to arrest Gov. Beckham. Only two days more remain for the legislature to remain in session, but the developments of these two days are looked forward to with apprehension by leaders of both sides. The Democratic partisans say that should the militia attempt to interfere with the session of the legislature, persistent rumors of which have been in circulation, it will be next to impossible to avert bloodshed. The Republican officials, however, deny that such action has even been contemplated, and that the legislature will not be molested in any way. That the report is believed in Democratic circles, however, is shown by the fact that the advisability of holding the session in some other place than the state house has been under advisement, and even at a late hour last night the question had not been fully settled. Several Republican members of the legislature left the city yesterday, presumably for their homes.

Taken in Soldiers' Garb.

Frankfort, Ky., March 13. — There were exciting times in Kentucky Saturday in connection with the attempt to arrest two men charged with complicity in the murder of William Goebel, the Democratic claimant governor. The officers vainly sought to place in custody Secretary of State Caleb Powers and Capt. John Davis, who escaped from the state house with a company of soldiers by donning uniforms. In this guise they reached a train which conveyed them to Lexington, but on their arrival there they were taken in charge by officers, who had been notified by wire. The arrests were not effected, however, until weapons had been drawn and a scene enacted that seemed likely to end seriously. Secretary of State Powers was badly beaten over the head and was bleeding profusely when dragged from the train and taken to jail.

Quiet Restored in Lexington.

Lexington, Ky., March 13.—The Sabbath day brought a hopeful and encouraging calm to the storm which for three hours on Saturday night threatened to burst with terrible fury over Lexington. Impulsive action, under, perhaps, misguided impressions, came near precipitating bloodshed which would not have ended with the threatened riot at the depot when Secretary of State Powers and Capt. Davis were arrested by the Lexington officers. Time was ripe, under misleading reports that mountain men were preparing to rescue the prisoners from jail Saturday night, for desperate resistance on the part of local officers, who are mostly Goebel men. Had an attempt been made to take the prisoner from jail the result is unpleasant to contemplate. The adopting of such disguise by Davis and Powers in order to get out of Frankfort puts an ugly phase on the matter for the prisoners, and the opinion of some of their friends here, although they explain that they did so merely to get away from the local Goebel influence which they allege would work to their detriment in securing a fair trial. Both tacitly admit now that in this they may have made a mistake, as both strongly urge their innocence of any connection with the murder of Goebel, and insist that they have no fear whatever as to the outcome.

Pardoned by Gov. Taylor.

Louisville, Ky., March 13.—According to a statement made by Gov. W. S. Taylor last night to a representative of the Commercial, he granted a pardon to each of the persons for whom warrants have been issued charging them with being accessories to the assassination of Gov. Goebel, including Secretary of State Powers and ex-Secretary of State Finley. In his statement Gov. Taylor recites the conditions under which he claims to have been elected and charges the Democratic contestants of state offices with conspiracy to secure control of the government.

INTO ROVING BANDS.

Yaquis Divide Themselves and Continue Depredations.

Austin, Tex., March 11. — Advices from Ortiz, State of Sonora, Mex., are that the Indians have continued their depredations to an alarming extent during the past week, having ransacked a great stretch of territory and done no little damage to several hamlets along the road between Potam and Torin. The Mexican troops do not seem to be able to cope with the situation at the present writing, and it is manifest that more men will be needed to effectually suppress the uprisings. The Indians, who were all banded together about ten days ago for the purpose, presumably of making an attack upon the main forces of the Mexicans as a point near Torin, have again dispersed into roving bands of some 200 or 300 each, and in this manner they are covering a great range of territory and doing more damage in the way of marauding movements. It is evident, however, that they are in constant communication with one another, both by runners and signal fires, as almost every night signal fires are flashed from the mountains, indicating the temporary camp of some of the Indians. Owing to the unsettled and extremely wild country in this neighborhood, however, the Mexican troops to the location in the night, and for that matter they find great difficulty in leaving the road during the day owing to the acres of prickly pear and chaparel through which they have to wade and which seriously interferes with their progress. The Mexican troops are very suspicious of the Indians laying traps to massacre the entire force, and do not show much inclination to venture into the mountain fastnesses. Several efforts have been made to get small detachments through to Potam, but without success, as the Indians seem to be very plentiful in that neighborhood and are waging an unusually bold warfare upon all troops that come to the scene of action. The Mexican government is puzzled to locate the source from which the Indians are securing their guns and ammunition, as they seem to be receiving additional supplies of both almost weekly. Parties coming in from the scenes of the various engagements state evidently that no prisoners are being taken. A few miles out from Guayamas on Tuesday, a half-dozen Mexican soldiers were found swinging from trees, and near Potam on the same day five Indian braves were hanging from mesquite trees. Near Lamouch, on Sunday, fifteen bodies were discovered lying in the undergrowth, some of them being Indian men, though most of them were Indian squaws and young Indian girls.

JOE WHEELER'S STATUS.

Adjutant General Says He Is Still in the Volunteer Service.

Washington, March 11.—The statement attributed to Gen. Joe Wheeler in a recent interview in San Francisco that he tendered his resignation as an officer of the volunteer army last November has caused some surprise among the officials of the war department. It is said there that if Gen. Wheeler has tendered his resignation the document has not yet reached the adjutant general's office. According to the records of the war department Gen. Wheeler is still an officer of the volunteer army and is in receipt of the pay and allowances of a brigadier general. In case he desires to quit the military service to resume his legislative duties the matter will be considered after a personal conference with him. It is said at the war department that Gen. Wheeler was ordered home from the Philippines at his own request as reported by Gen. Otis.

RED ASH MINE VICTIMS.

Thirty Bodies Have So Far Been Recovered.

Charleston, W. Va., March 11. — So far thirty bodies have been taken from the Red Ash mine, six of which were recovered yesterday morning. From the best information obtainable the number in the mine at the time of the explosion was forty-two, and no one has the slightest hope that any of them are alive. Subscriptions were started by Gov. Atkinson for the benefit of families of the entombed which will result in a handsome sum, and already amounts to over $500. A popular subscription has been started here and is meeting with liberal response.

ICE GORGE.

Alarming Aspect of the Flood Situation in Ohio.

Fremont, Ohio, March 11.—The flood situation here is more alarming now than at any time during the week. The up-river ice came down with a rush and the water is ten inches higher now than last night. The ice gorge north of town still refuses to move out. The heavy ice floe has considerably weakened the State street bridge connecting East and West Fremont. Workmen are strengthening the structure. The flats and low part of the city remain inundated and the sewers are unable to carry off the surplus water.

RELATING TO TRUSTS.

A Congressional Subcommittee to Consider Bills.

Washington, March 11.—The house committee on judiciary adopted a resolution offered by Representative Overstreet of Indiana for the appointment of a special subcommittee on trusts. The special committee is to consist of seven members under the chairmanship of Representative Ray, head of the committee, and is to consider the numerous bills and resolutions relative to trusts which have been offered. Mr. Ray has not yet named the members of the special committee.

Desperado Killed.

Albuquerque, N. Mex., March 11.—Samuel Sandoval, a young desperado, was killed and several citizens wounded in a battle at the town of Atarque which followed an attempt to arrest Sandoval and Juan Mestas, who had been "shooting up the town." Mestas was captured.

Burton Renominated.

Cleveland, March 11.—Congressman L. E. Burton was renominated by the Republicans of the Twenty-first Ohio district.

St. Hilaire Spectator.

ST. HILAIRE, - MINNESOTA.

Whales live to a great age, and they are sometimes found to be from 200 to 400 years old. Their age is ascertained by the size and number of the layers of the whalebone, which increase every year.

Dan Rice, the old-time circus clown, is dead. No conquered nations, no mighty deeds of war or statecraft, have served to mark his name or give it luster on the pages of history. His name, in fact, will not survive beyond the memories of those who knew him, of the millions who in their younger days were pleased by his quaint drolleries. None the less, however, was Dan Rice a public benefactor, for his mission was to make men laugh.

It may strike the average observer that the United States senate is an odd place to read Washington's farewell address. We know by report that it is read there every year, and they say the senators usually listen to it. Senator Foraker read it this year, and the effort is spoken of as "a fine bit of elocution." Probably the senators, or certain of them, have fallen into the habit of regarding the reading only as a matter of elocution. At any rate it seems that the effect upon themselves would be much the same if a member were delegated to read the "Charge of the Light Brigade" or "The Boy Stood on the Burning Deck."

The need of attending closely to details, even to the smallest, was enforced by Sir James Paget, the great physician who recently died, in an incident of his career. After operating upon a patient's heart—a most delicate operation—he gave orders that he should be kept perfectly quiet, and subjected to not the slightest disturbance, since his recovery depended upon perfect rest of the body. A few hours later a nurse, disregarding the order, complied with the patient's request for a biscuit. The patient ate it, and in doing so scattered a few crumbs in the bed. One of the crumbs presently tickeled his back. He moved his body to escape it, the movement caused a ligature to slip, and the man died. "That crumb killed him," said the physician; and his judgment is not to be disputed.

Modern science has brought to light nothing more curiously interesting than the fact that worry will kill. More remarkable still, it has been able to determine, from recent discoveries, just how worry does kill. It is believed by many scientists who have followed most carefully the growth of the science of brain diseases that scores of the deaths set down to other causes are due to worry, and that alone, says the Journal of Health. The theory is a simple one—so simple that any one can readily understand it. Briefly put, it amounts to this: Worry injures beyond repair certain cells of the brain, and the brain being the nutritive center of the body, the other organs become gradually injured, and when some diseases of these organs, or a combination of them, arises, death finally ensues.

Astronomers are now busy with their preparations for observing the eclipse of the sun, which will occur on the morning of Monday, May 28, and will be total along a track varying from forty to fifty miles in width, and extending from New Orleans to Norfolk. From there the shadow will cross the ocean, will traverse the Spanish peninsula, leap over the Mediterranean to Algiers, and finally leave the earth not far from ancient Thebes. Before reaching the United States it will have come across Mexico and the gulf, its entire path being over 7,000 miles in length. It is now more than thirty years since a total eclipse of the sun last visited the Atlantic coast of America, in 1869; nor will the thing occur again until 1925. At any given point, therefore, such events are extremely rare, and for this reason, if no other, are of great interest.

Official and social preparations for the Paris exposition are causing much solicitude in government circles. Republican Paris will have to receive something like a throng of royal and imperial personages, without counting the crowned heads themselves who will visit the sections of their subjects and accept the state hospitality of President Loubet. Each minister or high functionary will utilize the extra sum allowed for entertaining the guests of France, and it is just likely that his expenditure may go beyond that margin—an unpleasant prospect for austere republican statesmen who are not endowed with private means. The gorgeous upholstery and decorations of the restoration and empire periods are being classified for distribution at the various ministerial residences, the finest being allotted to M. Delcasse, who, after the chief of the state, will be the chief host of the country.

It has usually been assumed that the atoms of which all matter consists are indivisible, but Prof. J. J. Thompson of the Royal Society of Great Britain thinks that he has found evidence of the divisibility of atoms. Experiments with cathode rays indicate, he says, that the stream of electrified particles projected from the negative plate consists of corpuscles torn from the atoms composing the electrode, and not of the whole atoms themselves. These corpuscles are very small portions of the atoms from which they come.

Our pension bureau estimates that there are 1,032,418 surviving soldiers of the civil war, excluding deserters. About 312,000 of these are unpensioned. The average age of the survivors is 60 years. It is estimated that in 1910 there will be 600,000 survivors, not including militia organizations called on for temporary service.

Mollie Darling.

(Old Favorite Series.)

Won't you tell me, Mollie, darling,
That you love none else but me?
For I love you, Mollie, darling,
You are all the world to me.
Oh! tell me darling that you love me,
Put your little hand in mine,
Take my heart, sweet Mollie, darling,
Say that you will give me thine.

Mollie, fairest, sweetest, dearest,
Look up, darling, tell me this—
Do you love me, Mollie, darling?
Let your answer be a kiss.

Stars are smiling, Mollie, darling,
Thro' the mystic veil of night;
They seem laughing, Mollie, darling
While fair Luna hides her light;
Oh! no one listens but the flowers,
While they hang their heads in shame!
They are modest, Mollie, darling
When they hear me call your name.

I must leave you, Mollie, darling,
Tho' the parting gives me pain;
When the stars shine, Mollie, darling,
I will meet you here again.
Oh! good night, Mollie, good-bye, loved one,
Happy may you ever be,
When you're dreaming, Mollie, darling,
Don't forget to dream of me.

A Freak of Nature.

Rendered insane by a fall which resulted in a fracture of the skull, Jacob Yawsham, a recruit at the United States army barracks at Columbus, Ohio, has been restored to his natural state of mind by an accident of a similar nature. The accident which resulted in his illness occurred while Yawsham was en route from Louisville, Ky., to Columbus, Ohio. He fell from the train, struck on his head and was rendered unconscious. When he came to it was found he was violently insane. All hopes of curing him being abandoned it was decided to confine him permanently in an insane hospital. Yawsham got the idea that he was going to be confined somewhere and tried to escape. In doing so he attempted to scale a rough blank wall which surrounds the barracks hospital. He was remarkably agile and well developed and succeeded in climbing to a height of about five feet, when he lost his hold, fell and again sustained an injury to the brain. Another long illness followed and from it he emerged with all his faculties restored and with nothing the matter with him whatsoever. He does not even know that he has passed through a period of mental illness, but thinks he has just recovered from his first fall. The case is one of the strangest in the history of medicine and is attracting widespread attention among physicians.

Turned Black in Half an Hour.

A white man of Kenosha, Wis., turned as black as the ace of spades the other morning, and all in less than half an hour. From the tips of his toes to the top of his head Alexander Wertenen is as black as a negro and from no apparent cause. His fellow workmen, frightened, ran away from him, and he is now at home wondering what he has done or what nature means by changing him from white to black. Wertenen is in the employ of the Kenosha tannery. He was at work as usual the other morning and was feeling perfectly well. Soon he noticed that the workmen were looking at him queerly and then their astonishment gave way to fear. He asked what was the matter and was told that he was turning black. The manager of the tannery, E. C. Thiers, was called and he immediately told the man to go home. By that time he was ink black from head to foot. Among those who saw the man after he had turned black and are willing to swear to the phenomenon are E. C. Thiers, manager of the tannery; William Schroeder, banking clerk; Griffin McCollin, a clerk in the office; Charles Beachel, another employe, who is superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school here, and James Westine, the foreman. All of these say that the man turned black and that he was white when he came to work that morning. Wertenen has been under the care of Dr. Pew for a short time, suffering with a slight stomach complaint. The doctor cannot account for the man's present condition. He is about 36 years of age and unmarried.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Whale's Maternal Love.

The sperm-whale is not a fond mother, and often deserts her offspring at the appearance of danger. The humpback, however, is both a devoted and a courageous mother, and will protect her young, regardless of her own pain and danger. Mr. Bullen, in his "Cruise of the Cachalot," the narrative of a whaling voyage, describes the killing of a cow humpback whose mother-love was wonderful. The Cachalot was cruising off Vavau, a group of the Friendly Islands, and one day, just before night, the spout of a whale was seen. A careful bearing was taken of the spot, and an hour before daybreak the next morning the boats were lowered and rowed to the bay, where the spout had been seen. While the men were resting on their oars the placid breathing of a whale was heard, and the crews, straining their eyes, saw a pale, shadowy mass of the cliff, not a quarter of a mile away. Dipping their oars carefully, so that no sound might alarm the whale, they approached near enough for the harpooner of the head boat to dart two harpoons into the huge body. The whale took not the least notice of the thrusts. The astonished whalers saw a youngling closely nestling to her side. The small body, embraced by the long, wing-like fin, was pressed to the mother's massive breast. Her only thought, although she must have suffered intense pain, was to protect her baby, not more than five days old. The calf sought to escape from the enfolding fin, making all sorts of puny struggles, while the mother, although the blood streamed from her wounds, hardly moved from her position. Once, as the deep thrust of a lance entered her vitals, she raised her massive flukes high in the air; but in that throe of agony she remembered the possible danger to her young one, and the tremendous tail was laid as softly upon the water as if it had been a feather fan. But whalemen never permit sentiment to interfere with their work. The crews saw the mother die, holding the calf to her side; then with a single lance thrust they killed it. They were intent on "ile," not on an exhibition of maternal love.

Lake on Mountain Top.

Far down in Southwestern Arizona, near Sonora, on the Mexican border, there is a range of mountains which appear to have but one face of hard, smooth granite. The top of this bunch of mountains is in the form of a gigantic basin. Here the rainfall has been gathering for ages, until quite an extensive lake is the result. The overthrow tumbles into another basin below, and so on through a series of nine, the last one being near the ground and on the direct road from Yuma to Sonora. The lower tanks are easy of access and are often drained by travelers and animals. The great upper tank can only be approached by circuitous and difficult climbing. To a stranger standing below, the upper lake, of course, has no existence. In that plain below are over 200 graves. Scores of human beings, famishing for water, have expended their last strength in reaching this spot, only to find the lower tanks dry; and, ignorant of the great upper lake, where thousands of gallons were to be had for a little climbing, have laid down in despair to die. Later travelers passing have buried the unknown's remains, and always marked the grave, Mexican fashion, by a cross of stones. There is in western Utah, sixty miles from Bioche, a sort of lava formation running through an immense canyon, which shows plainly that some tremendous upheaval of nature once visited the country and probably destroyed everything it encountered for miles round about. In the dryest part of this most desolate spot a large stream of water comes gushing out of a high cliff, as if it came from the gigantic nozzle of a great hose, and falls a cataract into the abyss below. Before reaching the bottom, however, the water is disseminated into fine spray and spreads out like a huge fan, the play and sport of the winds. It is a strange and beautiful sight. Probably in some period long past the bed of a river was where the water merges, but a volcanic upheaval has changed the face of nature, sinking the bed of the river many hundreds of feet and leaving the water to pour from its exalted perch into empty air.

Upside Down.

There is a boy, an inmate of a Massachusetts home for children, whose eyesight has been twisted so that he sees things upside down and wrong end foremost. While writing he, without knowing it, reverses his letters so that they appear upon his slate as ordinary handwriting would be reflected by a mirror. He commences to write a sentence in the bottom right-hand corner, and writes from right to left. When first admitted to the training school he was unable to write; but, when placed in the class and a copy book set before him, he seemed to understand exactly what was expected of him, and began to work. The schoolmistress was surprised when she saw the letters he had formed on the paper—they resembled nothing to her at first. Time after time she tried to teach him to begin at the top left-hand side of the paper, but he always started from the right. When the boy had learned to form his letters properly the situation dawned upon the amazed teacher. What she imagined was simply awkwardness and simplemindedness was really the result of the boy seeing things upside down.

A Cave as a Place of Worship.

A natural cave in the cliffs of Ledaig, near Oban, in Argylshire, Scotland, was fitted up as a place of worship by the local poet and postmaster, Mr. John Campbell, who acted as pastor for many years, and was much respected. He cleared out the cave and had it furnished with trunks of trees for the worshipers to sit on. The table, which is also a reading-desk, is said to be the portion of a tree on which King Robert the Bruce rested. The Highland worshipers who assembled in this unique church never numbered more than thirty, when it was considered full, and sometimes the number was but three or four. The church was uncertain, but the members of it were frequently called the Campbellites, after the name of their leader.

Nature's Drains.

A careful survey of the underground watercourses in the carboniferous limestone district of Yorkshire, England, has revealed the fact that there exists in that county an extensive system of subterranean streams, many of which issue miles away from the points called "sinks," where the water drained from the surface enters the rocks. Similar phenomena in other parts of the world, not yet so carefully investigated, occur on a much larger scale, and recent studies of the ocean bottom near the border of continents have shown that rivers of considerable size sometimes enter the sea beneath the surface.

A Submerged Forest.

There is a submerged forest on the Columbia river between the Dalles and the Cascade mountains. According to Mr. G. K. Gilbert, the submergence took place 350 years ago, and since then the roots have been under water, while the upper parts of the trunks have been bared yearly at low water. The bark is gone, and the wood partly wasted away, but some of it is firm and looks fresh. This fact seems owing to the durable quality of the wood of that species—namely, the Pseudotsuga Douglassii.

A Wonderful Place of Worship.

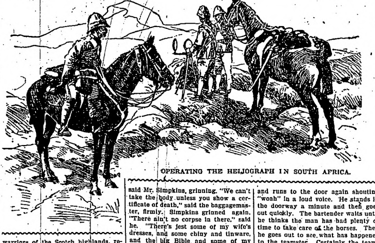
The tabernacle at Salt Lake City, the capital of Utah, is, in respect to its acoustic properties, the most remarkable place of worship in the world. It is constructed to hold 25,000 people, yet it is possible for a person standing at one end to distinctly hear the sound of a pin dropped into a hat at the other, a test of its curious power to convey sound which is offered to every stranger who is shown over the building.

THE HELIOGRAPH IN WARTIME

The heliograph is by no means a modern invention. Although it has been a good deal spoken of during the present South African campaign and is generally looked upon as one of the mechanical marvels of the nineteenth century, the fundamental idea of using the sun's rays for writing is as old as the Roman empire itself.

Every student of the classics will remember how the old Roman soldiers used their shields for flashing back information to the rear or from one wing of an army to another. The heliograph is practically the same system of sun flashing reduced to a scientific basis so that the message may be transmitted a distance of from five to even 100 miles when the circumstances are favorable.

The military value of the heliographic method of transmitting information may be readily imagined. Its first advantage is its extreme simplicity. It does not necessitate the keeping open of lines of communication, there are no wires to protect, no batteries to look after and no burdensome apparatus to carry about.



OPERATING THE HELIOGRAPH IN SOUTH AFRICA.

The Indians of America, like the old warriors of the Scotch highlands, realized the importance of signal fires in wartime and made use of a code of fire flashes; but it was not until 1822 that Col. Colby, of the British royal engineers, devised a more adequate system for transmitting messages by sun flashes. His method of doing this was by nailing a certain number of pieces of bright tin on poles and exposing them to the sun's rays. Some time later this was improved on by the adoption of a plain mirror. In 1833 an English officer at Gibraltar used an ordinary lookingglass to reflect flashes across the strait to Tangier, thereby carrying on a long-distance conversation with other English officers in Africa.

This mirror system was experimented with and improved upon until the year 1878, when the United States government purchased the latest models and began the instruction of a special signal corps in heliography. The military value of such sun writing was well known when, in 1886, Gen. Miles began his Indian campaign against Geronimo. If the truth were only known, it was the heliograph more than anything else that led to the rounding up and capture of the famous blood-drinking red man. One can imagine the surprise of the Indians when they found that they could not move without the fact being known to the Americans and the movement mysteriously anticipated. Signal parties, in fact, were flashing hourly information from mountain peak to mountain peak, and the Indian warriors' headquarters were always known at Miles' camp. Through the use of the heliograph Geronimo was kept away from water by rapidly stationed and mobile bands of troops and was finally really parched into submission.

The English army had already been making use of the heliograph in Afghanistan, and during the Boer war of twenty years ago made effective use of the Mance heliographic apparatus. The great service this means of communication has been to the different British commanders besieged by the Boers in the present South African war is very well known.

The field heliographic apparatus, as used today, consists of a sole leather pouch containing a sun mirror and a station mirror, a small screen or shutter, a sighting rod and two small tripod stands for the mirrors. The entire apparatus does not weigh over ten pounds and can easily be carried over the arm. When it is desired to send a message the sun mirror is placed on one end of a thin rod three feet in length with the station mirror at the other end, the bar being held by the tripod. When the sun is in front of the operator—that is to say, in front of a plane through his position and at right angles to the lines joining the stations—the sun mirror is required for dispatching. But with the sun in the rear of this plane both mirrors must be used to produce satisfactory results.

When the sun mirror only is used the light flash is sent directly to the receiving station, the mirror having a small hole in its center like the hole in the globe sight of a rifle for the purpose of aiming and adjusting the ray. The station mirror has a small disk at the center, and when the two mirrors are used they must be so adjusted that the shadow from the center of the sun mirror shall be reflected against the small disc on the face of the station mirror. In making signals long and short sun flashes take the place of the dots and dashes of the magnetic sounder, the same call being generally used for both instruments. When the air is clear signals may be taken by the naked eye at a distance of 100 miles, and by an expert at the rate of fifteen words a minute.

USED HIS COFFIN

As a Trunk—Because He Lived Longer Than He Expected.

Anthony Simpkins, a nonagenarian of Lansboro, Mass., started one day last week for Hopkins Station, Mich. The nearest railway station to Lanesboro is in Pittsfield, and when Anthony arrived in that city, with his blooming wife of 27 years, he created a sensation of considerable magnitude. It was neither the nonagenarian nor his wife, however, that was the real cause of the excitement, but a peculiar article of baggage which the aged traveler had with him. When the baggagemaster came to look over the traveling equipment which Mr. Simpkins unloaded from a wagon and offered for transportation he was somewhat surprised to see, in the midst of bandboxes and carpet-bags, a coffin, with all the usual funeral adornment. The coffin apparently contained a body, for the sturdy old man handled is as if it were heavy, and with the greatest care. The baggagemaster at once asked for the death certificate. "I guess I don't need none," said Mr. Simpkins, grinning. "We can't take the body unless you show a certificate of death," said the baggagemaster, firmly. Simpkins grinned again. "There ain't no corpse in there," said he. "There's jest some of my wife's dresses, and some chiny and tinware, and the big Bible and some of my things. I guess I don't need no certifikit for them, do I? I'd jest as soon show yer what they be." The baggageman admitted that he would like to look into the coffin, and straightway Anthony unfastened the lid and exposed the articles which he had mentioned, and many more as well. The controversy had attracted the attention of the people who were waiting in the station, and by the time the owner had raised the lid of the coffin he was surrounded by a large and curious crowd. Somebody asked the old man how it happened that he used a coffin as his trunk, and he explained the matter in this way: "Three years ago I had an idea that I wasn't goin' to last much longer, so I thought I'd better make sure of a good coffin while I had money to buy it. I bought this coffin then, but I ain't had no chance to use it until day 'fore yesterday. Then Mary told me there wa'n't room enough in the trunk for all the things we wanted to take out west, so I said that coffin would make a good trunk. I wanted to take it along, anyhow." Despite Mr. Simpkins' plausible explanation the railroad officers refused to accept his coffin trunk, and with a good deal of grumbling he and his wife transferred the contents to a dry goods box.

HISTORICAL PALACE FOR SALE.

Many of England's Kings and Queens Resided There.

The crown lease of Eltham court and palace, which forms one of the most interesting links with the past which have ever passed into the estate market, is advertised for sale, says the London Chronicle. Its history dates from the time of Edward the Confessor (1042-66). At that time the manor belonged to the crown. It was granted by William the Conqueror to his brother Odo, earl of Kent, but reverted to the crown. While the date of the erection of the palace is uncertain, it is known that it was a royal residence from 1270 to 1628. "John o' Eltham," Edward II., Edward III., Richard II., Henry IV., Henry V., Edward IV., Richard III., Henry VII., Henry VIII., Mary, Elizabeth and James I., all resided at the palace. It was there, also, that Edward III. held his parliament, Richard III. entertained the captive king of France, Henry IV. was espoused to Joan of Navarre and Edward IV.'s daughter Bridget was born. After passing through other royal hands, the palace came into the possession of Sir John Shaw. It is from one of the three parks known as the middle park that the "Midle Park Plate" takes its name. The present house retains the old moat and part of the original palace is still standing.

MANY TRICKS

Worked by the Thirsty to Get Their Drinks Free.

There is a man in town who has taken a drink at the expense of 50 or more saloon-keepers in the city. Here is his scheme: He dresses like a teamster and carries a long whip in his hand. Walking up to a bar of a saloon he says: "Please pour me a drink of whisky. I have a team out here I've got to watch." While the unsuspecting bartender pours out the drink the man rushes to the door and shouts "woah" in a loud voice. Then he runs back to the bar, gulps down the whisky and runs to the door again shouting "woah" in a loud voice. He stands in the doorway a minute and then goes out quickly. The bartender waits until he thinks the man has had plenty of time to take care of the horses. Then he goes out to see what has happened to the teamster. Certainly the teamster is gone. Here is another scheme that a thirsty man is working with great success: Coatless and hatless he rushes into a saloon and orders a drink. "Will you please call up John Jones by telephone for me?" says he, while pouring out the drink. If the bartender is an accommodating man he goes to the telephone, and while he is searching the directory for John Jones' telephone the coatless man takes his drink and quickly leaves the saloon. There is another man in town getting drunk by the aid of a scheme quite as novel. This man wears a silk hat and carries a small valise. After taking a drink he reaches into his pocket for the money. He always stands near a cuspidor and, removing his hand from his pocket, he drops something into the cuspidor. It sounds like the clang of money. He insists that he has dropped a quarter, and rather than empty the cuspidor the bartender gives him change for a quarter. When the porter comes to clean the cuspidor he only finds a ten-penny nail.—Kansas City Star.

Many Fine Pictures.

Most of us have read of rooms which have been papered entirely with canceled postage stamps, but certain monks at the hospital of St. Jean de Dieu, at Ghent, have beaten all this by, in their leisure moments, decorating the walls with gorgeous landscapes, glowing with color and full of life, which are formed entirely by means of the postage stamps of all the nations of the world. Palaces, forests, streams and mountains are represented, butterflies flit about in the air, birds of beautiful plumage perch on branches, snakes and lizards glide about, and innumerable animals find places here and there. The pictures are most artistic, in the style of Chinese landscape gardening, and already between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 of stamps have been used.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

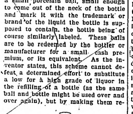
To Prevent Fraud in Liquids—Fire-Refuge Shutters—Asbestos and Its Uses—New Sound—An Ammonia Fire Extinguisher

Asbestos and Its Uses.

Asbestos is remarkable as an example of a substance, long regarded as economically valueless, suddenly taking its place among minerals of commercial importance, and rapidly coming into use, until its production ranks as a staple branch of the industries of this country. Asbestos is a fibrous variety of the mineral actinolite, and consists essentially of oxide of iron, alumina, magnesia, silica and water, and in appearance has a silky, vitreous luster, while its indestructibility by fire forms the leading characteristic on which is based the commercial and utilitarian value of the substance under consideration The mineral is widely distributed,the two principal sources of commercial importance being Italy and Canada; that derived from the former country being the most valuable and being distinguished from other varieties by its brownish tint. The process in vogue for the manufacture of raw asbestos into the various articles for which it is now employed may be briefly summarized. Arrived in bags weighing from one to two hundredweight, the lumps of crude asbestos are put through an ingenious crushing machine, whose rollers have a parallel motion in addition to their rolling action over each other. This action effectually opens out the fibers, which are then boiled in large tanks. The shorter fibers, having been ground down and reduced to a pulp, are converted into asbestos millboard by manipulation on gauze netting, a process familiar to all persons who have visited paper mills and witnessed the manufacture of ordinary paper. Asbestos millboard forms a valuable "packing" for engines, while its non-conducting properties render it serviceable on electrical work. A bare enumeration of the many purposes to which asbestos is now devoted would form a formidable list: "Packing" for all classes of machinery, ropes, fire escapes and firemen's clothing,furnacemen's gloves, fire-proof putty, sheeting, boiler and steam pipe covering, millboard for every purpose, cloth for filtering acids and other similar uses; for covering rollers in print works where aniline dyes are employed, and it is necessary to resist heat and the action of the acids; for flooring and wallfelt, more especially in timber-built houses; as a lubricant for every class of engine, portable fire-proof safes, lamp shades, and a variety of other articles,in which the fire and heat resisting properties of the substance under consideration render it of especial value.

To Prevent Frauds in Liquids.

A variation of the multitudinous non-refillable bottle patent is the idea of an inventor of New York city. He does not endeavor to produce a bottle which cannot be refilled, for it is pointed out that dealers are adverse to handling such bottles, as it reflects on their honesty, but to produce one which places a premium on honesty. The scheme is to place in each bottle a small porcelain ball, small enough to come out of the neck of the bottle and mark it with the trademark or brand of the liquid the bottle is supposed to contain, the bottle being of course similarly labeled. These balls are to be redeemed by the bottler or manufacturer for a small cash premium, or its equivalent. As the inventor states, this scheme cannot defeat a determined effort to substitute a low for a high grade of liquor in the refilling of a bottle (as the same ball and bottle might be used over and over again), but by making them redeemable for a small consideration it is thought that such dishonest practice would be minimized.



An Ammonia Fire Extinguisher.

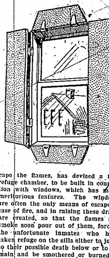
That fire cannot exist where oxygen is lacking is an obvious truth, and it is on this that the success of the various fire extinguishing powders depends and also the efficient operation of steam jets, which latter have long been recognized as good fire fighting media under certain conditions. According to Cassier's Magazine, aqua ammoniae (ammonia water, or liquid ammonia) has recently been added to the list of these extinguishers, as would appear from an item telling of a case where the vapors of a tank containing fifty gallons of gasolene caught fire in the linen room of a laundry. The room was instantly a mass of living flames, but a gallon and a half of ammonia water thrown into it completely and almost immediately extinguished the fire. The ammonia was in a glass demijohn in an apothecary's shop next door to the laundry, and was thrown into the room by the druggist as an experiment. To use his own words in reporting the circumstance, "the effect was instantaneous, torrents of black smoke rolling upward in place of flames, and in a moment every trace of fire was gone."

Food Preservatives.

The committee appointed in England to discuss the question of preservatives and coloring matters in food has been hearing evidence from many experts on the various points raised. It was stated by one that the use of borax or boracic acid for ham and bacon was necessary on account of the demand for a mild-cured article, and that it was a most effective preservative and a sure remedy against fly-blow. Seventy-five per cent of the ham and bacon sold in Britain was treated with this chemical, and after the meat had been cooked, most, if not all, the borax disappeared. This last statement is one which surely could easily be put to the test of experiment; and, should it be found correct, the use of borax for meat could hardly be considered objectionable.

Fire-Refuge Shutters.

A Pennsylvania man, of Waynesborough, no doubt actuated by the recent appalling fatalities of fires in mills resulting from operatives being compelled to jump from the windows to escape the flames, has devised a fire-refuge chamber, to be built in connection with windows, which has many meritorious features. The windows are often the only means of escape in case of fire, and in raising these drafts are created, so that the flames and smoke soon pour out of them, forcing the unfortunate inmates who have taken refuge on the sills either to jump to their possible death below or to remain and be smothered or burned to death. This chamber is formed of shutters of iron or suitable non-inflammable material, their design being such that when the lower and upper shutters are respectively raised and lowered and the side shutters folded in against them a smoke-proof chamber is formed. In it one may take refuge and remain until the firemen have an opportunity to raise ladders or stretch jumping nets. This arrangement effectually protects those who have taken refuge in it until they are rescued, unless, of course, the fire should first destroy that particular part of the building. The very fact that the window is thus closed helps materially in preventing the spread of the flames. Besides, it is operated from the inside of the building, and thus forms a fire shutter that can be more quickly placed in operation than shutters on the outside of a building.



New Sound.

What the inventor describes as "a new sound" is produced by a device just patented by Prof. Elisha Gray. This sound is produced by a method of ringing a bell by means of magnets, and he claims that it is especially adapted to submarine telegraphy. At present bells are always rung by the impact of a tongue, a hammer, or the like, but in Prof. Gray's invention there is no blow at all on the bell. Briefly, the method consists in exciting magnets in relation to a bell, with currents of a frequency corresponding to the distinctive vibratory rate of the bell; the magnetic force thus tuned is caused by appropriate means to produce at regular intervals a deformation of the shape of the bell, thus resulting in its vibration. The receiver consists of a stretched steel plate located at a distance and tuned to respond to the vibrations transmitted through the water; a telephone attachment in turn taking up the vibrations, which may be broken in continuity to correspond to the Morse code, and rendering them audible in the ordinary telephone receiver. As is well known, in sounding a bell by means of a blow, much of the energy applied is expended in setting up objectionable overtones. By the electro-magnetic means proposed by Prof. Gray, only such vibrations will be set up as correspond to the normal note of the bell, a pure tone thus being produced, which, indeed, the inventor calls "a new sound." The patent gives no indication as to the distances through which messages may be transmitted in the manner proposed, and practical experiments on the system will be looked forward to with much interest. As applied to the purpose mentioned, the bell sounds only when the speed of the alternater corresponds to the normal vibratory rate of the bell, and a delicate governing attachment to the machine may be adjusted until the sounding of the bell indicates that the proper speed is secured, after which the mechanism is presumed automatically to maintain such speed.

War Telegrams.

The press of telegrams from the seat of war is straining the telegraphic system to its utmost limit. There are two terminal stations involved, one at Cape Town and the other at Durban; and government messages, by international agreement, have priority always. Recently a message from Sir George White at Ladysmith was transmitted from Durban to London in the short space of half an hour; and if we follow the course of such a telegram, and see how it has to halt at certain intermediate points—Zanzibar, Aden, Suez, Alexandria, Gibraltar, each of these stoppages meaning a delay of several minutes—we cannot but wonder at the extraordinary nature of the feat. A single cable will transmit from one hundred and fifty to two hundred words per minute, every word being spelled right out, and in the present instance no code words were allowable. We must also remember that every message from the seat of war is carefully examined or censored before being sent on.

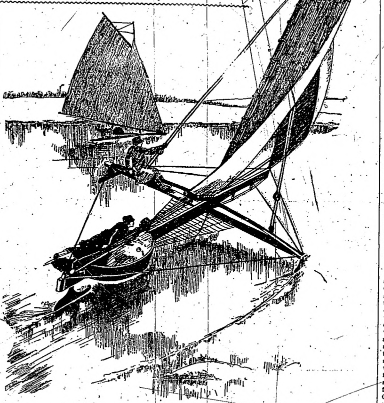
PERILS OF ICE YACHTING IN THE NORTH



BEFORE THE WIND.

The perils of ice yachting are many. Jumping cracks is dangerous, but often is unavoidable. The boat, impelled at terrific speed, is confronted by a yawning gap in the ice. If the crew is lucky and the crack not more than twenty feet wide the boat may escape without becoming a total wreck, but the men are likely to be shaken up. Sometimes they are thrown out of the boat and sent ricochetting many yards over the ice.

In a squall a craft may heel so much the weather runner and the ice runner fail to maintain their grip on the ice and the boat scoops rapidly to leeward like a crab. In such a contingency she is beyond the control of her helmsman, and a collision or wreck may, perhaps, follow. Air holes are also sources of danger. But such risks as these seem merely to add zest to the diversion and by no means deter the adventurous from following its pursuit.

As for the marvelous speed attained by some of these craft in a stiff blow, there are many startling instances. In a race on Pepin Lake, Minn., four boats made one leg of the course, one mile and a quarter, at the rate of ninety miles an hour, while a boat called the Irene, on another occasion, sailed two and three-quarters miles in one minute and fifty seconds. Fifty miles an hour is a common rate attained on Lake Pepin in the club races.

February usually is the ideal month for this sport and some capital races were sailed this year.

But it requires nerve and also skill, acquired of long practice, to skipper an ice yacht successfully in a blow. Especially is this true of the modern racing machine, which is so highly strung and so admirably balanced that the slightest touch of the tiller causes her to spin round with the rapidity of a top. The lubber who is able to steer a catboat and caress himself with pride if he can keep her from yawing four points each when sailing with the wind aft, by no means should undertake the task of a trick at the helm of one of these nervous craft.

The racing craft that makes the best records have small sail area of less than 600 square feet. The larger boats, some of which carry 1,000 square feet, are likely to act like brutes in a blow and take charge, usually to such an extent as almost to prove unmanageable. The modern machine, however, is balanced exquisitely and sensitive to the slightest touch of the helm. Hollow steel spars and silken sails are affected by some of the more progressive devotees of the sport, but wooden spars are not at all likely to go out of fashion yet awhile. To counteract the tendency of the craft to depress her head in a strong breeze, as much of the available weight is carried as far aft as possible. Thus, the cockpit is placed right in the stern, and sometimes shifting lead ballast is used to keep the after end of the boat on the ice.

The question of rig always excites an ice boatman's argumentative abilities. The sloop, the cat and the lateen each has its own enthusiastic supporters who are able to adduce good reasons for the faith that is in them. The most popular rig is probably the sloop. A foresail laced to a boom, a mainsail with extremely high peak and three rows of reef points, an extension tiller which, when desired, can be worked by the feet while the helmsman's hands are busy with the sheets, are some of the attempts to keep body and soul together. A visit to any center of the sport in this vicinity on a bracing Saturday afternoon or a Sunday morning will afford abundant proof that the sport not only is open to the rich, but that it is enjoyed vastly by those comparatively poor. Rivers and lakes, thank heaven, are free to all in this country, and a motley, heterogeneous fleet it is that glides before your astonished eye. Circling amid the expensive racing yachts may be seen some of the queerest and most primitive craft imaginable, some of them constructed of a few rough boards on runners, fashioned, perhaps, from old skates and propelled by sails which look suspiciously like bed sheets, probably acquired surreptitiously.

These boats, as may easily be imagined, are manned by small fry, who in their handling show commendable skill as well as dash and daring worthy of Young America. To become an expert sailor of ice yachts it is an advantage to begin before one cuts his eye teeth and has plenty of nerve, for the occasions are plenteous when nerve is needed. The courage of some of these boys is admirable indeed. Not only do they steer their boats with audacity and precision, but they also tempt Providence by running reckless risks of collision that make spectators tremble for the personal safety of the daring young devils.

LARGE AND GROWING INDUSTRY

Manufacture of Steel Cars Has Become an Important Factor.

Few people realize how rapid the growth of the steel car industry has been. Three years ago there was practically nothing done in that line, while today there are 10,000 men and boys in the United States earning their living at it, and the American steel car is to be found not only all over the American continent, but in the wilds of Africa and other regions in which, for obvious reasons, it is preferred to the wooden vehicle. A load that would crush the ordinary wooden car is carried with ease by its steel successor; 100,000 pounds is a common specification for their capacity, and only recently 2,500 cars, each capable of carrying this immense weight, were ordered by three of the leading American railroads, the value of the order amounting to $2,750,000. The greater the carrying capacity of the steel car the smaller the ratio of its weight to the load carried. The steel car carrying 100,000 pounds weighs 35,000 pounds, the same as a wooden car that carries only 70,000 pounds; the life of the wooden car averages fifteen years, and it costs $35 a year to keep it in repair; the steel car, it is estimated, will run for fifty years, and its repair bill amounts to but $10 to $15 a year. No wonder the steel car building company has work ahead for several years to come.

The Nutritive Value of Certain Foods.

Speaking roughly, a quart of oysters contains, on the average, about the same quantity of actual nutritive substance as a quart of milk, or a pound of very lean beef, or a pound and a half of fresh codfish, or two-thirds of a pound of bread. But while the weight of actual nutriment in the different quantities of food material named is very nearly the same, the quality is widely different. That of the very lean meat or codfish consists mostly of what are called, in chemical language, protein compounds, or "flesh formers"—the substances which make blood, muscle, tendon, bone, brain and other nitrogenous tissues. That of the bread contains but little of these, and consists chiefly of starch, with a little fat and other compounds, which serve the body as fuel, and supply it with heat and muscular power. The nutritive substance of oysters contains considerable amounts of both the flesh-forming and the more especially heat and force-giving ingredients. Oysters come nearer to milk than almost any other common food material as regards both the amounts and the relative proportions of nutrients and their food values. of equal weights of milk and oysters, i. e., their values for supplying the body with material to build up its parts, repair its wastes, and furnish it with heat and energy would be pretty nearly the same.

Character in Walking.

Quick steps are indicative of energy and agitation. Tip-toe walking symbolizes surprise, curiosity, discretion or mystery. Turned in toes are often found with preoccupied, absent-minded persons. The miser's walk is represented as stooping, noiseless, with short, nervous, anxious steps. Slow steps, whether long or short, suggest a gentle or reflective state of mind, as the case may be. The proud step is slow and measured; the toes are conspicuously turned out; the legs straightened. Where a revengeful purpose is hidden under a feigned smile the step will be slinking and noiseless. The direction of the steps, wavering and following every changing impulse of the mind inevitable betrays uncertainty, hesitation and indecision. Obstinate people, who in argument rely more on muscularity than on intellectual power,rest the feet flatly and firmly on the ground, walk heavily and slowly, and stand with the legs firmly planted and far apart.

GOV. ROOSEVELT'S BRIBE.

Paid $10 for a Shot at a Wounded Charging Grizzly Bear.

"A friend of mine," says a New Yorker, "told me the following story about Gov. Roosevelt that I had never heard before. The present governor was out with a guide after grizzlies, and if one was found the agreement was that Roosevelt should take the first shot, and if he missed, the second was to go to the guide. The governor, you know, is near sighted and has to wear glasses. They finally got a shot at a grizzly and although the governor succeeded in winging him the bear was not fatally wounded, and came charging down on them at a terrific rate. Now, big game men unite in saying that, hunt the world over, and there is only one form of sport to be found more dangerous than grizzly hunting, and that is a cowboy who has gone wrong, and that he, and he only, is likely to give you a better run for your money than a grizzly bear. Well, to return to the story, the bear was coming down on them like the Empire State Express and emitting loud, rude, belligerent snorts at every jump. Roosevelt's glasses had been knocked off by the recoil of the gun, and while he could locate the bear by the row he was making, he was without the limit of accurate vision. Nothing daunted, however, and with every drop of sporting blood in his veins a-tingle, he yelled at the guide: 'Say, Bill, $10! Is it my shot?' and upon that worthy falling a victim to bribery and corruption Roosevelt laid his bearship low when he arrived near enough for him to see where to put a shot in a vital spot."

Hypnotism in Medicines.

It is not uncommon to hear people say: "Oh, Doctor So-and-So is such an excellent physician! He inspires confidence, and one feels better the moment he enters the room." According to a French scientist, hypnotism is the controlling force in instances of this sort. That such a state of things is productive of benefit to the patient there is no doubt. Indeed, whatever influences the mind favorably and quiets the nerves is bound to be of advantage, especially with persons of extremely sensitive mental and physical organizations.

The Girl I Left Behind.

(Old Favorite Series.)

This song, both air and words, is of Irish origin, and is thought to have been written, as herewith given, about the middle of the last century or perhaps earlier, for it purports to be the expression of a Jacobite soldier of fortune.

The dames of France are fond and free,
And Flemish lips are willing,
And soft the maids of Italy,
And Spanish eyes are thrilling;
Still, though I bask beneath their smile,
Their charms fail to bind me,
And my heart falls back to Erin's isle,
To the girl I left behind me.

For she's as fair as Shannon's side,
And purer than its water;
But she refused to be my bride,
Though many a year I sought her;
Yet since to France I sailed away,
Her letters oft remind me
That I promised never to gainsay
The girl I left behind me.

She says, "My own dear love, come home,
My friends are rich and many,
Or else abroad with you I'll roam,
A soldier stout as any;
If you'll not come, nor let me go,
I'll think you have resigned me."
My heart near broke when I answered "No,"
To the girl I left behind me.

For never shall my true love brave
A life of war and toiling,
And never as a skulking slave
I'll tread my native soil on;
But were I free, or to be freed,
The battle's close would find me
To Ireland bound, nor message need
From the girl I left behind me.

[The air was transplanted to England, and soon became one of the standard tunes in the British naval and military service. For over a century it has been a custom, almost invariably followed, for the bands to play it when the troops break camp or warships sail away. There are several forms of the English version.]

I'm lonesome since I crossed the hills
And o'er the moorland sedgy,
Such heaviness my bosom fills,
Since parting with my Betsy.
I seek for one as fair and gay,
But find none to remind me.
How blest the hours passed away
With the girl I left behind me.

The hour I remember well,
When she first owned she loved me,
A pain within my heart doth tell
How constant I have proved me;
But now I'm bound for Brighton camp,
Kind heaven then pray guide me,
And send me home safe back again
To the girl I left behind me.

My mind her image must retain,
Asleep or sadly waking;
I long to see my love again,
For her my heart is breaking.
Whene'er my steps return that way,
Still faithful shall she find me,
And never more again I'll stray
From the girl I left behind me.

Lee's Farewell.

In an account of the preparation of Gen. Lee's farewell address, given by him some ten or twelve years ago, Col. Marshall says that on returning from the McLean home, where the terms of surrender were arranged, Gen. Lee directed him to prepare a general order to the army appropriate to the occasion. "During the rest of the day," said the colonel, "I was so constantly occupied with details that I had no time to write the order, so that the next morning when the general called for it it was not prepared. He then directed me to get into his ambulance, standing before his tent, and get to work at it at once, and placed an orderly on guard to prevent my being interrupted. As soon as I had made a draft in lead pencil I submitted it to Gen. Lee, who struck out a whole paragraph and made some verbal alterations, when I had the rough draft, thus corrected, signed by Gen. Lee. This was copied and signed by him for corps commanders, and many copies were made and his autograph secured as souvenirs by couriers and other persons at headquarters. Thus we have the positive statement from Col. Marshall that Gen. Lee "struck out a whole paragraph." It follows, therefore, that the London copy recently sold at auction as the original draft for £15 10s is not the original, or that Col. Marshall's recollection as to what was struck out was faulty. The way to settle that question is for the owner of the "original" to have a photographic copy made and sent to Col. Marshall, who is living in Baltimore. It seems to us we have seen it stated somewhere that the paragraph which Lee struck out contained expressions which he feared would not be conducive to the reconciliation of the North and South. After seeing how the various published copies of the address differ, we are more than ever anxious that the original shall be discovered and identified. For instance, Fitz Lee and Gen. Long both in their books make Gen. Lee say "with an increasing admiration of your constancy and devotion to your country," etc., whereas the "Rooney" Lee fac simile, and several other authorities, have "unceasing" (which we take to be the right word) instead of "increasing." How strange it would be if the original should come back to us from over seas? Maybe it will. And if it should the London buyer may be sure he will be able to command for the paper a price considerably in advance of that which he paid.—Richmond (Va.) Dispatch.

The Veteran Bugler.

"One of the first things that attracted my attention in the village to which we had removed," said a civil war veteran, "was the sound of a bugle. It was heard in the daytime only, and the bugler never played anything but army calls. Some of these calls, as every soldier knows, are melodious, and some are stirring; the bugler knew them all and he played them well. He seemed always to be passing through the village, with occasional halts. Usually he approached by the main road from the east. In the village this road ran up a low hill or rising ground. Our own street also, was on this hill, and parallel with the main road, but at some distance to the south of it; a crossroad ran between these two, along the foot of the slope. When the bugle was first heard in the distance the sound would be now and then almost lost, as woods or groups of buildings intervened; but by the time the bugler had reached the crossroad between the main road and our street we would be able to distinguish many of the calls as the bugler maneuvered his invisible army. Sometimes the head of the column halted for a little time at the foot of the hill, but oftener it kept right on up the slope. There is a clump of trees between our house and that part of the main road, so that we could not see the troops as they passed, even when they were there, right back of us; but it was as easy to follow them as though they had been in sight. It seemed as though you could hear the hoofs of the cavalry horses on the hard road; it was easy to imagine the infantry moving along at route step, and you fancied you could hear the rumbling of the batteries as they passed. Sometimes the column moved on up the hill and passed on out of hearing without unusual incident, and then sometimes a detachment of cavalry was sent on ahead to reconnoitre; sometimes skirmishers were deployed, and once the bugler sent a battery plunging and tearing across the ridges of a cornfield to the north of the road to shell a piece of woods ahead, to the west. Although this marching and maneuvering, not in sight, but within hearing, had been going on some little time to the north of us, I was one day almost startled when, instead of moving straight up on the hill as usual, the column turned to the left at the foot of the slope and came marching south along the connecting road, toward us. The bugle sounded again at the foot of our street, and the head of the column turned to the right. Looking down to see the first of the troops as they turned toward us I saw coming, driving up the street, a peddler, who, presently, as he came nearer, took from the seat beside him a bugle, which he sounded vigorously. This was the bugle whose stirring notes I had heard. He is well known, I find, among the older residents of the district. He is a veteran who served as a bugler in the civil war; and to all veteran soldiers his notes bring back old times vividly."

Sundays Preferred for Battles.

There is a proposition which has been set forth with much energy by some correspondents whose views have reached me. That is that one cause for which we both ought to humiliate ourselves, and the one that is in fact, the secret of our failures, has been that our generals have fought on Sunday. It is, therefore, rather interesting to note how very many battles have taken place on Sunday. Certainly their result has not always corresponded with the views of the extreme Sabbatarians. To begin with, since these comments were made, Gen. French has carried out a most successful operation which was due to a movement on Sunday. The great battle of the Nile, by which Nelson destroyed the fleet of Napoleon and made the scheme on which the future master of the continent had set his heart—the conquest of Egypt, with a view to the conquest of India—impossible, took place on Sunday; Vimiera, the first great European success of the Duke of Wellington, was fought on Sunday; Fuentes d'Onor, perhaps the most fiercely contested and risky of all Wellington's battles in the Peninsula, was fought on Sunday; Orthes also was a Sunday battle; Ciudad Rodrigo was captured on a Sunday. It is almost needless to say that Waterloo and Inkerman were Sunday battles. The outbreak of the mutiny—which was, it must be admitted, not successful ultimately for those who took part in it, but which shook our dominion in India and exposed us to almost as great anxiety as the present campaign—occurred on Sunday. The great stroke which dealt the first deadly blow against the center of the mutiny—the capture of Delhi—was delivered on Sunday. The fight at Rorke's Drift was on Sunday. Both Firken and Omdurman were Sunday battles. I have limited myself in this statement to our English fighting during the present century. The list might be indefinitely extended if one went back over the great battles of the past. If one were to select a day of the week on which the most important incidents of war have occurred, my own impression, without absolutely making a statistical calculation, is from my knowledge of past history that Sunday is the day one must name, and that it has been quite as frequently the assailants on that day who have won the victory as the defenders.—London News.

Waterloo in Nutshell.

The most concise and truthful account of the battle of Waterloo in existence was penned by the Duke of Wellington himself; it consists of a single paragraph contained in a letter to Lord Beresford, an old comrade in arms of Wellington's. Here it is, in eight jerky sentences: "You will have heard of our battle of the 18th. Never did I see such a pounding match. Both were what the boxers call gluttons. Napoleon did not maneuver at all. He just moved forward in the old style, and was driven off in the old style. The only difference was that he mixed cavalry with his infantry, and supported both with an enormous quantity of artillery. I had the infantry for some time in squares,and we had the French cavalry walking about us as if they had been our own. I never saw the British infantry behave so well." The passage appears in Sir Herbert Maxwell's new "Life of the Iron Duke," where much fresh material is to be found. Wellington did not, as one is apt to imagine, ride off the battlefield proudly conscious that he was the greatest military hero of the age, and the prime factor in the restoration of the martial power of Great Britain. "It was not till ten or twelve days after the battle," he once confessed to Lady Salisbury, "that I began to reflect upon what I had done, and to feel it;" "but," he added, "when the war is over and the troops disbanded, what is your great general more than anybody else?" True, from that point of view; but, as one writer remarks, Wellington never seemed to have left the battlefield, and consequently never lost his air or feeling of superiority.

Sothern's Recitation.

Sir Edward Russell knew E. A. Sothern, the actor, intimately and in his book, "That Reminds Me," tells many stories of him.

He was dining at Portsmouth or somewhere at a regimental mess to which the officers had asked him with every show of the highest admiration and with no appearance of social superiority. After dinner as the party sat at wine, one of the officers asked Sothern to give them a recitation. Now, Sothern abominated that kind of thing. He wouldn't tolerate being treated as an entertainer when he was by way of being treated as a gentleman. He coldly declined. They pressed him. He hotly declined. Still they pressed him. He expressed his feelings. Perhaps the officers were a little affected by wine. At all events they persisted. They would take no denial.

At last he said in a manner which showed that he was nettled, but yet yielding: "Well, if you won't let me off I must. I'll give you the dinner scene from 'David Garrick.'"

He did. He had never acted it better. They were delighted until, springing to his feet, he made his wild, tipsy exit, just as he did on the stage, and dragged the cloth off the table and with it all the regiment's prized dessert china and decanters and glasses, etc. Great was the smash. The actor did not wait to be applauded or to improve the occasion. The lesson was, indeed, a rough one, and probably only a man with some roughness in his darling humor would have given it, but it was quite deserved.

How Hard Bees Work.

Darwin after close observation found that a bee would often visit as many as 27 flowers in the course of a minute, though with other plants in which the honey was difficult to extract the average would be as low as seven. Striking a mean between these two figures one may say that an ordinary working bee visits 15 flowers a minute, or 900 an hour. Considering the late hours to which a bee works, it is probably no exaggeration to say that it is busy for eight hours a day, allowing for intervals of rest. This would make it visit 7,200 flowers a day, or 648,000 in a period of six months.

Mr. A. S. Wilson in a recent paper showed the enormous amount of labor gone through by bees in making even a small quantity of honey. He found that approximately 125 heads of red clover yield 15 grains of sugar, or 125,000 heads about two pounds. As each head contains some 60 florets, it follows that 7,500,000 distinct flower tubes must be sucked in order to obtain two pounds of sugar. Now, honey contains, roughly speaking, 75 per cent of sugar; therefore the bees must make, in round numbers, 2,500,000 visits for one pound of honey.

Question Is Unanswered.

A certain grocer on the hill has for some days been looking for the owner of a voice that claimed his attention at the telephone one busy morning. When he finds the man, the meeting will furnish material for an interesting item, and the following dialogue explains itself:

The Voice—Hello, there! Is that you, Charles?

Grocer—Yes.

The Voice—Have you any salt fish?

Grocer—Yes.

The Voice—Is it fresh?

Grocer—Yes; came in this morning.

The Voice—Cod or pollock?

Grocer—Got both. Which do you want?

The Voice—Well, I don't know. Is the pollock good and dry?

Grocer—Yes.

The Voice—Well, why don't you give it a drink, then?

At this point the grocer brought the colloquy to a sudden termination with a remark that would be out of place in polite society and therefore unfit for publication.—Portland (Or.) Argus.

Mice as Food In China.

The first thing which strikes the traveler in China upon his entrance into any of the many cities of the Celestial empire is the strings of dried mice which hang from the roofs of the houses suspended by their tails, just as sausages are hung in front of butcher shops in France.

The Chinese hunt these mice with a long, sharp pointed knife, which they plunge into the animals' throats. Then the mice are suspended by the tails until the blood has dripped out, when they are skinned, drawn and smoked.

Another favorite dish with the Chinese is dogs' feet. The feet of black dogs are considered more of a delicacy than those of any other color, and white dogs are rejected as being tasteless. Dogs' fat, prepared in a special manner, is looked upon as a repast fit for a king.

Going to Bed In India.

Going to bed in India is a very different process from going to bed at home. To begin with, it is a far less formal process. There is no shutting the door, no cutting yourself off from the outer world, no going up stairs and finally no getting into bed. You merely lie down on your bed, which, with its bedding, is so simple as to be worth describing. The bed is a wooden frame with webbing laced across it, and each bed has a thin cotton mattress. Over this one sheet is spread, and two pillows go to each bed. That's all.—Scottish American.

It Still Worked.

"No," she answered coldly, "I cannot marry a man who carries a rabbit's foot for luck."

For a moment he contemplated her in intense silence, but only for a moment.

"Who," he exclaimed, "now can doubt the efficacy of the rabbit's foot after this?"

Then he left her forever, pausing only to laugh the wild, mirthless laugh which was suitable to the occasion.—Detroit Journal.

Notice of Sale of Ditch Bonds.

Notice is hereby given, that at the office of the county auditor, in and for the county of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, on the 19th day of March 1900 beginning at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of said day, the county commissioners of said county will sell Ditch Bonds of said county in the aggregate sum of $9,000.00; said bonds are issued for the purpose of defraying the expense of constructing the Sanders-Black River Ditch in said county of Red Lake. Said bonds to be issued and dated the 1st day of May A. D. 1900, to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, to be eighteen in number and to be in denominations of $500.00 each, maturing on the 1st day of May 1910, principal and interest payable at the office of the county treasurer of Red Lake county Minn; each of said bonds to contain a recital to the effect that they are issued in accordance with the provisions and pursuant to the authority of chapter 97 of the laws of Minnesota for the year 1897 and acts amendatory thereto. Bids for said bonds will be received at any time prior to the hour of beginning said sale, at which time all bids will be opened. Each bid will be required to be accompanied by a certified check in the sum of $200.00 to be forfeited to Red Lake county in case of failure to comply with the terms of said bid if accepted.

The County Commissioners of said county hereby reserve the right to reject any and all bids and to continue said sale from day to day if deemed necessary in the interests of said county.

Dated at Red Lake Falls this 6th day of March A. D. 1900.

Did it ever occur to you how easy it is to make a liar out of the editor? Just tell him that you are going away on such and such a day earlier or later. When the newsgatherer asks you in regard to news, he takes it for granted that what you tell him can be relied on. False reports are invariably credited against the paper, when, in nearly every instance, the editors or reporter is not to blame.—Ex.

Swept Away by Plagues.

Italy once had a plague that killed 10,000 persons daily. Five hundred a day died in Rome. In one year 200,000 citizens of Constantinople died. The epidemic of 1347-9 was the worst ever visited on man. In Asia 23,000,000 perished by it and in Europe 25,000,000. In London 200 persons were buried daily in the Charterhouse yards. It was called "black death." The plague in England in 1471 destroyed more people than the continual wars for the 15 preceding years.

"Sweating sickness," prevailing in England for three years, killed half the population of all the capital towns and depopulated Oxford. It was mortal in three hours. The great plague of London in 1664 carried off 100,000 people. A transport with soldiers on board, from Sardinia to Naples, brought a plague that destroyed 400,000. An epidemic started in Marseilles by a ship from the Levant killed over 60,000.

Clever Advertisers.

A clever advertising scheme was employed by a firm in a southern city. The junior partner of the firm swore out a warrant for the arrest of the senior partner on the ground that he was selling goods below cost and that the firm was constantly losing money thereby.

The case came up in court, and the counsel for the senior partner asked for a postponement in order to have more time to prepare his case. The judge granted the request, bail was fixed and the senior member released. As he left the courtroom the junior partner arose and exclaimed, "If he is released, the sacrifice will go on!"

The news soon spread, and the firm did a better business.

When the case was again called, no plaintiff appeared, and the charge was dismissed. The firm had succeeded in their object—advertisement.

He Fired.

During the siege of Pueblo by Santa Anna, Captain Kendrick of the artillery, later professor at West Point, was in command at Fort Lorento, overlooking the city, when Colonel Childs, the commander of the American forces stationed in that vicinity and who was an excitable man, rode at a mad gallop into the fort and cried: "Fire at once! The crisis is coming!" The battery opened fire, and amid the smoke and roar of the cannon an officer, seeing no enemy, asked Kendrick what he was firing at. He calmly replied, "At the crisis."

His Paper's Motto.

"I've got a good motto for my new paper."

"What is it?"

"'What we have we hold.'"

"Oh, I see; referring to the circulation. That's good. But, by the way, I didn't know you were a publisher."

"I'm not. This is a patent fly paper."

We Want Correspondents.

We desire a correspondent in every school district in the county, one who will give the local news of his or her locality in a fair and impartial manner. To any one who will undertake the matter the SPECTATOR will furnish the necessary stationery and postage and will send the paper free during the time the person acts in that capacity. Only one correspondent desired in each district. It is an advantage to any community to be represented in the columns of the local paper.

The Barber Shop Boss.

"You're next, sir," said the boss barber, indicating a fat man who was buried behind a newspaper. "I'll wait for awhile," replied the fat man, "I'm in no hurry." As another man climbed into the vacant chair the fat man leaned over to another customer who was waiting his turn and confided that he was in a hurry, a deuced hurry, but he would rather lose his turn than be shaved by the proprietor of the shop.

"It isn't that I have any grievance against this particular barber," he went on, "but I shun all boss barbers as I would a plague. In the first place, he patronizes you, and in the second place, he is invariably the worst barber in the shop. Then, too, it takes him about twice as long. He will lather one side of your face and then go over to the desk to make change for a customer who is going out, for he is generally his own cashier. He considers it his duty to exchange airy persiflage with each customer as he leaves the shop, and by the time he gets back to you your face is caked in cold lather.

"This usually happens four or five times while you are getting shaved, and you may consider yourself lucky if a salesman for a perfumery or soap house doesn't come in to talk up his wares. In that event you are bound to be kept waiting for 10 or 15 minutes, and when you are finally shaved your peace of mind is destroyed for the rest of the day. No boss barbers in mine. I know 'em too well, and I wait every time."—Exchange.

$16.75 Warranted High Grade

We Dare to Describe All Our Sewing Machines, a thing that dealers in cheap rattle-traps dare not do. We sell you a high-grade machine at less than half factory list, calculating that each machine put into a home will sell many others for us without great expense. This machine—Corolla No. 4—is constructed of the best material in use, every bearing being of steel or case-hardened. The woodwork is of best quality, either Light Antique or Golden Oak finish. The motion is easy and light. It does not vibrate. It is a lock-stitch shuttle. The operation of the feed mechanism is positive, giving an accurate 4-motion movement to the feed without the use of springs. It has a self-lubricating needle-bar, which is always kept clean, well oiled, and the oil cannot drop on the work. The needle is absolutely self-setting. There is but one hole to thread through—the needle's eye. It is thoroughly inspected and tested before leaving the factory, and is strongly crated, each being accompanied by the factory warranty for 10 years. Accessories and Attachments complete free. TERMS: $4.00 cash with order; balance C. O. D. At our remarkably close price this machine (usually sold at $25 to $35) will sell itself at sight. Your friends need but to see it to buy it. Customers may retain $1.00 from every cash order they send us (remitting $15.75 net).

SPECIALISTS FAILED.

Mrs. C. A. Merrill, of Chetopa, Kans., suffered from a peculiar nervous trouble which baffled the skill of leading specialists. She says: "I cannot say enough in praise of Dr. Miles' Nervine. I suffered agonizing pain in left side of my head and I thought it would drive me insane. Specialists in Cincinnati and Kansas City treated me without benefit. Then I began taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and obtained prompt relief, and finally a permanent cure."

THE LIFE INSURANCE CURE.

A Dying Bachelor Who Became Interested in a Plan for a Novel Funeral.

"I don't know that life insurance is a cure for disease," said the retired life insurance solicitor, "but I know of an instance which makes it look that way. In the town where I first began business was a bachelor of about 50 years, who was quite alone in the world, and had some years before taken out a five-thousand-dollar policy on himself for the benefit of a maiden sister, who had died a year before the events of this story. He kept his policy going, however, because it was a good way to save money, and one day he was taken down with some kind of fever. He grew worse day after day, until one day the doctor told him that he would in all likelihood be dead within the next twenty-four hours. This suggested his life insurance money, all he had to leave, and he immediately began to talk with the doctor on the subject of a proper disposal of it. He concluded after some thought that the best thing to do with it was to blow it in on a tremendous big funeral for himself, including a banquet for all the people he knew. This was an entirely new idea for a funeral, and when the doctor left him that night to the care of his nurse his mind was entirely occupied with his funeral. He talked to the nurse about it and when the nurse made him stop he lay and thought about it. In fact, he became so much interested in the details of his funeral that he quite forgot about having to die to make it possible. In the morning when the doctor came he found his patient in a wild perspiration and his pulse beating in much better fashion than it had been doing for some days. He also found the general condition of the patient much improved. He was greatly astonished, and at once began to ask questions. The patient told him with eager interest of a lot of new things he had thought of for the funeral and some that bothered him a good deal and said he had been thinking of it all night. Then the doctor laughed and told him he guessed the funeral would have to be postponed, for he wasn't going to die, just then anyhow. Nor did he, and he isn't dead yet, but he is married and has his policy paid up for his wife's benefit."

SMALL PIPES

And Mild Tobacco Satisfy the Desires of Japanese Smokers.

Washington Star: "You may have noticed that the Japanese who visit America are very moderate smokers," said a prominent Japanese now traveling in the United States. "Those of my countrymen who indulge in the weed mostly smoke cigarettes or preferably the smallest pipes filled with the mildest tobacco obtainable. Of course there are Japanese who, like some Americans, have such a craving for tobacco that nothing less than the strongest cigar or the largest pipe will satisfy them. But such smokers are exceptionally few among the Japanese. As a rule, my countrymen, while at home and abroad, are satisfied with short smokes, such as a cigarette or a tiny pipe affords. The Japanese are moderate smokers, not so much because they are small people, but for the reason that up to within recent years but very little tobacco came into Japan and the tariff on it was very high. Being a poor but frugal race, the masses purchased only limited quantities of the weed, which, as a matter of economy, they have for generations been taught to smoke in only the tiniest of pipes. These pipes, the most popular of which hold about as much tobacco as would fill an ordinary thimble, are the survival of the days when money was scarce, tobacco dear and the tariff high. In another generation or two, when Japan shall have taken her place among the wealthy nations of the world, my countrymen will no doubt smoke large quantities of tobacco, and then the small pipes will be abandoned for big ones, such as Englishmen and Americans now smoke."

How Women Dress in Siberia.

Common-class women in Siberia wear shawls or kerchiefs on their heads while the rich women wear no head covering whatever. A traveler recently returned from that part of the world says that a Russian woman who is otherwise trim and modern in dress will go about with her hair disheveled to the point of the ludicrous. Less attention is paid to the head and feet than to other parts of their toilet. "It is odd enough to see them," says this same writer, "defying dripping decks and muddy roads in the thinnest of heelless slippers, while the breezes play havoc with the loose tresses of their hair. Their shirtwaist is a feminine terror, with a broad turnover collar, fancy cuffs, cotton bows, many buttons and numerous frills, in place of the natty American shirtwaist."

A Theater for Workingmen.

Arthur Krupp, a cousin of the great German iron founder, erected a theater a year ago in Berndorf, Austria, for the benefit of the workmen employed in his great steel works at that place. It was to have been dedicated by the Empress Elizabeth, but her assassination occurred just before the time set for the ceremonies. Recently Emperor Francis Joseph formally opened it in the presence of a great crowd. The theater is small, seating but 500 but it is described as being very beautiful in its decorations and adornments and most complete for the purposes to which it is to be devoted.

EASY LIFE IN NICARAGUA.

When the Family Is Out of Money Somebody Goes Out and Gets a Little Gold.

From the New Orleans Times-Democrat: "When I was in the Olancho district, in Nicaragua, last month," said a visitor who is largely interesting in mining in Central America, "I had an opportunity of seeing how the lazy natives tap nature's till when they need some small change. Near our camp by the river was a hut occupied by a typical Honduranian family, consisting of husband and wife, grandfather and grandmother, and a dozen or so assorted children. The only one of the crowd who did anything except rest and smoke was the wife. At intervals of perhaps a week she would sally out with the family tin-pan, erstwhile used for cooking, and proceed to an old placer digging on the river bank. There she would squat, throw a few gourds full of dirt into the pan, fill it up with water and begin the usual circular motion of gold-washing. She was very skillful and would keep a little sheet of dirty water spraying over the edge like a miniature cataract. When the water was exhausted a few spoonsful of sand would be left in the bottom of the pan, and, spreading it out thin, with a bit of stick, she would go over it, grain by grain, looking for 'color.' Whenever she saw a speck of gold she moistened the stick upon her tongue and picked up the particle by adhesion. Each bit of the precious metal was stored away in a quill plugged with clay at the ends, and I have know her to take out as much as a quarter of an ounce in the course of a day. Usually her limit was about $2, and when she got that she stopped. Then the head of the house would arise languidly and start for the nearest store twelve miles away. Sometimes he would trade the whole amount for whiskey, but as a rule he brought back tobacco, salt, meal and calico. There are hundreds of native families who live in exactly the same manner in Olancho. Sometimes the woman will be lucky enough to strike a rich pocket, that will yield a dollar or more a pan, but they never dream of washing it out at once and getting a stake. It simply means that they can secure their usual amount with less work."

ANOTHER AIRSHIP.

Inventor Declares It Will Remain in Air a Week at a Time.

The Swiss newspapers announce the forthcoming "launch" of a new airship over—not on—the Lake of Constance, says the London News. Its inventor is Count von Zeppelin, a retired German officer, who has for many years studied the question of steering balloons. He now claims to have solved the problem of the light motor. An aeroplane built by him is reported to have developed sufficient power to tow a boat on the River Inn at a speed of nine miles an hour. To minimize the risks of an unforeseen fall the count has selected the Lake of Constance as the scene of his decisive experiment. Its area of over 300 square miles will, he believes, be sufficient to enable him to execute all necessary evolutions. The vessel is "moored" at Friedrichshafen and is supported by sixty pontoons. There is a gas works in the vicinity. The inventor keeps the mechanism of his airship secret and has taken stringent precautions to ward off the curious. All that is known is that the vessel's proportions are immense—over 550 feet long and nearly fifty feet in diameter. It is cylindrical, with conical extremities, and is divided internally by strong partitions. The "hull" is of silk, stretched over a skeleton of aluminum. The power is supplied by two motors, placed beneath the cylinder, one at each end. The propelling principle is the ordinary screw, but there are three special devices for steering. Count von Zeppelin declares that his machine will be able to rise to a height of over 3,000 feet, lift a weight of nearly two tons, travel at a speed of ten yards a second, and remain in the air for a week at a time.

Meteors Prefer Morning.

An interesting and significant fact is that the average hourly number of meteors is only half as great in the evening as in the morning, and in the evening their velocity is lower, says Prof. C. A. Young in the New Lippincott for November. The reason is that at sunset we have before us the point in the heavens from which we are moving in our orbital journey around the sun, while in the morning we face the point toward which we are advancing; in the evening we are in the rear of the earth, at sunrise in front. This increase in the numbers and speed of the morning meteors is just what ought to happen if they are bodies moving indiscriminately in all directions under the sun's attraction, and with the velocity (about twenty-six miles a second) which a body would acquire in falling toward the sun from a distance very great as compared with the size of our planetary orbits.

Strange Story of a Watch.

A strange experience recently befell George Dietz, formerly a resident of Chester, Pa., but at the present time in the jewelry business in Honolulu. Mr. Dietz has recovered a watch which he lost over thirty years ago at Gettysburg. He was fighting for the north on that bloody battlefield when he dropped it. The watch was recently brought into the jeweler's shop by Harry Ellis of the Kansas volunteers. The soldier, who was bound to Manila, wanted to sell it. On being asked where he got it he said his father, who had found it on the battlefield of Gettysburg, had given it to him. The jeweler opened it and saw his name scratched on it. He lost no time in making a trade with the soldier.

PET SUPERSTITIONS.

Some That Influence All Sorts of People.

Dr. Samuel Johnson would never enter a room left foot foremost; the brave Marshal Saxe screamed in terror at the sight of a cat; Peter the Great was not equal to crossing a bridge when he came to it, unless to do so was absolutely necessary; Byron shared with less famous people than he the dislike to having the salt at table spilled between him and his neighbor. A sneeze is with half the nations of the world nothing to be sneezed at. To exclaim "God bless you!" when any one sneezes in your presence is a relic of what what the Roman did before us, and before him the Greek. Mohammed gives directions of the same kind to his followers, and the Hindu of today utters his pious ejaculation after the sneeze by way of prayer or good wish on behalf of the victim. Many people will avoid going under a ladder if they can get around it. The belief that if you put on your stocking the wrong side out it is lucky is very general, or was until the schoolmaster returned from abroad, and I myself remember an old woman who was convinced that turning her stocking inside out saved her from being lost when the fairies, one pitch-dark night, had misled her on a trackless English moor. What is to take the place of a lucky horseshoe when we all ride in automobiles? There is no room for the imagination in them. Some new mascot will have to be discovered. Charms of one kind or another are carried by people that have a pious contempt for heathen superstitions; a small potato, for example, to avert rheumatism, or a chestnut. The late journalist, George Augustus Sala, never traveled without carrying with him, as a lucky card, an ace of spades. Somehow it failed to save him from his creditors. But creditors are notoriously deficient in imagination. If Shylock had remembered this when he drew up his bond, "The Merchant of Venice" would never have been written.—Rochester Post-Express.

HANGED FOR BURNING COAL.

Strange Law Which Was in Force in England in 1500.

There will be an interesting function in London shortly, when the coal exchange celebrates its jubilee. The occasion is one for recalling strange reminiscences, for as late as the fourteenth century a prohibition was issued against the burning of coal, with severe penalties decreed against any person who warmed his house by a coal fire. In the early days of Lord Mayor Whittington the burning of coal was considered so great a public nuisance that it was made a capital offense, and one man was actually hanged for indulging in a coal fire. As a matter of fact, this ordinance was never repealed, but in "Dick Whittington's" third mayoralty it is evident [illegible] was a great trade in coal, and the suggestion has been made that coal was brought to London in boats known as the "cats," this was the real origin of the story of Dick Whittington and his cat. The coal exchange, however, is a modern institution. It is also one of the most important of London's marts. Under the shadow of its domed roof commercial transactions are daily carried through of greater value than in connection with any other mercantile building in the world. Unlike the corn exchange in Mark lane, it is not a private concern, but is a city market conducted on the same principles as the other markets opened by the city corporation. Opened with much ceremony in October, 1849, by the prince consort, the present building is just about to celebrate its jubilee. But the market itself is older than the building. Up to 1807 it was in the hands of private individuals, but in that year it was purchased by the corporation for £25,-[illegible]00.—London Times.

A Curious Accident.

A curious accident took place at Brookfield, Ind. A local freight train was backed into a siding to allow a fast freight train to pass. The switch was left open, however, and the fast freight, traveling at the rate of thirty miles an hour, dashed into it. The crews of both trains jumped. The impact of the collision was so severe as to drive the tender of the stationary train off its truck, and telescoping a cattle car, which was loaded with coal, it rested half on the top of the third car. On the fast freight a car loaded with hogs was telescoped by one loaded with shelled corn, and the animals not killed in the collision were smothered by the corn. It is said that the locomotives are so interlocked that dynamite will be required to separate them.

Bird Friends of a Boston Policeman.

From the Boston Evening Record: On a short street leading from Washington street every noon there is a little occurrence in which a policeman figures, and which attracts the attention of many passers-by. The officer comes there to ring in a duty call and then gets some peanuts from a near-by stand and begins to whistle. In a moment dozens of pigeons begin circling around him, and he shells the peanuts, holds out his hand, and the pigeons light on his arm and hand and eat as many peanuts as they can get. One brown one is particularly tame and greedy, and will eat a pint of them, the officer says. Many people come there every noon to watch the little show.

Weight of American Mails Unknown.

Strange as it seems, the United States government has not taken a complete accounting of the actual total weights of the mail matter carried by it for over twenty years.

QUEER FOSSIL.

Jaw of a Huge Unclassified Animal Found in New Mexico.

Santa Fe New Mexican: The fossil remains of a strange prehistoric animal were discovered recently at Postmaster Nusbaum's ranch, at Tesuque. Alphonso Dockweiler, who has charge of digging a ditch through a ridge on the ranch, picked up a piece of petrified bone the shape of a large tongue, but with a row of twelve teeth along what seemed to be the tip of the tongue. He dug a little further and found the remainder of what seemed to be the jaw of an animal that was part ichthyosaurus and part plesiosaurus, with some of the characteristics of the pterodactyl, perhaps. The jaw consisted of about twenty layers of bone in the shape of a tongue, and each layer was armed with a dozen teeth, which showed that the animal was herbivorous and not carnivorous. These twenty layers were evidently the upper jaw of the animal. Mr. Dockweiler expects to find the lower jaw and perhaps all of the remains of the strange animal. As much as he has found he will bring to this city and from here ship [illegible] to the Smithsonian institution [illegible]gton. Two layers of the [illegible] brought to the city by J. G[illegible] and shown to friends, who [illegible] puzzled by their unusual shape. [illegible] well known that the surroundings of Santa Fe abound with submarine fossil remains which seem to prove that [illegible] long ages by the site of this city was covered by a sea. Only half a mile up the arroyo and canyon that branch off Palace avenue, near the old brewery, pretty petrified seashells are to be found. At many other places there are unmistakable signs of the erosion of the waves and footprints of gigantic prehistoric amphibians, who made their home both in the water and on the land in the days when the highest peaks of the Rocky mountain range were only islands in a vast ocean

$20,000 PAID FOR A BIBLE

Psalterium, Printed in Gutenberg's Shop, Worth Even [illegible].

Fabulous sums are paid for copies of the earliest printed Bibles on account of their rarity. Yet it is known that many more were manufactured than have ever come to light, and every now and then we hear of another copy having been found in some garret or cellar amid the rubbish. The famous "Mazarin Bible" has been sold for more than $20,000, and this is called cheap, as it is one of the finest specimens of the printer's art ever produced, and, most interesting of all, was set up and published by Gutenberg in 1455, after three years of continuous labor. He printed only 100 copies, but eighty-five of these have never been found. It is called the Mazarin because the first copy to be discovered in modern times was in the library of Cardinal Mazarin. But there is another part of the Bible, called the "Psalterium," because it contains the Psalms only, which commands even a higher price, having been sold for $25,000, for but six copies are known to be in existence. It was printed by John Faust and Peter Schoeffer on parchment in Gutenberg's shop, and is the first printed book bearing the year and day of its publication on the title page. This inscription reads, "1457, on the eve of Ascension." Of course, all of the earliest Bibles were printed in Latin. The first complete Latin Bible with a date appeared in 1462, and is valued at $7,000. After that time many editions of the Bible appeared in all languages—German, English, French and Greek—and in 1514-1517 was the first polyglot Bible, one in which the Bible appeared in various languages side by side. The most valuable Bibles all date from the fifteenth or sixteenth centuries. After that no special value is attached to them.

Will Develop Japanese Mines.

The Japanese government intends to introduce in the next session of the diet a law freeing foreigners from all restrictions in regard to the mining business in Japan. The existing law prohibits them from becoming shareholders or partners in any mining company. By the new law such provision will be entirely done away with. It is evident that the government is beginning to realize that foreign capital will not come into the country unless foreign ownership privileges are first conceded. Mining enterprises requiring especially large amounts of capital, such privileges will now probably be granted. And it is likely that they will ultimately be extended to cover foreign ownership of real estate and industrial shares. It is quite evident that the mining resources of the empire are in an undeveloped state, and that they are arousing a growing interest and attention.

An Ancient Coin.

One of the prized curios of the Philadelphia mint is a coin which is 2,000 years old, and which was coined at the ancient mint of that other Philadelphia of the far east mentioned in the Bible. It is still in good condition, and the inscription is perfectly legible. The design on the face of the coin bears a striking resemblance to the Goddess of Liberty of our own currency, and underneath is the one word "Demus," which means, "the people." On the other side is the figure of Diana, with her bow arched, and the inscription, "Diana, Friend of the Philadelphians." When this coin was struck off Philadelphia was the most important city of Lydia.

THE SIRDAR'S CAMEL CORPS.

A Complete and Self-Contained Little Fighting Force.

The saddle was of wood throughout, with broad fans, the splay of which could be altered to suit a camel's back without much trouble by the native saddler attached to each company, says the Cornhill. The pad was removable—leather outside, soft felt inside, the stuffing being of hair, and, by a system of pockets, this hair stuffing could be removed and shifted at will, so as to alter the pressure and prevent it hardening and forming into lumps, the men being taught to constantly remove and pull the stuffing of their saddles. Each saddle was fitted with one large leather "kherg," or bag, containing six days' forage, and with two smaller ones containing the rider's food and spare clothing, besides which each man was provided with two water skins, to be filled according to requirements. Thus equipped, a seven days' desert trip could be undertaken, if there were wells containing sufficient to water the camels about every third day. The men were armed with a Martini rifle and bayonet, and carried [illegible] rounds of ammunition, ninety in bandolier and pouches, the remainder on their saddles, sewn to a roughly made saddle cloth, so as to distribute the weight equally. They were clothed in a brown woolen jersey, cord pantaloons and leather gaiters. The total weight carried when loaded up for a seven days' trip, with filled waterskins, would be a good 100 pounds, which, of course, reduced itself daily as forage and water were consumed. Thus we have a complete and self-contained fighting force, which in its own element, the desert, asks nothing from any one, which disappears and is swallowed up in the trackless waste, to reappear again, after an interval of six days, having accomplished its task.

They Talk by Whistling.

Gomera, one of the Canary islands, is a small island containing about 12,000 inhabitants. It is exceedingly rugged in formation, and the deep gorges and ravines which separate its mountain ranges are unbridged, and, therefore, it may be necessary to travel several miles in order to reach a point only a few hundred yards distant. Therefore, to obviate the necessity of doing this, the inhabitants have developed a whistling language, by means of which two men standing on opposite sides of the gorge can convey their meaning to each other. The teeth and fingers are used as well as the lips. Communications are made by notes in the whistle corresponding to syllables. The whistle, of course, carries much farther, and is much more distinct, than articulate speech could possibly be under the circumstances.—Stray Stories.

Afghan Justice.

Not many years ago a queen's messenger or some such official was robbed though not injured in any way, on his road to Cabul, Afghanistan, and the British government, of course, wrote to complain. No reply was received for months, but, at last, the Ameer wrote: "The matter you mention has been thoroughly investigated, and not only have the robbers of your messenger been put to death, but all their children, as well as their parents and grandparents. I hope this will give satisfaction to her majesty, Queen Victoria." The "satisfaction" of the queen may be imagined.—Baltimore News.

THE KING OF PALI.

Surrounded by His Followers, a Truly Medieval Picture Was Presented.

My first sight of the king of Pali was most imposing, says the Geographical Journal. Having heard of the approach of my party, he came out to meet us. We had stopped the night before at the small village of Jepiroh, beautifully situated on high ground and chiefly remarkable for the numbers of small green and red parrots that swarmed in the guinea cornfields all round it. It was the only place where I saw them in any quantities. We started off about 6:30, while the heavy dew was still sparkling on the grass, and soon met the head of the Pali contingent. First came 150 bowmen carrying nothing but their weapons and wearing only the smallest of loin cloths. At regular intervals among them were mounted officers. Next came a bodyguard of twenty picked men dressed in red gowns with white plaits down the back and armed with every imaginable kind of gun, the locks of which were incased in leather. After passing these men I came on a really beautiful sight. The king had drawn up under the trees on one side of the path, and some forty or fifty mounted followers had arranged themselves all around and behind him. They were dressed for the most part in white gowns, but generally with either a colored lining or another colored gown underneath. Voluminous white or blue turbans covered their heads and some of them wore very handsome riding boots, though the majority were barefooted. The high-peaked saddles were covered with brightly colored saddle cloths and the horses' heads were almost hidden by enormous bridles, covered with tin ornaments, which kept up a perpetual jingling as they tossed their heads about to keep off the flies. On my approach they waved their spears over their heads with the butt to the front in token of friendship. This, with the king in the center wearing a cap of chain mail under his turban, and bowing with courtly grace made a truly medieval picture.

The Oceanic's Godmother.

Virgil's often quoted "Dux femina facti" will not let us forget that it was a woman who founded Carthage. Since Queen Dido's day women, perhaps less famous but no less worthy, have been leaders in enterprises as far-reaching as the creation of that ill-fated kingdom. A New York letter in the Boston Post relates a pretty story of one who founded a floating kingdom; at least, we are told, the idea of the largest ship in the world was born in a woman's brain. When Mr. William J. Pirrie, head of the ship-building firm of Harland & Wolff, at Belfast, proposed to run for parliament, his wife dissuaded him. "Don't go to parliament, Willie," she said. "You can build boats better than you can make speeches." "By Jove, you are right!" exclaimed her husband, and forthwith set about making plans for a marine monster that should surpass anything afloat. The result in due time was the great White Star liner Oceanic, 704 feet long, with engines of 28,000 horsepower, and room to accommodate 2,100 people. Mr. Pirrie's tribute to his fair and brilliant helpmeet is quoted as follows: "It is my wife who is responsible for our big boat. In fact, she knows as much about it as I do. She followed the plans as keenly as I did for the two and a half years which we took in designing the building of the Oceanic. It was she who suggested many clever things about the arrangement of the ship. She suggested all the decorations." Apparently Mrs. Pirrie's suggestions determined the great size of the steamer, rendering it almost independent of weather and sure of its time schedules, its merit as an economical coal consumer, its exceptional space for passengers, and its sacrificing of high speed to comfort.

Nervous Prostration Defined.

"Won't you tell me what is really nervous prostration?" queried a man of a woman. "I hear of this one of my acquaintances [illegible] (feminine) and of that being a victim of this fashionable disease, but I have not the slightest idea what the symptoms are." "I do not know how to describe it exactly," she [illegible] "It's when you order a poached egg for breakfast, for instance, and they bring you a fried one, and you [illegible] tears; or when you go into the kitchen [illegible] the cook sends you word she wants a new saucepan; or when [illegible] your husband an unfeeling brute, because he tells you to cheer up and asks you to go to the theater. Those, or something like them, are the premonitory symptoms the next [illegible] mild lunacy."

A [illegible] Traveler.

Customer (Backhampstead, Ct.)—Wal, I don't know about that calico; I think I've seed better. Storekeeper—Nancy Jane Bosworth, there ain't no better calico than that on airth! I know—for I have traveled! I have been to Springfield, I have been to Hartford, and I have been to New Haven! In fact, Nancy Jane Bosworth, I have traveled this wide world over! So you can safely take my judgment 'bout that calico!—Puck.

San Diego, Cal., has a lemon grove covering 1,000 acres. It is said to be the largest in the world. It was begun in [illegible] with 176 acres.

Strange Comrades for Men.

Dr. R. Hauthal, an Argentine savant, has put forward a startling theory concerning the remains of gigantic sloths, related to the great megatherium and the mylodon, recently found in Patagonia. In his opinion, these animals, whose race is now extinct, were kept in a domesticated state by the prehistoric inhabitants of Patagonia. A cave at Ultima Esperanza, where many indications of the former presence of the huge sloths have been found, is regarded by Dr. Hauthal as having been used by the ancient Patagonians as a stable for the beasts.

To Stamp Out Consumption in Germany.

An organized attempt is being made to stamp out consumption in Germany by scientific methods of treatment. Already twenty sanitoria for patients have been opened, and others are to be provided. A congress is to be held in Berlin for the purpose of making the war against consumption a national movement throughout the German empire.

The Classic Snooze.

Baltimore American: Dinguss—We are to have no more Wagner sleeping cars.

Binguss—No, but the snorers in the berths will continue to render Wagner selections just the same.

Leo's Ecclesiastical Tenure.

Leo XIII. has now been more than sixty years a priest, more than half a century a bishop and almost half a century a cardinal.

Gall[illegible]

Fargo (N. D.) [illegible] to the Minneapolis Times: A new phase of the prohibitory law was tested at Ellendale recently in the case of the State vs. Snow. The defendant was a salesman and drove over the southern part of the state. On one of his trips he gave a woman a drink of whisky out of a bottle he was carrying. There was no evidence to show that he gave the whisky with any intention, or hope, of its being an agent to assist him in his sales, but he was arrested and taken into court on the charge of treating, which is against the law. The jury was out for a long time and finally disagreed. It is the first case in the state against a man on the charge of treating. Many people are unaware of that provision in the law, and it has always been regarded as a dead letter.

Village Election.

The election held yesterday was the quietest that was ever held in St. Hilaire. Only one ticket was in the field and of all the ballots cast not one was scratched. The following elected officers will look after the affairs of the village for the ensuing term:

For President,
CHAS. G. RAPP.

For Councilmen,
DAN PATTERSON,
A. H. WEAGANT,
T. J. THORKELSON.

For Treasurer,
LEONARD HOLMES.

For Recorder,
J. L. JOHNSON.

Will Bloom, who was well known in St. Hilaire, died Monday forenoon at Phoenix, Arizona, where he went a few months ago in the hope that the change of climate would benefit his health. It is understood his remains will be brought to Crookston for burial.

The mail service between here and Lambert could be improved somewhere enroute as for instance the SPECTATOR reaches Red Lake Falls on Thursday and does not reach the postoffice of Brooks—15 miles distant—until Monday and they have the good fortune of having a daily mail service. We are informed that it is a regular weekly occurrance and come from reliable source.

There seems to be a great deal of trouble brewing in regard to the forfeited tax sale. The taxes assesed against much of the real estate, have been paid by the owners, who have Auditor Beaudry's receipt for the same, still they stand against the property and unless something can be done to rectify this error a gross injustice will be done. There is little doubt but what this mistake was caused by the crooked work of Matthews, the defaulting treasurer's clerk. It surely can't be legal for the collection of a debt the second time when a receipt is held for the first payment, if it is legal what is the benefit of a receipt in any case. This will probably have a tendency to invalidate the sale and will put a check upon the liberal investment by capitalists in the sale. —T. R. F. Press.

—For cuts and sores there is nothing better than the Imperial Carbolic salve.

Uneasiness reigns in the McKinley camp for various reasons and especially because of a rumor that Ben. Harrison, who has been jumping all over the republican wobbling on the Porto Rico tariff question, is going to be boomed as an anti-McKinley and anti-English republican candidate for the Presidential nomination. The story, as it comes to Washington, is that Harrison is sure of the Indiana vote in the convention to start with; that he is reasonably sure of the Minnesota vote and has more than a fighting chance to get the Michigan vote, if Mr. McKinley continues his present pro-English attitude towards the war in South Africa, and has supporters in many other states. It is too soon to say how much there is in this alleged Harrison boom, but he isn't the sort of man to say or do anything without an object, and it is difficult to see what other object he can have in thumping the McKinley policy, as he has been doing recently, than to try to get the Presidential nomination for himself.

A. R. De Fluent, editor of the Journal, Doylestown, Ohio, suffered for a number of years from rheumatism in his right shoulder and side. He says: "My right arm at times was entirely useless. I tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and was surprised to receive relief almost immediately. The Pain Balm has been a constant companion of mine ever since and it never fails." For sale at The Imperial Drug Store.

Killing Wild Oats.

I have succeeded in killing wild oats. I had a 30 acre field that would grow nothing else. I plowed it in the fall about two inches keep and harrowed it. In the spring there came a grand crop of wild oats. I left it until June 15th, when I plowed it about five inches deep and sowed a crop of barley on it. When the barley came up I could see a head of wild oats here and there. I went over the 30 acres carefully, but did not get more than two dozen heads, and had a grand crop of barley. I plowed it again in the fall and sowed it to wheat in the spring. There was not a stem of wild oats, but I got about 30 bushels of wheat to the acre.—M. Burke Pembina Co., N. D.

Regulate Your Watch.

At Johnson's barber shop and if it don't keep time, leave it, and we will repair it and warrant it to keep time for one year. New watches, clocks chains and jewelry for sale at the lowest prices. I will be at Johnson's barber shop the 10th 11th and 12th and 25th and 26th of every month. All work left at the shop has my personal attention. When you come to Red Lake Falls make the Palace Jewely Store your headquarters.

I am yours truly
PROF. J. Q. ADAMS,
Watchmaker and Optician.

Attend strictly to the neighbors; watch them; never mind your business, that will take care of itself. If you know, or even guess at anything against one of them, spread it around and never let it rest. Never keep it silent. It is said there was silence in heaven once for half an hour, but you must never let such a thing happen on earth. If you never knew anything bad about a neighbor feel dead sure you have been looking off for a while and that he carried on his deviltry when you didn't know it. Find out all the bad things you can about people and guess at the rest, and you will be happy when you die and so will everybody else.—Freeborn County Times.

—If you are troubled with rheumatism take the Imperial Blood and Rheumatism cure. It will positively cure all diseases arising from impure blood, and is sold under an absolute guarantee to benefit or money refunded. Call for free sample at the New Drug Store.

Why She Stopped the Paper.

She came down the street three steps at a time, and sailed into our printing office like a whirlwind. She waited for no ceremony, but wildly asked: "Is this the paper printing office?" "Yes, madam." "Stop it right away, too." "It's stopped," the foreman said, as he drew a blue pencil line across her husband's name on the subscription list. "There, now" she said, "maybe that will learn you some hoss sense and how to do the square thing next time, and not slight people just because they are poor. If some rich, stuck-up folks happen to have a bald headed, knock-kneed, cross eyed, and toothless brat born to them you're in an awful hurry to put it in the paper and make it out an angel, but when poor people have a baby you can't say a word about it, even if it is the purtiest baby borned. That is what I am stopping the paper for. This ort to be a lesson to every paper in Cass county," and she went out as mad as an old wet hen.—Cass County (Kas) Democrat.

My mother suffered with chronic diarrhoea for several months. She was attended by two physicians who at last pronounced her case hopeless. OUR MEDICINE.

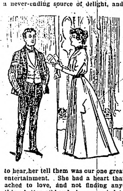
I don't know why Jay and I were so reckless as to marry. We had nothing to live on. At least, Jay didn't make enough for two. He was an electrician, with experimental tendencies. Mrs. Nora Brandon, who rented a back flat down in the store district, let us have one room of her, and after Jay had finished putting all of his electrical appliances in it there was a corner or two left for the bed and a table with an oil stove on it. Fortunately, we had a big closet. I stored this as a sailor stores his locker, and so managed to live with a semblance of order.

We were happy—very. Every morning we congratulated each other on being alive. We ate our breakfast of coffee and toast merrily, taking turns in the reading aloud from some book from the public library—our only paper was a weekly—and after that we worked until 5. Then we put on our best clothes, and went out to a nearby boarding place to dine. We could not afford to go to the theater or the concerts or the flower show or to lectures, but we joined the crowds which were going to these places and walked along with them to the door, and then passed on with an air of having something more entertaining in mind than the amusements that tempted the mob.

Sundays we went to the most beautiful church in the city, and we were devoutly thankful for many great blessings. But we were poor. It is difficult to exaggerate our poverty. We used to sit before the dismal steam radiator with our dear old Nancy McMahan and wonder how anybody could be so poor who was not defective in sense or limb. Nancy McMahan, like ourselves, sublected from Mrs. Nora Brandon. She had a room at the end of the hall, and she compounded a hygienic face powder which she sold from door to door.

Nancy was altogether the most interesting person we had ever met. She had green eyes, so clear and luminous that it seemed almost possible to see through them. Her forehead was high and unshaded by curls of any sort. Indeed, her pale hair was brushed back relentlessly from her brow. Her mouth was large and kindly. Her complexion white and wax-like. She had been born in an orphan asylum and her life had been one of the strangest vicissitudes. Her adventures were a never-ending source of delight, and to hear her tell them was our one great entertainment. She had a heart that ached to love, and not finding anything better at hand she consented to love us.



We returned it in kind, and got into the way of sharing everything with Nancy. We hardly enjoyed our own jokes till she had given them the approval of her laughter. She knew our hopes and expectations and in our happy selfishness we overlooked the fact that she had neither hope nor expectation.

Late one winter after our dear friend had worn herself out with ineffectual tramping of the icy street in the bleak wind, she fell ill with pleurisy, and though we gave her our unremitting attention, pawning some of our trinkets to buy her medicine, she died. Nora Brandon and Jay and I saw her laid away among the poor.

"This is but a lodging for the night," said my husband, weeping, "some day she shall lie in a better place than this and have her own headstone." Not that it mattered to Nancy.

We couldn't help laughing when we found that the dear old thing had made a will, leaving everything to us. She had left Jay all of her furniture and the apparatus with which she had made her hygienic face powder, and she had bequeathed me her quaint old clothes and a recipe. The recipe was contained in a letter. It said:

"My Dearest Friend: I shall be dead when you take this in your hand, and so I shall not mind having you laugh at me. The recipe which I enclose was given me by a dying woman—and now a dying woman gives it to you. She told me that she had had a dream that this little formula would bring a mighty fortune to some one, but she felt that the fortune was not for me, but for the one to whom I should give it. For seven years I have dreamed that in your hands it would become a great instrument of healing and bring you wealth beyond your dream of riches. The prescription is for a cleansing medicine which will reach all the secretions of the system. I enjoin you by my love not to delay in your manufacture of this thing. For all the happiness you have brought into my life I shall remain your debtor beyond the grave.

"NANCY M'MAHAN."

Jay was touched and amused, but from the first moment I believed in the thing. I pawned my violin and got money with which to make a quantity of the medicine, and I tried it on Nora Brandon and on Nora Brandon's protesting relatives. I had the delight of knowing that dull, aching heads became clear, that heavy eyes grew bright, that drooping spirits regained their tone, and lost appetites returned.

Then, in spite of my husband's protestations, I went in search of a man with money to invest, and I found one—a young Irishman with a patrimony and no vocation. He was one of those singularly alert young men who develop from his race after two generations in America, and he believed in advertising with a fanatical intensity. He caused packages of "McMahan's Tea" to be thrown at nearly every door in the city.

"In a short time," said he, "we shall see that at least a package is left semi-annually at every door in the United States."

It may seem curious, but returns began to come in almost immediately. It seemed like a sort of commercial miracle. In a short time Jay deserted his electrical experiments. We needed him for an overseer, having more people to manage than we could see to without his assistance.

You know what has followed. You know that of all the great villas that pay tribute to the loveliness of the California climate there is none larger nor more beautiful than ours.

You know that in memory of dear Nancy McMahan 100 orphan children live here in a home on our ranch at our expense, and have the best instruction we can procure for them. We are, indeed, rich beyond our dreams of wealth, as Nancy prophesied. And we do not find our wealth a burden. What we cannot well invest or use we give away. If we sometimes lose we are not distressed. For does not our proprietary medicine continue to grow in fame and popularity?—Chicago Tribune.

CHURCH SMOKING.

Instances in Which the Practice Has Been Authorized.

Although not exactly a popular custom, smoking in churches has been and is more largely indulged in than is generally supposed. The custom is Dutch, that people being most inveterate smokers and rarely seen without their pipe. They even indulge in it in their churches, and spittoons are frequently provided for the better accommodation of those members of the congregation who cannot deny themselves the enjoyment of a smoke. A similar practice exists in several churches in South America. Smoking in churches in this country is said to have been prevalent in the last years of the sixteenth and the beginning of the seventeenth century. At one time smoking was carried to such an excess in Seville Cathedral that the Chapter applied to the Pope for power to repress the abuse. Urban VIII., yielding to their wish, issued a bull, which was promulgated on January 30, 1642. In Wales smoking in church was indulged in as late as 1850. In one church the communion table stood in the aisle and the farmers were in the habit of putting their hats upon it, and when the sermon began they lit their pipes and smoked, but without any idea of irreverence. It is also stated that when the Archbishop of York was on a visitation in St. Mary's, Nottingham, he ordered some of his attendants to bring him a pipe, tobacco and some liquor into the vestry for his refreshment after the fatigue of confirmation. but the rector would not allow it to be done. It was reported recently that at a Presbytery meeting in Scotland an adjournment was made to the churchyard, where all the members lighted up their pipes and had a smoke before returning to their deliberations.

ESQ. OR MR.; WHICH?

A Form of Address Which Is Woefully Abused.

The word "esquire" is perhaps the most woefully misused one in the English language, being used, as it is, so indiscriminately in forms of address. The old Puritan plan of writing simply "Oliver Cromwell," which is used by Quakers to the present day, has much in it to be admired, but most people like a handle to their name, and a youth of 16 will address his chum of like tender years as "John Brown, Esq." It may be interesting to know, therefore, that only the following persons are legally "esquires": All sons of peers, baronets and knights; the eldest sons of the younger sons of peers, and their eldest sons in perpetuity; the eldest son of the eldest son of a knight, and his eldest son in perpetuity; king of arms; heralds of arms; officers of the army and navy ranking as captains and upwards; sheriffs of counties for life; J. P.'s of counties, while in commission; sergeants-at-arms, sergeants-at-law, and queen's counsel; companions of the Order of Knighthood; the principal officers of the queen's household; deputy lieutenants; commissioners of the court of bankruptcy; masters of the supreme court, and those whom the queen may see proper to style "esquire." All others have no right to anything beyond the simple prefix "Mr.," and the present universal use of "Esquire" is nothing more nor less than a piece of general presumption.—London Daily Mail.

London's Libraries.

An interesting return has been obtained a half-penny rate suffices to meet the expenditure. The total number of books in use at the various public libraries of the metropolis is £61,050, in an area of the statutory rate for home reading, 127,272 for reference only and 2,624 for the use of juveniles alone at certain of the libraries. Of the total available for home reading 193,132 are works of fiction, and 278,499—or fifty per cent—non-fiction. During the last year 3,893,670 books were issued to readers, of which 3,120,118, or eighty per cent were fiction and 773,553 non-fiction. For reference purposes 554,642 were issued on the premises in the same period and 66,540 to juveniles in the libraries, where there is a department for children. These figures show great preponderance of readers of fiction.—Newcastle (Eng.) Chronicle.

Cleanliness.

One of the most important factors in maintaining health in good order is cleanliness. It is comprised in measures that tend to keep the organs clean and in proper order to perform all their functions. The cleanliness of the skin and the air (purity of the air) that we breathe in are essential for the proper keeping of one's health. Any impurities that are taken in breathing find their way to the blood, and thus serve so many centers of disease, and are the cause of many infectious diseases. Again, if the skin is not kept clean the impurities that are to be secreted are unduly accumulated in the blood and tend to give rise to severe and often dangerous disorders, such as skin diseases and blood-poisoning.

I Cannot Sing the Old Songs.

(Old Favorite Series.)

I cannot sing the old songs
  I sung long years ago,
For heart and voice would fail me,
  And foolish tears would flow;
For bygone hours come o'er my heart
  With each familiar strain,
I cannot sing the old songs,
  Or dream those dreams again.

I cannot sing the old songs,
  Their charm is sad and deep;
Their melodies would waken
  Old sorrows from their sleep;
And though all unforgotten still,
  And sadly sweet they be,
I cannot sing the old songs,
  They are too dear to me.

I cannot sing the old songs,
  For visions come again,
Of golden dreams departed,
  And years of weary pain;
Perhaps when earthly fetters shall
  Have set my spirit free,
My voice may know the old songs,
  For all eternity.

Every Woman Wants a Pretty Home.

The deftness of woman's fingers enables her to turn and twist the things that are old into decorations that are new and lovely in effect. She can select harmonious colors when she buys inexpensive furnishings, and so tone the aspect of her home that rest and ease may welcome every new visitor; she may become so essential to the happiness of each child in the home that its first inquiry when returning from play or from school will be, "Is mother home?" She may live her young years over again with the loving childhood about her, if she will share the joys and sorrows of her boys and girls. To every woman a home is essential, whether it may be her own or somebody else's. But wherever she lives it is right that she should bring the heart into her life. Love begets love, and, wherever it is present the joys of daily life counterbalance the ills. How to make a home? Why, let the two who build it be of one mind—that it is to be the happiest spot in the whole earth. Include in your desire not only the purpose to make yourselves happy, but to brighten the lives of everybody else. And be sure to keep your windows open to the sunlight. So many times the best rooms in our homes are treated as if they were too good for everyday life. And their chill and discomfort when experienced by an unexpected guest make her dream of "cellar damp and creeping things." Let life in the home be free and easy and yet orderly. But do not despair if the sticks of wood piled for use in the parlor fireplace are not perfectly straight and just the right length. And do not feel it a duty to brush the carpet each time a neighbor calls to see you, else you will become the victim to a dust pan and brush.

Care of the Eyes.

One of the simplest and best remedies for inflammation or strain is to bathe the eyes in warm water. Another good remedy is a solution of salt and water made by putting a teaspoonful of fine table salt into a half pint of water. Let it boil and when cold strain it, removing all particles or sediment. Putting this on the outside of the lids is simply a waste of time. The eye should be opened, the lids drawn back and the inflamed portion touched with a camel's hair brush dipped in the salt water. Outside applications do not reach the seat of the ailment. A teaspoonful of boracic acid in half a pint of water prepared in the same way is excellent. If there are granulations and very serious inflammation, boil a teaspoonful of alum in a pint of water until it is dissolved, then strain or filter as described, and apply with a camel's hair brush several times a day. This is one of the most efficacious of remedies. The care of the eyes is perhaps one of the most imperfectly understood of any of our daily duties. More ills arise from their misuse than the public generally appreciate. Epilepsy is a frequent result of eye strain and a careful and intelligent observation will convince most people that more headaches come from abuse of the eyes than from any other cause. Probably one-sixth of the adult population of this country would be benefited by the use of glasses, at least during their working hours. They tire quickly, the headaches, the digestive apparatus is completely upset, there is pain in the back and a general feeling of dizziness and nausea, and the true cause is never suspected. The patient is bilious or nervous; has indigestion or liver complaint. The evil is attributed to everything but the proper cause. Fit the person to good glasses and the difficulty vanishes almost as if by magic.

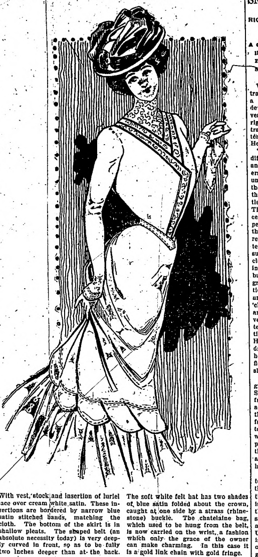
Washing the Face.

There are some misguided persons who object to washing the face often, especially with soap, thinking this is an injury to the complexion. Those, however, who have made a specialty of skin diseases, will say that no part of the body needs soap so much; that the face being constantly exposed to dust, collects so much that it is not enough to wash it in clear water. They agree that if soap makes the face shiny as so many claim, it only shows that it is the more needed, and that the work of drying after the bath has not been properly performed. The face, however, should not be wet immediately before or after going out. Its most thorough ablutions should be performed at night before going to bed, and the following method should be observed in the process: Fill a basin with soft, warm water, lather a medium sized sponge with good soap, and wash carefully. Then take fresh water without soap, and wash again with the hands, and rub thoroughly with a Turkish or crash towel until the face is dry and tingling. This will do much towards improving and preserving the complexion.

The Bed Luxurious.

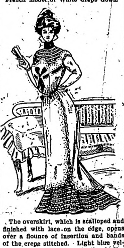
So prominent are the beds in handsome sleeping rooms nowadays that it is no wonder their clothing shows all the art and lavish beauty and lace of a fashionable woman's wearing apparel. Sheets of especial fineness are made with broad bands of drawn work running about the four sides and linen lace whipped on the edges. The costly California blankets are sent to a needle woman before they are ready for use to have their edges lightly scalloped and buttonhole stitch with silk and a monogram worked in the corners. Duvets covered with china silk show a fluff of valenciennes frills and pinked flounces about their edges, and the huge sham pillows used by day are upholstered exactly to accord with the duvet. Added to this luxuriousness there are beds with big sachet pillows that lie all day between the sheets and when taken out at night surround the sleeper with a sleep inviting fragrance of violets or rose leaves.

DULL BLUE PASTEL CLOTH



With vest, stock and insertion of luriel lace over cream white satin. These insertions are bordered by narrow blue satin stitched bands, matching the cloth. The bottom of the skirt is in shallow pleats. The shaped belt (an absolute necessity today) is very deeply curved in front, so as to be fully two inches deeper than at the back. The soft white felt hat has two shades of blue satin folded about the crown, caught at one side by a strass (rhinestone) buckle. The chatelaine bag, which used to be hung from the belt, is now carried on the wrist, a fashion which only the grace of the owner can make charming. In this case it is a gold link chain with gold fringe.

French Model of White Crepe Gown.



The overskirt, which is scalloped and finished with lace on the edge, opens over a flounce of insertion and bands of the crepe stitched. Light blue velvet ribbon runs through the bodice and ties in front.

Correct Attire for the Bridegroom.

The bridegroom at a morning wedding wears a frock coat, white duck or pique waistcoat, trousers of dark, striped cloth, patent leather shoes, gloves and silk "Ascot" tie—white or pearl gray—and boutonniere of gardenias or other small white flowers. At an evening wedding he wears dress clothes, unless the bride is in traveling costume, when he would wear a morning coat, a colored tie, and no gloves.—February Ladies' Home Journal.

An Emergency Box.

Every mother should have a box, kept in a safe and easily accessible place, containing some of the things likely to be needed in common emergencies, such as pieces of soft old linen and cotton, rolls of bandage from half an inch to an inch and a half wide (these may be made from a worn linen sheet), adhesive plaster for cuts, a wide mouthed bottle filled with bicarbonate of soda—common baking soda—for burns, a bottle of witch hazel for bruises, a roll of absorbent cotton for use in covering the chest when there is a cold there, pieces of flannel to wrap around rheumatic joints, and last, but not least, a hot water bag. To these she may add, if she likes, to do so, such remedies as the state of her children's health makes it likely they may require at a moment's notice—to wit, her favorite croup mixture, toothache tinctures, camphorated oil for the wee bairn who gets "husky" at nights, and so on. She should keep her medicines in a locked box inside the other and give one key to a trusted maid, keeping the other herself and being sure not to mislay it at the very time it is wanted.

Sunlight and Health.

Many persons appear to labor under the delusion that it is necessary to avoid sunlight for fear of spoiling the complexion, when, as a matter of fact, the sun's rays are necessary to give it the delicate tinting of beauty and health. Air is necessary to the first inspiration and the last expiration of our lives, but the purity and activity of the atmosphere depends upon the warming rays of the sun, while our bodies require light for their healthy stimulus. It is well known that without solar heat there can be no proper vegetable growth, and it is equally necessary for the beauty and perfection of animal development. It behooves us, therefore, to see that our homes are open to the sun's rays and are made as bright and cheerful as possible, and they ought to freely admit the sunlight. It is well known that diseases which have baffled the skill of physicians have been known to yield when the patients were removed from dark rooms to light and cheerful apartments. Light is especially necessary for the healthy growth of children.

Eleven "Ounces of Prevention."

Never lean with the back upon anything that is cold. Never begin a journey until the breakfast has been eaten. Never take warm drinks and then immediately go out in the cold. Keep the back, especially between the shoulder blades, well covered; also, the chest well protected. In sleeping in a cold room, establish the habit of breathing through the nose, and never with the mouth open. Never go to bed with cold or damp feet. Never omit regular bathing, for unless the skin is in active condition, the cold will close the pores and favor congestion or other diseases. After exercise of any kind never ride in an open carriage or near the window of a train for a moment; it is dangerous to health and even life. When hoarse, speak as little as possible until the hoarseness is recovered from, else the voice may be permanently lost or difficulties of the throat be produced. Merely warm the back by the fire, and never continue keeping the back exposed to heat after it has become comfortably warm. To do otherwise is debilitating. When going from a warm atmosphere into a cooler one, keep the mouth closed so that the air may be warmed by its passage through the nose ere it reaches the lungs. Never stand still in cold weather, especially after having taken a slight degree of exercise, and always avoid standing on ice or snow, or where the person is exposed to a cold wind.

So He Was Fired.

"It's too bad," said the consoling friend. "I thought you were right in line of promotion."

"No," mournfully replied the man who had lost his job. "I was right in the firing line."—Chicago Tribune.

SNAKE RIVER VALLEY

RICHEST FARMING COUNTRY IN THE WORLD.

A Complete System of Irrigation Relieves the Anxiety About Rain That Prevails in Other Parts of the United States—East and West Compared.

We are permitted to publish an extract from a private letter written by a gentleman who has recently been devoting his time to the personal investigation of practical farming by irrigation in the west. His vivid portrayal of the advantages of that system will no doubt interest our readers. He says:

"There is a vast, an immeasurable difference between farming in the east and farming in the west. If the farmers of the east could only be made to understand the advantages enjoyed by their western brethren, I verily believe there would soon be no land for settlement in the great irrigation states. The irrigation farmer has absolute certainty of crop, and certainty of its perfect maturity. He never plants that he does not reap, and when I say reap I don't mean the reaping of scattered stands of half matured grain such as the eastern farmer cuts at the close of a dry season; but the reaping of fields that frequently average 50 bushels of wheat to the acre—every grain of which has reached the perfection of development. There is no anxious scanning of the skies for the 'cloud no larger than a man's hand' and fervent prayers that it may envelop the heavens and send down water to the thirsty fields. The irrigation farmer never thinks about rain. He watches his growing crops, and the day and the hour moisture is needed, he is out with his hoe flooding his fields with water from canals that skirt them.

"Everything grows in the west that grows anywhere else in the United States north of Tennessee. Potatoes frequently yield 500 bushels to the acre, and barley is grown far better than any raised in the east. The fruits are delicious. I never saw any to compare with those grown in Idaho, where apples, peaches, plums, cherries, pears, apricots abound, and where there are thousands of acres of Italian and German prunes which I am told have made fortunes for their owners.

"To my mind, Idaho is the best watered and most inviting arid state in the Union. I made a careful investigation of the great Snake River valley in that state, along and tributary to the Oregon Short Line Railroad, and saw there evidences of prosperity such as I have never seen elsewhere in the United States. This wonderful valley is said to contain over 3,000,000 acres of arable land. It is threaded with great irrigation canals in every direction, and there are vast tracts awaiting only the touch of the farmer to make them productive. The sun doesn't shine on finer or more fertile land. When I saw the happy homes, the well filled granaries, the sleek, fat stock, and the smile on the face of nature reflected in a smile of contentment on the faces of the farmers, my heart went out in pity to the thousands in the east who are struggling along from year to year, toiling against adverse climatic conditions, and never knowing how soon a drouth will wipe out the profits of prosperous years.

"Lands can be had in this Snake River valley almost for the asking, but they are going, day by day. The Oregon Short Line is making extraordinary efforts to bring the advantages of Idaho to the notice of eastern farmers, and is flooding the country with conservatively written descriptions of the state. Write to the General Passenger Agent of this Railroad at Salt Lake for printed matter about Idaho, and read it carefully. It will be a revelation to you and I sincerely believe will end in your removal to the west."

Tom Stuck Up for Himself.

An English general, in reviewing a corps of cavalry, suddenly stopped before a splendid-looking fellow and asked, abruptly:

"Which is the best horse in the regiment?"

"No. 40, sir."

"What makes you think he is the best horse?"

"He walks, trots and gallops well; is a good jumper; has no vice, no blemish; carries his head well; is in his prime."

"And who is the best soldier in the regiment?"

"Tom Jones, sir."

"Why?"

"Because he is an honorable man, is obedient, tidy, takes good care of his equipment and his horse and does his duties well."

"And who is the best rider of the best horse?"

"Tom Jones, sir."

"And who is Tom Jones?"

"I am, sir."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MAN'S MECHANISM

Delicate Machinery That Needs Constant Care.

Absolute Cleanliness and Regulation as Necessary as for Any Other Kind of Machinery. How to Keep it in Working Order.

There's a screw loose somewhere!

One little screw in the big machine gets a trifle loose and the whole apparatus clogs, balks and refuses to work properly.

A skillful engineer can tell by the "feel" of his engine when there's a screw loose. Occasional constipaton—call it costiveness or biliousness—needs prompt attention. It clogs the whole delicate mechanism of man, and must be removed skillfully without force or shock. Only a vegetable laxative should be used, and Cascarets Candy Cathartic, which you can eat like a piece of candy, are the most agreeable, natural and effective of all laxatives.

Cascarets are the only antiseptic cathartic, and not only make the liver lively, remove obstructions in the bowels, strengthen the intestines, but kill all germs of disease in the body. Therefore prevent as well as cure.

Buy and try Cascarets to-day. You'll find that it's what they do, not what we say they'll do, that will please you. All druggists, 10c, 25c and 50c, or will mail for price. Send for booklet and free sample. Address Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago; Montreal, Can.; New York.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Horticultural Observations.

Irrigation on a large scale is seldom feasible for the middle west. Yet in many places it will pay the gardener to do a little experimenting. From this he may get only an increased fund of information, and he may get real benefits. We do not suggest that the first experiments be on any large scale. There are here and there brooks running through nearly level fields, and such brooks are susceptible of being utilized at some part of their course in irrigating at least a few square rods of garden land or of land on which small fruit is being grown. We hope that many trials of this kind will be entered on, and that the results will be reported to the Farmers' Review. We have in this part of the country some notable examples of the success of irrigating garden patches. At the asylum at Kankakee, Ill., a 40-acre garden patch has been under irrigation for years, and it has produced enormous quantities of garden truck. Here and there successful experiments of this kind are being carried on as far east as the Hudson river. We do not believe it will pay to irrigate gardens, except where the natural conditions are such that it can be done successfully and at little cost, but we are certain that many opportunities of that kind exist that are now not recognized.

* * *

Why not beautify the farm by setting out here and there a few evergreens? Deciduous trees have their advantages, but the advantages of the evergreens are peculiar to themselves. In winter, when other trees are bare, the evergreens have a peculiar interest. Who has not contrasted an evergreen forest in winter with a forest of oaks or other trees? Even in the cold and windy days there is a calm among the evergreens that rests and almost warms one. We do not advise the planting of evergreens in excess, nor in positions where they will surround the house, but in places where they may be of value and beauty. We have seen them planted so thickly about houses that they became a menace to the health of the family. We have seen them planted in lawns by the hundreds and so close that many of them had to die out and presented the appearance from year to year of red and unsightly dead trees. But planted in a grove and on land that is of little value for other things they add to the beauty of the farm. Often there are rocky hill tops that can be utilized. In the east most of the mountains are forested with evergreens that have taken root and developed even where the soil would appear too poor and thin to support anything. This fact should be a suggestion on how to utilize our bare and rocky hill-tops.

Radishes.

To have fresh, crisp, brittle radishes they should be grown quickly—that is, the soil should be quite rich and kept constantly loose and fine as deeply as possible by frequent hoeings. They are quite hardy, and the first sowings may be made in the open ground when the trees are starting in leaf. A selection of varieties maturing in succession should be planted, or else fresh plantings should be made every week or ten days. Small plantings made frequently will give the most satisfactory results for the home garden. For the earliest plantings select the small, very early varieties. Later in the season the larger summer varieties should be grown, and in July and August sowings of the winter varieties should be made. In August and September sowings should be made of small early spring varieties for fall use.

Sow the seed thinly in shallow drills one-half inch deep and cover with fine soil; make the rows far enough apart to admit of frequent workings, and when the young plants are well started thin out the small early varieties to two inches apart in the row, summer varieties to four inches and winter varieties to six inches apart. Gather while young and tender and just before needed for the table.—Burpee.

Conservation of Moisture.

Howard B. Cannon, writing in the Michigan Farmer, tells of a visit to the Michigan Agricultural College and of his attendance at a lesson in soil physics. In part he says:

On one table there stand twenty cylinders of galvanized iron. Each cylinder is so constructed as to allow a column of soil thirty inches deep to stand with its lower end touching water. There is no evaporation allowed save from the upper end of the cylinder, where the soil is exposed to the air. The area of this surface is one-tenth of a square foot, which makes comparison with field areas easy; all results may be figured in terms of acres and tons. The twenty cylinders were used to study the effect of cultivation to various depths, and also the effect of various mulches, sets of ten being used for each purpose. The cylinders in which the effect of cultivation to various depths as shown in terms of water evaporated during the period, were carefully filled with good soil. From two cylinders soil was removed to the depth of one inch; this portion was worked up in the hands till thoroughly loosened, then it was replaced and the excess struck off. Two cylinders received a similar cultivation two inches deep, two more three inches deep, and two were broken up to the depth of four inches. The remaining pair of cylinders served as checks.

Evaporation for 28 days as follows:

Depth of cultivation.	Evaporation, Grams.	Equivalent expressed in tons per acre.
0 in.	442	212
1 in.	274	131
2 in.	156	74.9
3 in.	107	51.4
4 in.	55	26.41
4 in.	66	31.69
3 in.	96	46.1
2 in.	138	63.3
1 in.	262	125.8
0 in.	461	218

Averaging the results from the individual cylinders there is shown the following results—speaking in terms of tons of water evaporated from one acre: No cultivation, 215.1 tons; one inch deep, 128.7 tons; two inches, 70.6 tons; three inches, 48.75 tons; four inches, 29.05 tons.

The set of cylinders used to show the effect of mulches of various kinds of soil were arranged as follows: The cylinders were carefully filled with good soil. Two were left for checks and two inches of soil removed from each of the other cylinders. This was replaced by coarse sand, fine sand, clay and muck.

During the twenty-eight days the amount of water evaporated from each group was as follows: Check, 464 grams; coarse sand, 37½ grams; fine sand, 45 grams; clay, 535 grams; muck 175½ grams. In this it appears that a little fine clay placed above the good soil helps to pump it out.

Preparing Soil for Millet.

The preparation of soil for millet does not differ greatly from the preparation required for growing the corn crop. The millets, like corn, are surface feeders, and so can use the fertility in the soil to best advantage when it lies near the surface. For this reason the plowing does not need to be deep, and the surface of the soil should receive the most attention in the fining. The soils that are heavy with clay should be avoided, and the same is true of soils with more than a fair proportion of sand. It is evident that since the plants feed near the surface a too sandy soil will expose the roots to the effects of drouth. As it is during the heat of summer that the millet receives its time for development it is obvious that it is not advisable to place the roots in a position that will make them certain to be dried out. Millets stand drouth well and grow rapidly, but they must have a fair soil in which to become well established.

For the spring crop of millet the land must be plowed just after the plowing for corn has been finished. It is useless to put the seed in while the ground is cold and damp, for it is subject to the same dangers as is corn; it will rot in the ground and have to be replanted. It might be put in at the same time as corn, but where the corn crop is being put in there is no necessity of putting in the millet till after the corn crop, thus giving time to do the corn planting properly. Millet grows and matures much quicker than corn, hence the lack of necessity for haste.

When soils that contain much clay must be used, a good deal of work will have to be done to get them in shape. This work cannot be done till the ground is dry enough so the clods can be pulverized by the working. It does not pay to attempt to grow millet on badly prepared clay soil. One reason why the preparation is often delayed till after corn planting is that by late preparation the weeds are given a chance to start and are then turned under. They do not again come to the surface till the millet has got to growing, when it will keep them down.

Use Mature Boars and Sows.

James Bray, at a Canadian institute, said: A farmer can go into swine breeding with very little outlay of capital, and the returns to be secured from this branch of stock raising are very substantial. A farmer in going into hog raising must be careful to get the breeds best suited to the requirements of the market, and if districts were to adopt the same breed of hogs it would be to the advantage of all the farmers to breed from immature stock as light weight pork is given the preference in the markets; but in the end the results from this immature breeding are not beneficial. It is only by proper selection and retention of the best animals, as well as the best breeds, that the best results can be secured. The use of mature sires is one of the surest means to ensure improvement and success in swine breeding. The sires should be kept in comfortable and commodious quarters. The sow should not be bred too young, for by so doing her development will be retarded. The sows should be bred as near the same time as possible, so that there will be a uniform lot of pigs to feed and market. Care must be exercised in the bringing up of the litters. They should be fed a liberal allowance of skimmed milk, shorts and ground oats after weaning, and then gradually brought on to barley meal.

After weaning the sows must be properly looked after, they should be well fed and let run on pasture. Great care should be taken not to have the

A Cheap Feed for Swine.

In the cold climate of central Indiana one cannot rely upon pasture to furnish the proper amount of succulent feed for the hogs during the long winter and spring. The only crop that my experiments have shown adapted to this purpose is the beet crop, writes a contributor to National Stockman and Farmer. For this crop one must select rich soil, containing plenty of humus, and be well drained with deep tile drain.

Plow very deep and as early as possible in the spring. Harrow the ground every few days until the latter part of May or the first of June. This makes a perfect seed bed, free from weeds. About this date the temperature will be such that the seed will come up very soon after planting. Drill the seed very thickly in the row with some good standard make of garden seed drill that presses the fine dirt to the seed, as the beet seed otherwise germinates slowly. Let the rows be twenty-eight inches apart, that the beets may be cultivated with the ordinary small cultivator. When the beets are about five or six inches high, thin to a beet every six inches in the row. Late planting and growing the beets thick in the row prevent them from being so large and woody. Some variety of sugar beet, or the improved long red mangel, is preferable. The mangels produce a much large crop, and are much easier harvested, but are not quite so rich in nutrients.

Late in the fall harvest the crop and store it either in long pits or the root cellar, for use during the winter and spring. From twenty to sixty tons of beets can be readily produced to each acre so cultivated, at a cost of from 50 cents to $1 per ton harvested. These beets are simply thrown whole and without cooking, to the hog, and are eaten with great relish.

The Silo and Silage.

H. E. Cook of Denmark, N. Y., is one of the largest and best dairymen in the state. They have about ninety fine Holstein cows. Mr. Cook is a progressive man, but one who is careful to know that he is right before doing anything. He is an Institute conductor and a first-class authority in his line. I think many will be interested in what I heard him say, writes a contributor to Practical Farmer. First, he likes the stave silo, but he does not recommend building one out of 2x4s without matching and beveling. He says that in time, when such a silo dries out, some of the staves will get out of place. Then when it is filled and swells up again it will not be tight and all right. Better use 2x6 lumber, he says, and have it beveled and tongued and grooved. Then it will always stay in place. Again, he thinks there has been too much fear of injury to the silage by freezing. When some freezes next to the outside it will not be materially injured, provided it thaws out before being exposed to the air. Of course he would not feed the cows frozen silage. He does not believe an outside covering and air space is nearly so important as we used to think. He said he would not like to go on record as saying there was no injury to silage from freezing, but that practically it was not enough to worry about. A stave silo can be built quite cheaply if it does not have to be covered on the outside. So this is an important question for northern farmers. Mr. Cook has faith enough in his ideas, so he intends to build two large stave silos next summer in connection with a new barn. About half of each one is to be outside, exposed directly to the weather. The staves will be two inches thick. A cement floor will be put in this new barn also. Mr. Cook lives in a pretty cold country, east of Lake Ontario.

At the great Cortland meeting, Prof. Voorhees said that by giving their cows succulence in the form of corn, silage, and other food to make a fairly balanced ration, they got 34 per cent more milk than from cows fed on a dry ration, such as many farmers still used. He said they could get $10 to $15 more from an acre of corn put in the silo, when making milk, than they could get from the same acre of corn cured and fed as well as it could be done practically. Prof. Voorhees is a practical dairyman, as well as one of our most trustworthy scientists, and we can depend on what he says. In the Eastern States, at least, the day of husking corn and feeding the dry corn stalks ought to be over. Silos can be build cheaply, and the whole crop put in at once where it will keep with little loss. When the stalks are cured the loss is much more often three or four times as much. It is well known now how to put the corn in a silo so it will make good silage. By the way the question has been asked several times at Institutes, whether the grain of the corn was as good when put in the silo as when dried. Many seem to think it is not. Well, it is, or if it falls short any, the rest is in the stalks. Perhaps the corn in drying would take a little more from the stalk, but you get it all in the silage anyway. To make good silage, get a variety of corn that will mature. If rather green when you cut it, let it dry a little. If it is too dry, wet it a little. Build your silo air tight.

Keeping Apples.

I noted that two of your correspondents, in their advice as to the best way for keeping apples, advised that the cellar should be a dry one, writes J. J. Gregory to Rural New Yorker. Here in eastern Massachusetts we don't think that way, but would prefer a damp, cool cellar, especially with the russet varieties, which are inclined to shrivel in a dry cellar. About 50 years ago, when a young college graduate, I was teaching a country academy in Massachusetts. At apple picking time, one of my school boys brought me a Roxbury Russet from his father's cellar, in sound condition that had been picked the previous year. The next day he brought me another that had been picked two years before. This also was sound, but it looked and tasted much as a cellar smells. I investigated, and learned that the apples had been kept in the house cellar, in barrels with bags thrown in on them, and that the cellar differed from ordinary cellars in being quite damp, which would be inferred from the fact that a stream of water flowed parallel with one end of the house and within six feet of it.

The Northern Spy.

Charles W. Garfield of Michigan writes as follows: "There is no apple for all purposes that ranks higher than the Northern Spy. In commending it, however, we are met at the outset with the objection that the man who plants this variety does so with the expectation that his children will reap the reward, and not himself. The quality of the fruit, however, has led to careful experiments by horticultural experts, who find that the Northern Spy can be grown as a top graft and come quickly into bearing. But, it is objected again, the Northern Spy is so tender of skin that it cannot be shipped to a distant market. It is, nevertheless, true that the grower of peaches in California who ships them successfully to London would find nothing in this objection to hamper him, for the quality of the product is such as to make a demand for the fruit at a remunerative price."

Growing Nasturtiums.—The seeds of nasturtiums may be planted in the spring where the plants are to grow, when the trees are well out in leaf, or they may be started earlier, in pots indoors, for planting out in the flower-bed or vases, and giving earlier bloom than from the seed sown in the open ground. When planted in pots not more than one or two seeds should be planted in each pot.

Alfalfa fields do not have to be renewed when once established in a location favorable for the development of the plant. There are fields of alfalfa in Peru that have been growing for 200 years.

A NOTED JUDGE SAVED BY PERUNA.

Had Catarrh Nine Years—All Doctors Failed.

HON. GEORGE KERSTEN, OF CHICAGO.

Hon. Geo. Kersten, a well-known Justice of the Peace, of Chicago, says:

"I was afflicted with Catarrh for nine years. My catarrh was located chiefly in my head. I tried many remedies without avail. I applied to several doctors, but they were not able to cure me. I learned of the remedy, Peruna, through the daily newspapers. After taking the remedy for 18 weeks I was entirely cured. I consider my cure permanent, as it has been two and a half years since I was cured."

Any man who wishes perfect health must be entirely free from catarrh. Catarrh is well-nigh universal; almost omnipresent. Peruna is the only absolute safeguard known. A cold is the beginning of catarrh. To prevent colds, to cure colds, is to cheat catarrh out of its victims. Peruna not only cures catarrh, but prevents it.

All families should provide themselves with a copy of Dr. Hartman's free book entitled "Winter Catarrh." This book consists of seven lectures on catarrh and la grippe delivered at The Hartman Sanitarium. It contains the latest information on the treatment of catarrhal diseases. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio.

Sleep for Skin-Tortured Babies

In a Warm Bath with Cuticura SOAP

And a single anointing with CUTICURA, purest of emollients and greatest of skin cures. This is the purest, sweetest, most speedy, permanent, and economical treatment for torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, crusted, and pimply skin and scalp humors with loss of hair, of infants and children, and is sure to succeed when all other remedies fail.

Millions of Women Use Cuticura Soap

Exclusively for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, in the form of baths for annoying irritations, inflammations, and chafings, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, and especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. No amount of persuasion can induce those who have once used it to use any other, especially for preserving and purifying the skin, scalp, and hair of infants and children. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odors. No other medicated or toilet soap ever compounded is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, viz., TWENTY-FIVE CENTS, the BEST skin and complexion soap, the BEST toilet soap and BEST baby soap in the world.

Cuticura The Set, $1.25 Complete External and Internal Treatment for Every Humor, consisting of CUTICURA SOAP (25c.), to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales and soften the thickened cuticle, CUTICURA OINTMENT (50c.), to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal, and CUTICURA RESOLVENT (50c.), to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, and humiliating skin, scalp, and blood humors, with loss of hair, when all else fails. POTTER D. AND C. BRITISH GOVERNMENT'S VIEW OF THE SITUATION.

Hicks-Beach Tells Bankers the Full Amount of the Loan Will Probably Not Be Required—Prevailing Opinion That the Boer Power Is Collapsing—Lord Roberts Thought to Be Up to Some Mischief—Mafeking Attracts Much Sentiment and Sympathy—Report of a Squabble Between Joubert and Kruger.

London, March 10. — Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, chancellor of the exchequer, when explaining to the bankers the terms of the new loan, gave them an intimation that the government considered the end of the war near. "Since the estimates were prepared," he said, "events have taken place that have changed the situation and probably not all the money will be required."

Whatever the government may know or intend unofficial opinion seems everywhere to think that the Boer power is collapsing. The Eighth division has been under orders to embark for several weeks, but these orders, as far as the artillery contingent is concerned, have been recalled, Roberts having reported that no more artillery from home is necessary. This is the first pause in reinforcements since the war began. Sir Redvers Buller, second in command in the field, and Lord Wolseley are understood also to consider that no more artillery is needed. Lord Roberts has, altogether, 452 guns, including siege pieces.

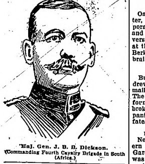
Roberts Up to Something.

It is quite clear that Gen. Buller will not try anything large in the future, as he is to lose Sir Charles Warren and the latter's men, who have been ordered to join Lord Roberts. It is the expectation of the war office that Lord Roberts, notwithstanding the necessity of garrisoning his depots, will be able to operate a constantly increasing force until by the time the Transvaal frontier is reached he will have 70,000 troops. His telegrams dealing with non-essentials are taken to mean that he is up to some mischief, as his apparent inactivity usually spells uncommon activity. Mafeking, as a beleaguered town, attracts much sentiment and sympathy. Nothing has been heard from there since Feb. 10. There is a rumor this morning that Col. Baden-Powell has been relieved, but this cannot be traced to any substantial basis.

May Open Negotiations.

London, March 10.—The Daily Mail publishes the following from Pretoria, dated Thursday, which has been confirmed by the Boer government:

"Conversations I have had with state officials show the Boers want some arrangements. They say if England is waging a war of conquest, they will fight to a finish. Otherwise they believe that a plain statement of the Boer intentions will reveal a basis of negotiation now that England's prestige is repaired. President Kruger and President Steyn conferred Monday at Bloemfontein on the incorporation of the above representations in a cablegram to Lord Salisbury. The preservation of the independence of the two republics is a sine qua non."



Maj. Gen. J. B. B. Dickson.
(Commanding Fourth Cavalry Brigade in South Africa.)

Will Destroy Johannesberg.

London, March 10.—A correspondent of the Daily Mail at Lourenzo Marques, telegraphing Thursday, says: "I am reliably informed that high officials avow that the British flag shall never fly at Johannesberg. The place will be razed to the ground and the mines put in readiness to be electrically exploded as occasion requires. Most of the mines except those the government operates are in a shocking condition. They are flooded and machinery is being wilfully smashed."

Boer Forces Disorganized.

Poplar Grove, O. F. S., March 10.—Gen. French, who is ten miles ahead, reports that his front is clear of the Boers. All other reports tend to confirm the state of disorganization of the Boer forces in the Transvaal as well as Free State. The general impression is that the further progress of the British to Bloemfontein will not be opposed.

Kruger May Assume Command.

London, March 10.—The Berlin correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "I learn there is dissension between President Kruger and Gen. Joubert and the latter has resigned. Probably President Kruger will assume the chief command. Other prominent burghers and commandant are also likely to resign for similar reasons and because President Kruger ignored their advice to make peace overtures after the first victory."

ON ENGLAND'S SIDE.

The Ameer of Afghanistan Publicly and Emphatically Declares Himself.

London, March 10.—The ameer of Afghanistan has authorized his agent in London to publish the following statement of the policy of Afghanistan toward Great Britain and Russia. After saying that he had devoted much anxious thought to the possibility of Russia taking advantage of the Transvaal war to advance through Afghanistan or India, his highness adds: "I have come to the conclusion that Russia feared Afghanistan, as a war with the Afghans would mean a general rising of all Islam, which would spread through Russian Asia. Russia has not troops enough to combat such a rising. Her hold on the Mussulman countries she has conquered is insecure. They hate her, and with ten times her power Russia could not fight Afghanistan and India successfully. After saying that he is willing to send numerous troops to help Great Britain in the Transvaal, and adding that the Afghans are unaccustomed to the sea, and says: "But England's troubles are always my troubles, her strength is my strength and her weakness is my weakness. England must remember that I am always ready to fight for her on land here or in India."

CHEERED THE QUEEN.

Huge Assemblages Greet Her Everywhere.

London, March 10.—The queen, accompanied by the princess of Wales and Princess Henry of Battenberg, drove through the West End yesterday afternoon. There were huge assemblages everywhere along the route who cheered her majesty unceasingly. The bells of St. Margaret's pealed merrily and the members of the house of commons cheered vociferously as the queen passed Westminster. There was a great display of flags, bunting and trophies along the route. The balconies of many residences were draped with red cloth and streams of banners floated across the streets. Her majesty was visibly affected and manifested her extreme gratification at the warmth of her reception. Queen Victoria's evident desire to sacrifice herself in order to please her people was manifested last night by the announcement of her intention to review 2,000 guardsmen to-day. These troops comprise Barrington Campbell's brigades and Scott's grenadier guards who are proceeding to South Africa.

No Distress at La Gloria.

New York, March 10. — E. G. Rideout, general manager of colonizing enterprise at La Gloria, Cuba, writes to say in response to a recent dispatch from Havana, that no colonists are in distress at La Gloria, and that none have ever asked government aid nor received assistance from the quartermaster's department. Mr. Rideout says 300 people are now at La Gloria, and that 90 per cent are happy and contented.

Supplies for Destitute Porto Ricans.

Washington, March 10. — Arrangements are making by the subsistence and quartermaster's department to forward 500 tons of food supplies, including rice and codfish, to the destitute people in the interior of Porto Rico. The supplies will be shipped in transport Kilpatrick, leaving New York on the 14th inst.

Church Row.

Chicago, March 10.—A special to the Record from Fort Recovery, Ohio, says the Christian church there is divided over the innovation of a regular choir organ and missionary and aid societies. Some of the members have asked the courts to appoint a receiver for the church property and have a final accounting rendered.

Rebellion Is Ended.

Santo Domingo, March 10.—The political movement against the government may be considered ended. Gen. Pepin, the former governor of the province of Santa de los Cabeleros, and three of his followers, are being pursued by government troops and it is expected they will be taken prisoners at any time.

Kiled His Own Brother.

Oakland, Cal., March 10.—Alex Carter, thirty-two years of age, in a temporary fit of insanity, yesterday shot and killed his brother Charles, a university student aged twenty-two years, at the house of their parents in North Berkeley. He afterward blew his own brains out.

Killed by a Train.

Burlington, Iowa, March 10. — Andrew Schaeffer was struck by the fast mail last night and instantly killed. The body was thrown fifty yards, and fornd later with the leg severed, neck broken and scalp torn off. Three companions narrowly escaped the same fate.

Knocked Out Oscar Gardner.

Van Wyck Turns Reporters Down.

New York—Mayor Van Wyck of New York has issued a dictum to reporters, in which he positively refuses to be interviewed for publication hereafter.

Village people, do not lead a useless life. By no means. What would comic opera do without its "merry villagers?"

CONGRESS

RESUME OF THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Senate.

Washington, March 7.—Not probably in the history of the senate was there shown such little interest in the final vote on a great measure as was manifested yesterday in the final vote on the conference report on the finance bill. The measure was before the senate two weeks, yet only four speeches were delivered upon it, including Mr. Aldrich's explanation of the changes made in the bill by the conference. Yesterday the discussion on the bill ceased fifteen minutes before the time set for the vote and business on the calendar was taken up to fill in the time. The report was agreed to, 44 to 26, a majority of 18 for the measure. Early in the session the Quay case was resumed, Mr. Simon replying to remarks by Mr. Carter.

The House.

The house spent the day in considering the Aldrich contest case from the Fourth Alabama district. Mr. Robinson, the sitting member, made a speech of an hour in his own behalf. The other speakers were Mr. Burkett, in behalf of the contestant, and Messrs. Glenn of New York and De Armond of Missouri, for the contestee.

The Senate.

Washington, March 8. — The senate seldom accords to any of its members a greater compliment than it gave yesterday to Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts. The announcement that he would deliver a speech on the Philippine question drew to the senate every member now in the city and to the galleries an unusually large number of auditors. Throughout the delivery of the speech, despite the fact that it consumed three hours, the Massachusetts senator was given close attention. Keen interest was aroused in the utterance not only because of the oratorical ability of Mr. Lodge, but also because, as chairman of the Philippine committee of the senate and a prominent member of the foreign relations committee, who has studied the Philippine question exhaustively, he was expected to present a noted addition to the literature on the problem which now confronts congress and the American people. Neither his colleagues in the senate nor his other auditors were disappointed in his address. When he had concluded he was overwhelmed with congratulations from both sides of the chamber. Soon after Mr. Lodge concluded the senate adjourned out of respect to the memory of the late Representative Harmer of Pennsylvania.

The House.

The death of Representative Harmer of Pennsylvania, the "father of the house," cast a deep gloom over the proceedings yesterday. Although he was known to be in feeble health his death came as a shock to his colleagues, by whom he was universally beloved. He was the oldest member of the house both in length of service and in continuous service. Mr. Harmer's desk was draped in black and covered with flowers. The blind chaplain in his invocation referred feelingly to the loss the house and the country had sustained. Upon the request of Mr. Mann of Illinois, in charge of the Aldrich-Robbins contested election case, which was to have been voted upon at 2:30 p. m., the vote was postponed until to-day to allow the house to adjourn out of respect to Mr. Harmer's memory.

The Senate.

Washington, March 9.—Formal discussion of the Porto Rican tariff and civil government bill began in the senate yesterday and continued uninterruptedly for four hours and a half. The principal speakers were Mr. Foraker (Rep., Ohio), in charge of the measure, and Mr. Pettus (Dem., Ala.), but at various times during the debate lively colloquies occurred, in which several senators were participants. After Mr. Mason (Ill.) had entered his motion to discharge the committee on foreign relations from further consideration of his resolution expressing sympathy for the Boers and it had gone over until to-day under the rules. Mr. Pettus delivered a carefully prepared speech in opposition to the pending bill. He argued that it was unconstitutional and in opposition to the principles of this government as laid down by the fathers of the Constitution. Mr. Foraker occupied the floor during the remainder of the session. He explained the measure in detail and gave the reasons why the committee had determined upon the levying of a tariff upon Porto Rican traffic. In his opinion it was impossible for a direct tax to be levied upon the people to support a local government because of their destitute condition. This fact had caused the idea of imposing a small tariff to raise a sum sufficient with the internal revenues to give the people not only local self-government, but to build roads and erect schools. Then, too, it was necessary that the question of extension of the Constitution over our insular possessions should be determined by the supreme court and by the very provisions of the bill it would be inevitable that the supreme court should pass upon that question. Porto Rico and the Philippines, he said, were on the same basis so that the court's decision would determine our right to levy a tariff on products of the Eastern archipelago.

The House.

The house unseated Gaston Robbins, a Democrat from the Fourth Alabama district, and seated in his stead William F. Aldrich, a Republican, who has been three times a contestant from the same district on the ground of fraud and who is now given his seat for the third time by a Republican house. The vote was a strict party one. This case out of the way, a new rule was brought in to set aside the day sessions on the second and fourth Fridays of each month for pension legislation. During the debate on the rule there was quite a lively row between Mr. Mahon of Pennsylvania and Mr. Talbert of South Carolina. Before adjourning the house took up the contested election case of Wise vs. Young from the Second Virginia district, Mr. Weeks (Mich.) giving notice that he would ask a vote on it at 2 o'clock to-day.

The Senate.

Washington, March 10.—Discussion of Mr. Mason's resolution expressing sympathy for the Boers was conducted in the senate yesterday behind closed doors. Mr. Davis, chairman of the foreign relations committee, demanded that the session be executive. He said that public discussion of the subject in the senate might result in disturbing existing relations between the United States and a friendly power. He thought, therefore, that anything of the kind would much better be avoided.

The feature of the open session was a speech by Mr. Lindsay of Kentucky on the Porto Rican tariff and government measure. He opposed the tariff provision of the bill and some parts of the Porto Rican government. He maintained that under the treaty of Paris, which provided that the civil government and political status of the natives of the islands acquired by the United States from Spain should be fixed by congress. Congress had authority to deal with Porto Rico and the Philippines as it saw fit—giving free trade to one and levying a tariff on the products of the other. He opposed the doctrine that the constitution extended ex proprio vigore over the territory acquired by this government.

The House.

The first day pension session of the house provided for under the new rule proved a great success. There was comparatively little friction and ninety-seven bills were favorably acted upon in committee of the whole and subsequently passed the house. The only incident of the session was a brisk exchange between Mr. Loud of California and Mr. Sulloway of New Hampshire upon the general policy of pension legislation, in which the former attacked and the latter defended the system.

The House.

Washington, March 12. — While the senate had the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill under consideration Saturday, a lively debate was precipitated by an amendment proposed by Mr. Hoar of Massachusetts, proposing to give Former Queen Liliuokalani of Hawaii $20,000 and an annuity of $10,000. The amendment was tabled finally without division. The pending bill was passed with a few minor amendments. The remainder of the session was devoted to the eulogies of the late Monroe L. Hayward.

The House.

The house agreed to take up the bill providing a government for Hawaii on April 3, the final vote to be taken April 5 at 4 p. m. Consideration of the Wise-Young election contest was resumed and occupied the remainder of the session. Speeches were made by Mr. Weeks of Michigan, Mr. Burke of Texas, Mr. Hull of Iowa and Mr. Lynney of North Carolina.

News of the Northwest

TELEPHONE REPRIEVE.

Montana Officials Guarding Against the Possibility of Delayed Trains.

Helena, Mont., March 11.—For fear that the train bearing him to Helena might not arrive in time to catch the Butte mail train, upon which he desired to transmit to the sheriff at that place a respite for Joseph Shafer, under sentence to be hanged there, Lieut. Gov. Spriggs telephoned the officials of his intention, and upon arrival here he attached his signature to a temporary respite in order that the supreme court might have an opportunity to pass upon Shafer's appeal. The sheriff replied that he would respect the telephone message in case the papers did not arrive. This is believed to be the first instance where a telephone served such a purpose.

Springfield, Ill., March 13. — A. O. Moffet, cashier of the First State bank at Waverly, Ill., shot and instantly killed a negro burglar in his bedroom. A quantity of stolen valuables were found on the body of the dead man.

Cut Her Husband's Throat.

Joliet, Ill., March 13. — Mrs. John Gallagher, fifty years old, while in a fit of temporary insanity, arose from her bed, procured a razor and cut her husband's throat. The demented woman is now confined in jail.

HAILED THEIR QUEEN.

London the Scene of a Remarkable Demonstration

London, March 10.—Queen Victoria and the people of the greatest city in her empire yesterday celebrated the victories which they believe have transformed the campaign in South Africa from one of reverse into one of success. That is the only explanation for the unparalleled, unbounded enthusiasm with which hundreds of thousands hailed their sovereign. In many respects yesterday's demonstrations outdid those of the diamond jubilee, though there were no glittering pageants, no triumphal arch, no procession of princes, but only a dozen life guards, followed by a little old lady in the plainest black costume, who had come for a six days' stay at Buckingham Palace, as she has done many a time before. Yet her hold upon the hearts of her people was probably never more strikingly manifested. Unlike that of the diamond jubilee yesterday's popular outburst was almost impromptu. The popular pride in the strength of a mighty empire which pervaded the land when the queen last drove through the streets in 1897 had vanished and in its place there were genuine thankfulness and rejoicing for the victories which had succeeded months of gloom. The depth of feeling which these demonstrations represented could only be gauged by those who mingled with the crowd. Mothers in deep mourning for sons killed on the far-off veldt struggled bravely with the most hilarious to catch a glimpse of the queen, whose womanly sympathy and thoughtfulness for the soldiers has touched their hearts.

Often the long vigils were rendered futile by tears that dimmed the eyes and blurred the vision as the royal carriage passed. As one woman said, "I have seen her many a time, but she was sorry for my boy, and I must see her again before I die." Thousands braved the raw east wind and patiently who had often seen the queen and in ordinary circumstances would scarcely budge to watch her pass. Many personal friends of the sovereign, for instance, the countess of Brownlow, a great friend of Victoria and a favorite at the court, sat shivering on the curb for hours with the crowd outside of Buckingham palace. In short it was not so much a desire to see the monarch as it was an overwhelming desire for an outlet for jubilation over the war and the natural inclination to let the queen see and share the gladness of her people, that prompted London so spontaneously to make the day one of the most memorable celebrations of Victoria's reign. It was quite different from the mad rejoicings that marked the relief of Ladysmith. Rowdyism was conspicuously absent, although the crowds reached such proportions that the number of police would have been quite inadequate had the people been obstreperous. Moreover, intermingled with the rejoicings of patriotism there was particularly keen appreciation for the queen's personality. Her womanliness, her great age, the spirit of reverence for sex, rather than for sovereignty, rendered the huge crowds perfectly tractable in the hands of the good-natured police, and it was not a hard task to induce them to surge back and to make way for the royal carriage. When the queen of Great Britain and Ireland and the empress of India did pass, nodding as if to many friends, instead of maintaining the royal restraint, there were heard amid the cheers many heartfelt expressions, such as "God bless her," "God keep her," "My, but she's a brave woman," and scores more like them. It was small wonder that now and again tears of joy rolled down the cheeks of the aged sovereign.

AIMED AT TAYLOR.

Bill Passed by the Democratic Senate at Frankfort.

Frankfort, Ky., March 10—The senate to-day passed Senator Bell's bill, making it a felony, punishable by confinement in the penitentiary from ten to twenty years, for an occupant of a state office to forcibly maintain possession of office for more than five days after the legislature shall have decided some other person entitled to the office. Four Democrats voted against the bill.

MET AN AWFUL FATE.

Six Persons Burned to Deathe in a Lodging House.

New York, March 6. — Six persons were burned to death and two were injured early yesterday morning in a fire which occurred in a seven-story lodging house at 44 to 48 Bowery. The fire was first discovered shortly after 2 o'clock. Smoke was pouring from the windows of the fifth floor and the flames were making rapid progress. The lodging house was cut up into 132 rooms, and ninety of these small places were occupied when the fire broke out. Policemen sent in an alarm and burst into the place to arouse the inmates. They notified the night clerk who immediately rang the alarms all over the house. The hallways were instantly filled with a crowd of excited people. The policemen forced their way to the upper floors in an effort to rescue some of the helpless, or any who might be overcome by smoke. They carried out Thomas Harper, a one-legged man, and Edward Walker, who had been burned and partly overcome by smoke. Stephen Carney was found lying on the floor in his room. The flames had already burned the old man's hands, face and body, but a policeman picked him up and carried him out of the building. The firemen succeeded in putting out the flames without much loss to the building. After the fire was out they began a search. The bodies of all the victims were found on the fifth floor, where the fire did most damage. Buttle was suffocated in his bed. John Clark was found on the floor of his room, dead, as was also Edward Doyle. The colored man was found dead at a window, and the unidentified man had been overcome just as he was dragging himself from the window to the fire escape. The damage to the building amounted to about $2,000. The place was conducted by Dominco Milano, and was a cheap Bowery lodging house.

Boutelle Again a Candidate.

Bangor, Me., March 6.—Congressman C. A. Boutelle has so far recovered from his recent illness that he has decided to seek re-election. His brother yesterday announced the candidacy of the congressman for renomination.

Destroyed by Fire.

Troy, N. Y., March 6.—Fire visited the Willard business block and apartment house on Broadway and caused $100,000 damage. Boughton's hat store and Knowlton's pharmacy were also destroyed.

HEADEDOFFJOUBERT

WAS ON HIS WAY TO SUPERINTEND DEFENSE OF BLOEMFONTEIN.

Boer General Had by No Means Retired From the Campaign—Was Coming Southward With 3,000 Men When He Was Intercepted—Englishmen Pleased With the Satisfactory Manner in Which South African Events Are Proceeding—No Further Resistence Expected in the Southern Part of the Free State.

London, March 17.—Events are moving in the South African campaign in a speedy and satisfactory manner, from both the military and political points of view. It could hardly have been expected by the most sanguine Englishmen that they would take a turn so favorable. It appears that when Maj. Weston cut the railway north of Bloemfontein he thereby intercepted Gen. Joubert, who, far from having retired from the campaign, was then coming southward with 3,000 men, presumably to superintend the defense. Elaborate defense works three miles long had been prepared outside the town.

No Boer wounded were left in Bloemfontein. When asked the reason by Lord Roberts, Mr. Fraser replied: "The burghers don't like fish, and would not care to go to Cape Town." The evidence goes to show that so far as the southern part of the Free State is concerned, there will be no further resistance. It is understood that Mr. Fraser, Mr. Wessels and other leaders are quite prepared to accept the position of a self-governing British colony.

The cheers which greeted the reading in parliament yesterday of the correspondence with the United States are re-echoed throughout the country. The speech of M. Delcasse has and, taken with the general belief that Emperor Nicholas is personally averse to any intervention, these incidents spread the idea that there will be no further serious attempt to interfere from any quarter. Mr. Montagu White's threat in an American newspaper that the Boers will sacrifice Johannesburg and raze it to the ground if necessary, is not taken very seriously. Mr. Chamberlain's statement that President Kruger has already been warned as to the consequence of such conduct is regarded as showing that sufficient precaution has been taken. The Times suggests that the burghers should be warned that their farms will be taxed as a guarantee against any damage to British property, but no serious apprehensions are entertained of such conduct as Mr. White is said to have foreshadowed. J. B. Robinson, the millionaire mine owner, says he does not believe the Boers would be so foolish.

By the time Lord Roberts reaches the Vaal river he will command some 80,000 men, while Gen. Buller will have 40,000. From the military point of view the critics now think there is nothing to fear.

Occupied by Gatacre.

London, March 17. — The war office has received the following from Lord Roberts, dated Thursday, 7:55 p. m.:

"Gatacre crossed the Orange river and occupied Bethulie this morning. Gen. Pole-Carew, with 2,000 men of the guards brigade, two guns and a small body of mounted infantry, left here in three trains this morning to join hands with Gen. Gatacre and Gen. Clements. He had passed Bethany at 4:40 p. m. without meeting with opposition, having been able to supply from his troops engine drivers, firemen, fitters, moulders, smiths, carpenters, etc."

Contempt for Steyn's Flight.

London, March 17.—The Times publishes the following from Bloemfontein, dated Tuesday: "Contempt for the flight of the Free Staters is universal, many people asserting that President Steyn would have been shot if his intention to flee had been known. More harm has been done the Dutch cause by the ignominious surrender than is conceivable, and, despite the statements of the brother of Steyn, it is doubtful that there will be any more resistance south of the Vaal."

Commandos Are Massing.

London, March 17.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Lourenzo Marques, dated Thursday, says that strong commandos are massing at Warrentown, where the Free Staters are going to make a stand.

HURRYING THEM UP.

Delagoa Bay Arbitrators Will Make Their Judgment Known Soon.

London, March 17.—Relative to the delay in regard to the Delagoa Bay railway award the Pall Mall Gazette says it is authoritatively informed that John G. Leishman, the United States minister to Switzer and in addition to persistent unofficial representations, had addressed, on instructions from the state department, a strongly worded official protest to the federal government, a reply to which was received Feb. 16. In this communication the secretary of the tribunal said the arbitrators had arrived at a decision, and the printed judgment would be in the hands of the litigants probably within four, and certainly within eight weeks from that date.

AGUINALDO'S LOSS.

His Secretary Surrenders, and His Son Dies of Smallpox.

Manila, March 17.—Florae, Aguinaldo's secretary of war, has surrendered to Gen. MacArthur. Aguinaldo's infant son, who was captured in November, and who has been suffering from smallpox, is dead.

Will Fly Irish Flag.

Toronto, Ont., March 17.—The Toronto board of control yesterday unanimously passed a resolution that in view of the conspicuous bravery of the Irish troops in South Africa, the Irish flag be displayed on the city hall of Toronto on St. Patrick's day.

Winnipeg Delegates.

Winnipeg, March 17.—Mayor Nilson and Ald. Barclay have been appointed delegates to attend a meeting at Fargo on the 21st inst. to discuss the proposed improvements to Red river navigation.

TO GUARD OUR INTERESTS.

Admiral Kautz Will Take Up Station on the West Coast of Nicaragua.

Washington, March 15.—A telegram was received at the navy department saying that the flagship Philadelphia and the battleship Iowa have arrived at Santa Barbara, Cala. The Iowa is on her way up the Pacific coast to Puget sound, where she will be docked and overhauled generally. The Philadelphia is bound to the west coast of Nicaragua for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of the United States in case of any revolutionary troubles. Rear Admiral Kautz, commanding the Pacific station, is on board the Philadelphia, and will be in command of the American forces on the isthmus. The cruiser Detroit, which has been ordered to look after American interests on the east coast of the isthmus, arrived at Havana, on her way to Greytown, which will be her headquarters during her sojourn in those waters. As the Philadelphia takes her station at Brito, the western terminus of the proposed Nicaraguan canal, the United States will be well represented in that quarter.

HAS A SIGNIFICANT LOOK.

Re-Establishment of the Naval Force on the China Station.

Washington, March 15. — Rear Admiral Kempff, at present commandant of the Mare island navy yard, has telegraphed the navy department his acceptance of the offer of second in command of the Asiatic squadron. As a matter of fact Rear Admiral Kempff's command will very nearly approach an independent station. Rear Admiral Remey, the nominal commandant of the entire naval force on the Asiatic squadron, is expected to remain in the Philippines, while Rear Admiral Kempff will have a separate squadron cruising on the Chinese and Japanese coasts. The re-establishment of the force on the China station may be a significant fact in view of the repeated hints from European sources of hostilities on so large a scale that they threaten to involve Asia.

CHANGE OF NAME.

The American Liner Paris to Be Called the Philadelphia.

Washington, March 15. — Senator Sewell has introduced a bill changing the name of the Paris, of the American line, to the Philadelphia. Three of the ships of the International Navigation company, constituting the American trans-Atlantic mail service, already bear names of American cities—the St. Paul, the St. Louis and the New York. The Paris was wrecked last summer off the coast of England. She has since been thoroughly repaired, and more than a million dollars expended in refitting her with higher-speed machinery. The Paris has been repaired in the Belfast shipyards of Harland & Wolff. It is reported that she has been lengthened a hundred feet, making her 665 feet in length. Her boilers have also been increased in number from eight to sixteen.

SENATORS IN CAUCUS.

Republicans Discuss the Porto Rican Tariff Bill.

Washington, March 15.—The Republican senators were in caucus for two and one-half hours on the Porto Rican bill yesterday afternoon, and at 6 o'clock adjourned until 2 o'clock to-day, when the discussion will be resumed. No vote was taken on any of the various propositions laid before the caucus, but as a result of the caucus talk the impression prevailed that there was a great deal of opposition to the bill, which opposition, if it was not placated, might endanger its passage. It was also apparent that a number of other senators thought the legislation was ill-advised, but, while opposed to the bill, nevertheless would vote for it as a party measure.

WHITE HAS HOPES.

Transvaal Agent Has an Interview With Assistant Secretary Hill.

New York, March 15. — Montague White, agent in this country for the Boers, returned from Washington late last night, and in an interview soon after his arrival said: "I had an hour's conversation with Mr. Hill, the assistant secretary of state, and he assured me that he hoped for a happy solution of the great problem now before us. I cannot, of course, now give details of that conversation. I expect to see Mr. Hill again Friday, when I will probably go to the state department again. I believe that Germany, France and Russia would certainly back up any movement made by the United States government in the direction of intervention.

WARRANT FOR SENATOR DEBOE.

Rumor That He Is Charged With Complicity in the Goebel Assassination.

Washington, March 15—A rumor was current at the capitol yesterday that a warrant was to be issued for the arrest of Senator Deboe of Kentucky for alleged complicity in the assassination of Mr. Goebel. The senator said the mere suggestion of such a thing is ridiculous, and said he was ready and willing to answer any charge which may be brought against him in that connection.

Crusade Against Vice.

New York, March 15—The police last night raided all the concert halls in the tenderloin district, drove the women into the streets and arrested the proprietors. The latter were taken to a police station and soon released on $500 bail each. The arrests were the result of the agitation against disorderly resorts which has lately stirred the city. The crusade began with the suppression of the play "Sapho" as presented by Olga Nethersole's company. Anthony Comstock soon afterward raided numerous gambling places.

Cable to Cape Nome.

Washington, March 15.—A bill was introduced in the senate by Senator Foster authorizing the construction by the government of a cable from Rome, on the coast of Washington, to Cape Nome and other Alaskan points.

Victims Now Number Sixteen.

New York, March 15. — Two more bodies were recovered yesterday from the ruins of the Italian tenement which was burned in Newark, N. J. The dead now numbers sixteen, and five others are unaccounted for.

NOW FOR PRETORIA

ROBERTS WILL BE READY FOR THE ADVANCE IN A FEW DAYS.

Southern Sections of the Orange Free State Are Rapidly Calming Down—Mafeking Now the Only Point for Anxiety, and Its Relief Is Expected Before Many Days—Russia Was the Only Power That Was Weak-Kneed in Its Refusal to Intervene—Boers Admit Their Cause Is Hopeless.

London, March 18.—With the railway communication to the Cape intact, Lord Roberts will in a very few days be in a position to begin the advance on Pretoria. His deep political intuition, combined with his bold strategy, is having the result desired in the southern sections of the Orange Free State, which are rapidly calming down. Mafeking is now the only point for anxiety, and as it is known that a force has left Kimberley, its relief may be announced before many days pass. The efficiency of the relieving column is heightened by the fact that it is partly composed of regulars.

In the lobbies of parliament last evening it was rumored that Lord Roberts is about to issue a proclamation announcing that the former system of government in the Orange Free State is abolished and promising Free Staters who immediately surrender due consideration.

It is understood that all the continental powers, with one exception, uncompromisingly refused to intervene. The exception was Russia, whose reply was couched in less firm language, although, like the others, she declined to interfere. It is said that the pope was also appealed to, but that he declined to do anything beyond writing a letter to the queen, appealing to her to stop the further Effusion of Blood.

Dr. Leyds' efforts with King Leopold were quite futile. The possibility of the destruction of Johannesburg is still discussed here, but it is believed that the French and German shareholders would offer a strong protest.

The latest advices respecting the surrender of Bloemfontein show that the approach of the British caused a stampede. Thirteen trains, each composed of forty cars and all crammed with Boers, hurried northward just before the line was cut. Mr. Steyn would have been compelled to surrender, but he pretended that he was going to visit one of the outposts, and at midnight took a carriage which was waiting for him outside the town and thus escaped. The Boers got the bulk of their wagons and military stores away. Gen. Hector Macdonald's wound has nearly healed. He accompanied the brigade to Bloemfontein.

Lord Roberts comments upon the earlier operations of the war in the London Gazette, and his absolute silence respecting Lord Methuen's dispatch is regarded as very significant. The Times observes that this silence is perhaps, more significant than words, especially when connected with the fact that Lord Methuen no longer takes any prominent part in the campaign.

Reported by Lord Roberts.

London, March 18.—Lord Roberts has sent the following dispatch to the war office, dated at Bloemfontein Friday:

"Gen. Clements crossed the Orange river yesterday. Repairs to the railway bridge at Norvalspont have commenced and it will shortly be ready for traffic. Gen. Pole-Carew telegraphs his arrival at Springfontein, so that Bloemfontein now is practically in rail communication with Cape Town. My proclamation is already having an excellent effect. Several hundred burghers have expressed their intention to surrender their arms and return to their occupations. The resident commissioner of Basutoland reports that 800 Boers lately arrived from Bloemfontein, and that a further contingent from Aliwalnorth was only waiting to know the terms of my proclamation of surrender. They had refused to attend a council at Kroonstadt, to which President Steyn had summoned them.

Boers Had Fled.

Bethulie, O. F. S., March 18.—Gen. Gatacre, on arriving here, found that all the Boers had fled. The town was nearly deserted, the Dutch having trekked on hearing of the occupation of Bloemfontein. It is believed that the Boers retired in the direction of Dewetsdorp. The telegraph is open to Springfontein. It is understood here that President Kruger two days ago annexed the Orange Free State to the South African republic.

Admit Their Cause Is Hopeless.

London, March 18.—The Daily Mail has the following dispatch from Lourenzo Marques, dated Friday: "Intrenching is proceeding on the Vaal river at Vereeyng. Late arrivals from Pretoria say that the Boers themselves now admit that their cause is hopeless. Gen. Lucas Meyer refuses to fight again and has returned to his farm. Gen. Schalk-Burger has also returned and the burghers are going home by hundreds."

GASOLINE EXPLOSION.

Causes the Death of a Child and Fatal Injuries to Five Other Persons.

Columbus, Ohio, March 18.—A gasoline explosion occurred last night at the residence of James Weaver when George White attempted to start a fire with gasoline, resulting in the death of one child, fatal injuries to five other persons and serious injury to another.

Chinese Detectives.

San Francisco, March 18.—The Chinese Six Companies have offered to pay for the services of four Chinese detectives to aid in maintaining order in Chinatown, provided the men are vested with full police powers. Chief Sullivan will report favorably on the proposition to the police commission.

Davis on Way Home.

Naples, March 18.—Webster Davis, United States assistant secretary of the interior, has arrived here from Pretoria, on his way to America.

TROUBLE AT MANILA.

Otis Considers It the Storm Center of the Situation.

Manila, March 20. — Gen. Otis considers Manila the most troublesome center in the situation to-day. The insurgent junta here, in conjunction with that in Hongkong, is growing active. Military authorities have been forced to put a stop to Mabini's intercourse with the public. Local and foreign press considers his recent utterances calculated to incite the Filipinos to act in revolt and prejudicial to American interests. Flores, who has just arrived here, says he comes, trusting to American leniency, and that he would not have dared come to Manila if Spain were yet in control. He cherishes the hopes and aspirations which actuated him when in the field, and desires to watch congressional action upon the question of the Philippines. The insurgents, he says, do not expect to vanquish the Americans, but are maintaining a resistence with the idea of forcing congress to accord them the best possible terms. A number of representative insurgent leaders from different parts of Luzon have recently been in conference in Manila. Some have been placed under arrest, but the others thus far have not been interfered with. Louis Spitzel, head of the firm of Louis Spitzel & Co., contractors to the Chinese government, and himself a suspected filibuster, came from Hongkong to Manila last week and was temporarily on suspicion. It is asserted upon good authority that three loads of arms and ammunition have recently been landed on the east coast of Luzon. Capt. Taylor, of the Thirty-ninth regiment, recently captured twelve new Mausers near Calambo. Reports are current here of active rebel reorganization in the province of Morong, where the insurgent leaders are said to be assisted by prominent Spanish residents. Inhabitants of this province who are now in Manila have been advised not to return to their homes, but to remain under the protection of the Americans. It is also reported that the rebels are reorganizing in the province of Zambales, under Mascardo. Brigands are committing atrocities in the province of Neuva Ecija, where they have murdered twenty natives and Chinamen. Eight other murders have been committed near Tarlac. The Nueva Ecija insurgents are heavily taxing local traders and farmers, with the result that business is paralyzed and there is a general scarcity of food. The funds for maintaining this guerrilla warfare are collected from the various towns of the island whether occupied by the Americans or not, including Manila. In the province of Albay the insurgents have ceased harrassing the Americans, owing, it is reported, to a lack of ammunition, but they continue ravaging the country by burning or looting. The natives are tiring of this sort of thing and against the marauders. Already the townspeople of Legaspi, Albay and Dobsol are slowly returning to their homes. Maj. Allen, of the Forty-third regiment, has been appointed military governor of the island of Samar, where Lukban, the former leader of the insurgents in that locality, is still in the mountains. Gen. Kobbe has opened two ports in the southern part of Luzon and in the islands of Samar and Leyte, the result of which is to stimulate trade there only temporarily, as the country opened is non-productive and apparently non-consuming. Owing to the political conditions of the last twelve months products accumulated during the blockade. These will be shipped to Manila and then the ports will be empty. Evidence accumulates of the treason and perfidy of the municipal officials in Gen. MacArthur's district. Officials of several towns of Lepan and Lupto provinces have declined to continue in office, saying they do not desire any further connection with the Americans. Travel between the towns is becoming more dangerous. All wagon trains must be escorted by heavy guard in order to insure their safety. Two American disasters were narrowly avoided recently; small traveling parties are attacked; single travelers frequently disappear and are found dead. Spaniards and Filipinos, who are conversant with the Tagalo character, unite in asserting that Aguinaldo's capture would terminate the revolution. Three months have elapsed since he was actively pursued.

Detained in Custody

Threaten to Turn

TAYLOR WILL STICK.

Until the Supreme Court Makes a Decision.

Louisville, Ky., March 20.—The two governors of Kentucky were entertained in this city yesterday. Messrs Taylor and Beckham both insisted that they had come to Louisville on purely personal business, and that their visits had no political significance. They spent the day quietly, though both received numerous calls from their political and personal friends. Gov. Taylor and his associates among the Republican party leaders, are very closemouthed as to the nature of the mission on which Surveyor of the Port Q. M. Barnet and Collector of Internal Revenue Sapp left for Washington Saturday night after their conference with Gov. Taylor, but there is little doubt it has to do with the attitude of the national administration toward the Republican state officers. The latter do not conceal their purpose to hold onto their positions until the United States supreme court has passed upon the question of their right to hold them. They do not intend to surrender the state buildings and records after a decision by the state court of appeals if the court should decide against them. There has been some talk that the Democratic officers may try to exercise their functions in earnest in case they are upheld by the court of appeals, which they regard as the court of last resort in their cases, and it is believed the Republicans wish to know the feeling of the national leaders of their party toward their policy. The governorship case is still in the circuit court of this county. Judge Field is expected to dispose of it this week, when it will be taken to the court of appeals. A week or two more will be consumed by the proceedings before that court. Governors Taylor and Beckham will return to Frankfort today.

RELIEF OF MAFEKING

PROBABLE THAT IT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED.

Next Important Operations May Be Expected in Natal—Lord Kitchener Organizing Northeast of Cape Colony—Bets Being Made That the War Will Be Ended by the Middle of May—Roberts' Proclamation Catches the Boers—Rifles Surrendered Faster Than a Factory Could Turn Them Out.

London, March 20.—The news from South Africa to-day is entirely satisfactory to the British public. The relief of Mafeking is not yet announced, but it is extremely probable that it has already been accomplished by Col. Plumer. Lady Charles Bentinck, at Cape Town, has received a telegram from her husband in Mafeking, dated March 12, saying that he expected to join her shortly. The actual relief movement has not been publicly developed in detail, but it seems that Lord Methuen only started very recently and is rather engaged in dispersing the Boers of the district than aiming at actual relief. Col. Beckman has dispersed 500 Boers at Fourteen Streams.

Lord Roberts probably ascertained from Mr. Frazer, the new mayor of Bloemfontein, before dispatching Gen. Pole-Carew southward that in all likelihood the railway was clear. The next movement will be to collect at Bloemfontein by railway sufficient stores for the immense army Lord Roberts will have when the Orange river forces have joined him. This will probably occupy two or three weeks. Therefore, the next important operations may be expected in Natal. The cavalry brigade which Lord Roberts has sent to Thaba Nchu, thirty-five miles east of Bloemfontein, is destined to cut off 2,000 Boers who are escaping from the southward. The Boers are reported to have destroyed the railway in the neighborhood of Kroonstat.

Lord Kitchener is quietly organizing in the northeast of Capt Colony. Predictions and betting are beginning here that the war will be ended by the middle of May.

Dispatches from Durban, Pietermaritzburg and other South African towns describe most enthusiastic celebrations on St. Patrick's day.

A London newspaper correspondent says Lord Roberts suggested the queen's order for the wearing of the green. Whether this be so or not it has been most favorably received.

Reported by Lord Roberts.

London, March 20. — The war office has received the following dispatch from Field Marshal Lord Roberts, dated Bloemfontein, Sunday, March 18: "The Guards brigade returned yesterday from Norval's Pont. Several burghers have laid down their arms to Gen. Pole-Carew at Edinburg and elsewhere. The officer commanding at Belmont reports that some deserters have come in with a Maxim, a nine-pounder and another gun. Another nine-pounder has been brought into Colesberg. The cavalry brigade has gone to Thaba Nchu in order to reassure the inhabitants of that district and to distribute copies of the proclamation to the people of the Free State. These proclamations are being eagerly sought after. Lord Methuen reached Warrentown on March 16. He was in time to prevent the deviation bridge from being completely destroyed and to clear the pont on the Vaal. The English mail was dispatched from here by rail yesterday, and to-morrow the regular railway service with Cape Town will be reopened. Mafeking reports that all was well March 6."

Pleased With American Reply.

London, March 20.—The correspondent of the Times at Lourenzo Marquez, telegraphing under date of March 16, says: State Secretary Reitz of the Transvaal, in the course of an interview, said that the outcome of the American reply was highly satisfactory, and he believed the United States would bring such pressure to bear as would bring about a settlement agreeable to the two republics. While admitting the seriousness of the situation, Mr. Reitz said he is convinced that the burghers of the two republics would enthusiastically defend the independence of the Transvaal to the last.

Ready to Accept the Inevitable.

London, March 20. — A dispatch to the Daily News from Bloemfontein, dated Friday, says: "Events have occurred which have induced some to predict that the war will last only so long as it takes to march to Pretoria. The educated Boers, even the Transvaalers, are ready to accept the inevitable. I am told that a corps of 2,000 women has been formed at Pretoria. It is called the Amazon corps. All the members are uniformed in kilts and are armed."

Roberts' Proclamation Catches Them.

London, March 20.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Bloemfontein, dated Friday, March 16, says: "We are getting rifles surrendered faster than a factory could turn them out. It is quite certain that if a British official can reach the northern laagers with Lord Roberts' proclamation the whole Boer population will declare peace."

Had a Sharp Engagement.

Cape Town, March 20.—The Mafeking relief column, Colonels Drummond and Pearman, commanding, had a sharp engagement at Fourteen Streams. The British succeeded in driving the Boers off. They had only a few casualties.

Boers' Total Losses.

Pretoria, March 20. — The chief of the intelligence department announces that the federal losses prior to the relief of Kimberley and Ladysmith were: Killed, 677; wounded, 2,129; accidents, sickness and other disabling causes, he asserts, bring the total to 4,351.

Nine Persons Injured.

New York, March 20.—Nine persons were injured early yesterday morning in an accident to a Ninth avenue elevated railway near Barclay street. Five of the nine are severely injured.

St. Hilaire Spectator.

ST. HILAIRE, - MINNESOTA.

Last November the United States bought $91,412 worth of Mexican oranges, the shipments for that month being nearly as heavy as for the entire year 1898.

Count Boni Castellane's reiterated expressions as to the generosity and hospitality of the United States indicate that he held New York up for more than is generally suspected.

Similar natural advantages to those offered in California for homes can be found in many parts of Mexico, together with the far-reaching argument that an American dollar goes as far as two of Mexico. For all expenses connected with housekeeping, says Modern Mexico, and all the little incidentals in the rural districts this will be found true.

The Samoan treaty was ratified by the senate with scarcely any opposition—with none, in fact, which involved principle. So this country has become possessed of one large island and several small ones, five thousand or more miles distant from the continent of North America, the very names of which few of us know how to pronounce. It shows what an excursion into the world we have made in the last three years.

The famous Ross case, by which the Supreme court of the United States held that a conductor of a freight train is a vice-principal of the railroad company in his relation to other trainmen, is overruled in the recent case of New England Railroad company vs. Conroy, Advance Sheets U. S., p. 85, which holds that the conductor is a fellow-servant of the engineer and brakeman, unless special and unusual powers have been conferred upon him.

Moody's death brings to mind the fact that he and his collaborator, Mr. Sankey, exerted the most beneficial influence upon the organ trade for many years. When they were at the height of their success people all wished to be able to sing their hymns at home, and an organ seemed to produce the best effect, so that their tour was always sure to be followed by substantial orders for small organs suitable for the household. Thousands were sold in consequence.

The American workman is declared to be more alert in action and quicker in perception than his foreign competitor. The writer asserts, as "a well-known fact," that in a given amount of work to be accomplished in a given time, by an equal number of foreign and American workmen, with equal appliances and facilities, the American will excel his foreign rival in the proportion of almost two to one. Qualities so essential in the struggle for mercantile supremacy should not be overlooked, he thinks, in estimating the causes which are contributory to this result.

Col. Count Georges de Villebois Mareuil is the brains of the Boer army. He recently received the thanks of the Transvaal government, in its official paper, for the victory at Colenso. The count, who is Gen. Joubert's chief of staff, served in the French army, through the Franco-Prussian war, rising to the command of a regiment in the foreign legion, and was afterward with the French forces in Tunis, Tonquin and the western Sudan. Two years ago he threw up his commission because he was not promoted to the rank of general. From Dr. Leyds he procured the rang of lieutenant general in the Boer army. He had said that the Boer country "offered every advantage for a campaign of surprises and a war of ambuscades."

A Yukon mail-carrier writes to the general superintendent at San Francisco, telling how he has had to sacrifice "celerity," one of the requirements of the "star" postal service, to "safety" in some recent experiences. On his arrival from the trip up Forty-Mile river, he found the Yukon jammed with huge cakes of ice, which it was unsafe to cross because of the great holes through which a man or mail-pouch might easily fall. Whenever any mail has gone to the bottom in an ice-jam, he says, every man thereabouts feels certain that at least a dozen of his letters were in that particular pouch. So this carrier waited a favorable opportunity, which came on Nov. 6, when his party started forth at daylight. They made ten miles before sundown, having two sleds loaded with 300 pounds each drawn by dogs. The ice was piled so high in some places that they had to chop a passage through it rather than attempt to go over. These are some of the difficulties that Uncle Sam's servants in the postal service have to surmount.

Although charges of wanton cruelty have been made by Boer against Briton and by Briton against Boer, the contest thus far has been marked by chivalrous humanity on both sides when the fury of battle has left its stricken victims to be succored by their foes. In Boer operating camps and hospitals, as in the British, no discrimination was shown between friend and foe. Common suffering has appealed to common humanity, enmities have been forgotten, and the same pitying kindness and tender care extended to one as to the other.

Under the name of "magnalium," Dr. L. Mach has produced alloys of aluminum and magnesium which, while considerably lighter than pure aluminum, are harder than that metal and better suited, it is asserted, for working. With 15 per cent of magnesium, the alloy is said to resemble brass in the readiness with which it submits to the operations of turning, boring and cutting. By increasing the magnesium to 25 per cent, an alloy resembling bronze is produced, but the color is silvery white.

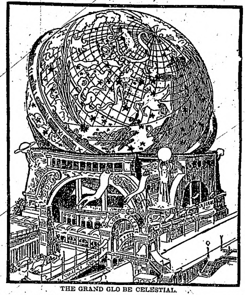
STRANGE SIGHTS AT WORLD'S FAIR.

(Paris Letter.)

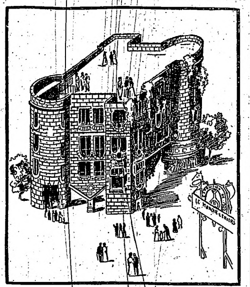
Visitors to the exposition who make their entrance by the Place de la Concorde will probably wonder whether they are the victims of hallucination or the subject of a seasonable practical joke. They will be confronted with a weird-looking structure, which a momentary examination will show them is in reality a house.

But it is not an ordinary dwelling place. Architects usually have a weakness for laying their foundations upon a solid substratum of earth. Not so the designer of the "Manoir a l'Envers." He has laid the foundations in the clouds, and the only communication with mother earth is by way of the chimneys and turrets of his feudal mansion. Nevertheless, there is no danger of its falling into space with its occupants, for, be it noted, this topsy-turvey mansion is not uninhabited.

The visitor draws closer and glances at the windows; people dressed like himself look out. To his astonishment they are as topsy-turvey as the house, for their feet point skywards and their heads are directed towards the ground.



THE GRAND GLO BE CELESTIAL.



HOUSE BUILT UPSIDE DOWN

If anxious to solve the mystery and to learn how it has become possible for mere humanity to emulate the fly, and walk upside down, the visitor will only find his bewilderment increased. In fact, the apparent intention of the designor of the "Manoir" is to instill a lasting doubt in the minds of men as to whether they do really stand on their heads or their heels.

Immediately the visitor enters he at once becomes part and parcel of the topsy-turvy scheme. He is ushered into a room, and gradually it dawns upon him that he is really walking upon the ceiling. He looks anxiously round him for something to clutch; there is nothing.

He takes one cautious step—another! He has achieved the impossible; he has learned to walk with his head where his heels should be. The lesson thus being learned, he will find it possible to enjoy with equanimity the ordinary doings of humanity from his novel point of view.

He may proceed to a bath room and perceive a steaming jet of hot water spouting upwards into the tub. He may proceed to the dining room, where the laws of gravity being suspended, the table remains unmoved directly over his head, and all the paraphernalia of the table, the plates, the cutlery, the flowers, sustain their positions without any more effort than the guests dining thereat.

Thence he may visit the kitchen, where the chef, in immaculate white apron, is busily engaged in his usual duties. The cook lets fall a saucepan lid; unconsciously the visitor puts up his hand to protect his head, but there is no need for him to do so, since, like everything else in this abode, the saucepan lids obey laws of their own.

Then there is the drawing room, where, standing alongside the chandelier, he may avail himself of the unexampled opportunity afforded him for studying the art of the Parisian coiffeur as displayed upon the head of a lady who at the piano beneath is tinkling out the tune of the latest popular song. Even Gulliver in all his travels never witnessed anything more singular.

This ingenious production is the idea of a Russian engineer, and a French architect is responsible for the building itself, while British capital has made its erection possible. Needless to say, an ingenious arrangement of mirrors is responsible for an illusion which for elaborate detail easily transcends anything previously attempted in the same line.

Another feature of the exhibition will be the "Mareorama." It differs from the ordinary cyclorama chiefly in the fact that the spectators, instead of standing on a circular platform, find themselves on a genuine vessel and experience most of the sensations of being at sea. Immense canvases unroll slowly, steadily and noiselessly before their eyes, and the rise and fall of the boat, together with the shifting scenes, complete the illusion that one is really on board a steamer, cruising in front of some of the well-known seaport cities of the Mediterranean.

"The Celestial Globe"—another "side show"—is a sphere 14 feet in diameter and surrounded by a terrace 200 feet above the ground. The exterior of this immense globe is decorated with astronomical and mythological figures, which, being illuminated at night from the interior, will be visible from all parts of the exposition grounds. Inside the globe, electric elevators and broad staircases will conduct visitors to a second sphere (110 feet in diameter), representing the center of the planetary system. The sun, the moon, the stars and the wandering comets will all be visible, while in the center will be seen the earth (diameter 25 feet), slowly revolving on its axis.

GIRLS RUN ELEVATORS.

City of Boston Has Them in That Capacity.

Girl elevator boys are the latest thing in Boston. In this respect the city is now ahead of New York. The girl elevator boy is the product of the electric elevator, which can be run without much expenditure of muscular energy. The apparatus does not have to be hauled up and down as when operated by the ordinary steam or hydraulic power. It is worked by the simple process of throwing over a lever and any child can do it. In some of the skyscraping office buildings timid persons who enter an elevated car think that their last moment has come just as soon as the elevator operator begins to perform. There is a cruel scowl on his face generally, and he whangs and bangs the gate as if he wished it were a passenger. Before starting the car he turns round and glares hatefully at every one. People shrink as far from him as possible, feeling that he may explode at any moment and wreak terrible vengeance upon some one. No one can understand what the boy elevator boy says when he talks. He has the same contempt for the English language that he has for everything and every one else. If a passenger asks him a question the reply is a short, sharp bark and a snap. Those in the car jump with fear. Few care to beard the elevator boy in his cage. Elevator manufacturers all say that the girl elevator boy is sure to arrive in all large cities very shortly. The makers are hurrying things up so that she can work the elevator with the least expenditure of force.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Glass-Making by Electricity.

An American glassmaker has patented an apparatus for the production of glass by electric furnace, and is said to have adopted in its construction a hint which he derived from an accidental breakage. Passing through his works one day, he saw the globe of an electric light crack, and a piece of the broken glass dropped upon the white-hot carbon points and was almost instantaneously melted. Thereupon he had a box or vat made, upon the interior of which were brought together pairs of carbon rods, powerful currents being sent through them to secure great heat. Immediately below them was a channel for the passage of sand and other constituents of glass, and it is found that these are reduced to the vitreous state in as many minutes as it requires hours to melt glass under the old system.

A Year's Progress in the Klondike.

Two years ago the difficulties of reaching the Klondike were thought to be of such a nature as to preclude the probability or even possibility of Dawson ever becoming a place of permanent habitation. The trials of the Chilkoot and White passes were exploited in magazine and journal from one end of the continent almost to the other, and the wrecks of humanity, and particularly of the thousands of beasts that lay scattered along the trail—the tribute to the Sahara turned to shame—were appealed to as grim testimony of the almost insuperable barrier which separated man from the object of his search. To-day, and since July 6 of the past year (1899), a steam railway traverses the full forty-two miles of the White Pass trail, and the traveler enjoys the beauties of the sub-Arctic landscape in much the way that he enjoys the trip through the Alleghany mountains in the east, or the prairies in the west.—From an article by Prof. Angelo Heilprin, in Appleton's Popular Science Monthly for February.

Muskrat Meat Palatable.

Muskrat meat, Pennsylvanians along the Schuylkill valley say, is more delicate and sweet than rabbit. Care has to be taken, however, not to break the bag of musk—a pouch the size of a walnut, filled with highly perfumed white paste and located in the intestines—for to break this bag is to saturate the flesh with a musky odor and it is then inedible, as though it had been boiled in cologne. The muskrat is said to be even cleaner in its eating than the serpent. It washes all its food. Green corn, tender young grass, salads, apples, wheat, nuts and sweet potatoes are the things it lives on.

That Settled It.

A story is told of a very popular cavalry officer. He was being tried for drunkenness, and among other witnesses was his Irish orderly. The court, anxious to give the officer every chance, put several questions to this witness with a view to eliciting any facts that might be in his master's favor. When the orderly said that his master, on going to bed, had expressed a wish to be called early, the members of the court-martial were distinctly pleased. A man who gave special instructions to be called early could not, surely—they argued to themselves—have been drunk. Hoping to get favorable particulars, the judge advocate put a further question. "And why did the major wish to be called early?" they asked. "Faith! an' he tould me it was because he was to be queen of the May," came the answer. That settled it.—Collier's Weekly.

Coffee in a New Form.

Take a pill from your pocket, drop it in a cup of hot water, and in a twinkling of an eye have coffee as black as your hat and as strong as a team of Percherons. That sounds like an apochryphal tale, but it is true. This new praparation of caffeine, which is to do away with all the boiling and clarifying and fuss which make the coffee barely worth while, has just been discovered by two German chemists. If their expectations are realized the making of compound pellet, containing the coffee ingredients, along with the milk and sugar. This is only one of the almost incredible triumphs of German chemistry, which has already produced a quinine which cannot be distinguished, so far as therapeutic quality goes, from the original article.

BOYHOOD DAYS OF MOY KEE.

Chinaman Talks of His Childhood Days in the Old Country.

"When I was a boy," said Moy Kee, tea merchant, laundryman and interpreter to an Indianapolis News man, "I went to school in my native village of Shin-King, eighty-seven miles from Pekin. I was seven years when I started to school, and, of course, the teacher was a man. We sat on stools with desks before us and studied aloud. At 10 years old I could write very well, and had to learn every word of a long lesson by heart. The teacher had a stick, and sometimes, but not often, he would punish a boy, either by striking him on the hand or on the seat of his trousers. There are no bad boys in China, as there are here in this country. The boys are respectful and polite to all who are older than themselves, and while they have their plays and their fun, they do not think it fun to hurt any one. The boys here in America do not know what long school hours are. I went to school early in the morning before the birds began to sing. After that we went to breakfast and then to dinner and in the evening to supper. Those were long, long days, the boys here would say, but we Chinese boys did not say anything about it. We just sat on our stools and sung out our lessons all at the same time as loud as we could. Vacation came along in the harvest time when the rice was gathered. Then we played at flying kites. We did not, as boys do here, fly kites any time. No, there was a season for it, and we flew them at no other times. The boys in China walk on stilts just as boys do here, and play at blindfold, hide and seek and leap frog, but all in a different way from here. We had great sport fighting beetles. We would find these on the fields and train them to fight, and we would lay wagers on which would win just as you do here on prizefighters. No neighborhood in China can afford to have a bad boy in it. Suppose at Chinese New Year's when we are all shooting firecrackers, some one would shoot a revolver. There would be great trouble. Not only would the one who shot the revolver be punished, but his relatives and neighbors and the magistrate of the district would be punished or reprimanded, because in China such things must not happen. A stranger could walk through my village day or night, with no one to hurt him. He would be safe all the time. It is not so in this country. We had great sport in shooting at sparrows with bow and arrow, and nobody ever shot at persons, as some boys do here with air-guns. The boys in China laugh a great deal, and laugh very loud sometimes, but they have plenty of sport without hurting any one."

Organ Worked Hard.

In a small church in a little village near Brighton, England, about forty years ago, the congregation could not afford to pay an organist, and bought a self-acting organ, a compact instrument well suited to the purpose, and constructed to play forty tunes. The sexton had instructions how to set it going, and how to stop it, but, unfortunately, he forgot the latter part of the business, and after singing the first four verses of a hymn before the sermon, the organ could not be stopped, and it continued playing two verses more. Then just as the clergyman completed the words "Let us pray," the organ clicked and started a new tune. The minister sat it out patiently, and then renewed his introductory words, "Let us pray," when click went the organ again, and started off on another tune. The sexton and others continued their exertions to find out the spring, but no man could put a stop to it, so they got four of the strongest men in the church to shoulder the perverse instrument, and they carried it down the center aisle of the church, playing away into the churchyard, where it continued clicking and playing away until the whole forty tunes were exhausted.

A Matter of Pride.

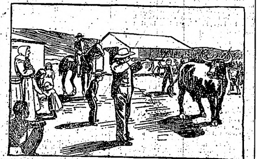
HOW BOERS KILL THEIR CATTLE.



The accompanying illustration is a scene which goes to show just what an expert sharpshooter the average Boer still is. This scene represents the Boer method of killing cattle for food. The Boer does not poleax his beef, but has it driven up by the herdsmen. He then casually selects the animal he wants and puts a bullet through its brain with the utmost nicety. When he goes out after game, he is even more skillful in bringing down food for his larder. He can pick off with the utmost unconcern a deer at a thousand yards, and while going full gallop on horseback. Although the younger generation of Boers are not, perhaps, such expert marksmen as their fathers, the present war in South Africa has shown that their shooting is by no means to be despised.

Information Wanted.

A small boy living in Mt. Salem, Mich., was asking his father questions the other night.

"Pa," said he, "what is dehorning?"

Father—Why, it's cutting the horns off cattle.

Boy (after reflecting)—Pa, what is detailing?

Father (growing irritated)—What in the world are you asking so many questions for?

Boy—Well, I saw in the paper the other day where Gen. Buller detailed a whole squad of his men.—Detroit Free Press.

AMERICAN TRANSVAAL FUND.

To Aid Widows and Orphans of the Boers.

A pathetic appeal of the committee of Africander and Bond members of parliament was issued at Cape Town, Oct. 10, 1899, signed by Messrs. N. F. DeWaal, Joseph N. Hoffman, J. H. Hofmeyr, Thomas P. Theron and D. J. A. Van Zyl, which says among other things:

"What may, what can, we colonial Africanders do in this sorrowful time? Join in the work of warfare with the weapons? The law and our duty as British subjects forbid this, even should other circumstances not oppose such a course of action.

"But what neither the law nor the duty of the subject forbids, and what, moreover, agrees in every respect with all principles of religion and humanity, is the offering of help to the wounded, to the widows and the orphans."

In the name of the Africander bond, on behalf of the citizens of the South African republic and their noble ally, the Orange Free State, I appeal to all Americans to show their sympathy with the brave people who are now, in the words of John Hancock, literally offering all that they have, all that they are, and all that they hope to be, upon the altar of their country, fighting to the death the arrogance and imposition of the great British empire, in order to remain free and independent, as did our American forefathers in 1776 and 1812. THERE WILL BE NO BOER WOUNDED ON THE BRITISH-AMERICAN HOSPITAL SHIP.

Send to me your subscriptions, small and large, and I will send the amount to Mr. C. C. de Villiers, Cape Town, the honorable treasurer of the committee of the Africander bond, to be expended under that appeal. I sent $2,000 on Feb. 23, 1900.

BEVERIDGE AT NAGASAKI.

The Consul Would Take no Chances on Being Taken In—Once Was Enough.

During his recent trip to the Philippines Albert J. Beveridge, United States senator from Indiana, stopped at the Japanese port of Nagasaki.

Mr. Beveridge is only thirty-five years old, and so youthful looking that he might easily pass for a collegian of twenty-five. He went ashore at Nagasaki for a few hours. Nobody in the place knew him, not even the few Americans there, as his coming had not been heralded. He walked about the town at his leisure and then dropped in to pay a visit to the United States consul.

That official had been victimized a few weeks before by a young American visitor, who claimed to be the son of Senator Boise Penrose of Pennsylvania, and borrowed $20. The consul had just learned that Senator Penrose has no son.

"Good morning, consul," exclaimed Mr. Beveridge, handing out his card. "I am Senator Beveridge of Indiana and I have just dropped in—"

"Look here, young man," interrupted the consul, "I am up to your little game, and you can't get a cent here; do you understand?"

The senator, first astonished and then indignant, began to protest, but the ludicrous side of the matter appealed to him so strongly that he picked up his hat and went away laughing.

"Ha!" exclaimed the consul, "they can't fool me more than once. I suppose the next thing will be some round-faced beggar trying to palm himself on me as President McKinley."

At the foot of the stairs, as luck would have it, an American officer recognized Mr. Beveridge. When the situation was explained, the officer took the senator back to the consulate and everything was made right a few hours later over an elaborate dinner.

DIAMONDS IN MOLTEN STEEL.

Minute Crystals Seen Under the Microscope in the Metal.

In the manufacture of carbon steel microscopic diamonds are formed. A number of steels from a variety of processes have been examined and gave identical results. A piece weighing 300 grammes was cut from a lump of steel and treated with nitric acid; the insoluble residue collected was mainly graphitic carbon. After being washed with water it was boiled three times with fuming nitric acid, which partially dissolved the residue; hydrofluoric acid and then fuming sulphuric acid were used. Then there remained nothing but graphite, which, after being washed, was melted with chlorate of potash. This long series of operations was recommenced, because it was necessary to subject the residue to all the treatments mentioned. The insoluble residue obtained fell to the bottom of a vessel filled with iodide of methylene, and the little, transparent octahedrons visible through a microscope burned on a sheet of platinum without leaving any ash. These were the diamonds.—Mining and Scientific Press.

How Natal Got Its Name.

South Africa was discovered by the Portuguese, who were searching for an ocean road to India. Bartholomew Diaz was the commander of the two little ships that formed the expedition in 1486. Eleven years later Da Gama took another Portuguese fleet south. He discovered Natal on Christmas day and thus named it in consequence.—Golden Penny.

A Boy From Boston.

SCIENTIFIC TOPICS.

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

Cause of Thunder a Mystery—Science Has Been Unable to Account for the Phenomenon—Barber's Scissors and Combs—Coach and Cradle.

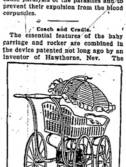
What is the cause of thunder, meaning the cause of the noise? We do not know. The thunder, we know, is a result of the phenomenon we call "lightning," but just what it is has not been as yet adequately determined. The electric discharge produces a variety of effects, physiological, luminous, calorific, magnetic, mechanical and chemical, whose characteristics are more or less well recognized. It is fair to presume that we must hunt for the cause of the noise in the calorific, mechanical or chemical attributes. Most of the authorities in definition say thunder is the noise immediately following a flash of lightning, and is due to the disturbances of the air caused along its path by the discharge, and they let it go at that. It may be that the real explanation will be found partly in each of the calorific, mechanical and chemical actions. A mere disturbance of the air is hardly an adequate reason. We have too little evidence to go upon. The heating effects, so called, may have some bearing. We know the spark will inflame ether, alcohol and some of the hydrocarbon gases; yet it does not ignite gunpowder, except by the help of a wet string which becomes heated. A Leyden jar charged and discharged several times in rapid succession becomes heated. But does air? Mechanical effects are numerous and usually disastrous to any solid body not a good conductor. We are shown by Kinnersley's thermometer that some effect is produced on a body of water, but it is asserted not to be due to any increase of temperature in the air. The chemical effects are most varied. Priestly found a reduction of volume in moist air by passage of the spark (which may be significant) and that the air became acid. Cavendish found this was due to the formation of nitric acid by the chemical action of the discharge. Compound gases are readily decomposed, but air is not a compound gas; it is merely a mixture of oxygen and nitrogen, and neither of its constituents is combustible. One assists combustion of other bodies, while the other is inert in that sense. But we may get some light on the subject, yet from the indefatigable army of electrical investigators. Possibly the researches in the liquefaction of gases may help out. In a recent paper on the subject it is stated that ozone liquefies at atmospheric pressure at a temperature of 135.4 degrees Fahrenheit and that it is easily exploded. Now, it is well known that the electric discharge produces this so-called allotropic oxygen in great abundance. According to Priestly the electric discharge effects a reduction of volume in moist air, which would indicate ordinarily a fall of temperature. Moist air is the usual atmospheric condition during lightning flashes. Possibly the stream of innumerable sparks in a stroke of lightning produces a cumulative or intensive effect, first lowering the temperature, then forming ozone, then causing its liquefaction, and finally its explosion, or perhaps detonation, which expresses more accurately the terrifying crash following or accompanying a lightning stroke near at hand. This is a mere speculation, and I give it for what it is worth.—Electrical Review.

Quinine and Malaria.

In an article by Dr. Monaco in the Atti del Lincei on the action of quinine on the parasite of malaria it is shown that certain strengths of the drug cause the expulsion of the parasites from the red blood corpuscles when the parasites are in their second or adult stage. There seems to be still some doubt as to the exact dose of quinine which ought to be administered to effect cure of spring fever, and the amount seems to vary with the peculiarities of various patients. From these experiments, however, it would appear that the doses usually given are excessive, and that a more rational dose would lie between half a gramme and a gramme of the bisulphate of quinine. Too strong solutions seem to cause paralysis of the parasites and to prevent their expulsion from the blood corpuscles.

Coach and Cradle.

The essential features of the baby carriage and rocker are combined in the device patented not long ago by an inventor of Hawthorne, Nev. The mechanism consists of a spring motor properly encased to hide as well as protect its working parts. A large drum revolved by the spring is connected to the bottom of the coach by a shaft, which, as the drum turns, imparts a rocking motion to the body of the carriage. Means are provided for starting or stopping the machine at will.

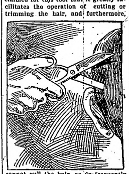


The Effect of Color on the Mind.

Experiments in the scientific management of colors tell us that there is a great difference in the effect of tints on the mental and physical conditions of humanity. A medium shade of brown is said to be the most restful of all colors. Light shades are not cool, but quite the reverse; and red is not warm, but gives a cooler effect than any color. Green has been considered restful and refreshing (but has an exceedingly depressing effect upon many temperaments; indeed, it has been thought to produce morbid conditions and melancholia of a severe type. Terra cotta has been a favorite color with artists, because they fancied that it gave a better effect to pictures, but it seems now to be approved because of its agreeable action on the nerves and its general restfulness. Pompeiian red is thought to be one of the most admirable colors for coolness, and its soothing qualities to persons of extreme nervous susceptibilities. "It may be possible," says a writer on this subject, "that the Pompeiians painted their town red from motives more aesthetic and hygienic than we have been able to comprehend." It has long been held by persons of nervous temperaments that reflected lights are the most trying and exasperating of the minor annoyances of life. When we learn to select the right colors, we may remove from our way many causes of mental and nervous irritation.

Barber's Scissors and Combs.

A hair-cutting implement, combining the comb and scissors, is for the convenience of the barber, and it is claimed for this tool that it greatly facilitates the operation of cutting or trimming the hair, and furthermore, cannot pull the hair, as do frequently the scissors and the clippers which it displaces. This device includes in its construction a pair of scissors, the lower blade being provided with a comb which in operation is next to the head. By its use the thorough distribution of the hair strands over the cutting edge is assured and the hair evenly cut. To sharpen or clean the blade, it is simply necessary to detach a screw and swing the comb outward the proper distance, so as to easily reach the blade with a whetstone or the like.



The Use of Peat.

The peat-bed is the embryo coalfield. If peat-beds could remain undisturbed, they would, in time, be transformed into mineral coal. They are composed of the roots of plants which grow very rapidly, interlacing and matting themselves until they are almost like a solid mass. These roots die out below, but the top layers are the crowns from which the new growth springs every year. Naturally, when they have remained for a long time unmolested, the layer of roots becomes enormously thick. Peat is used in almost all of the countries of Europe for fuel. Investigations by the department of state assure us that the cultivation of this plant and its utilization would be of the greatest advantage to the poor who have to depend upon coal for heating purposes. When peat is dug by those who understand its value, the top layer is taken off and carefully put aside. The root growth is then cut out and the sod is replaced and pressed down to be ready for growth the next season. It is often the case that under the top layers there will be found a quantity of rootstalks, leaves and sometimes trunks of trees. This becomes quite solid, and is called peat fiber. Below this there is a black, pitchy compound that in some instances, when it has long been in position, may be cut smoothly, showing a surface almost like wax. This is the most valuable part of the peat, and gives out a tremendous heat and a good deal of black smoke. Peat bogs must be drained and carefully managed in order to yield the best results. Peat is cut out in blocks, and is sometimes pressed or molded into shape.

Anthropological Aspect of Primitive Mathematics.

In an article (Die Mathematik der Oceanier), in the Naturwissenschaftliche Wochenschrift Herr Frobenius gives lists of numerals from numerous localities and classifies them into groups which fall naturally into geographical districts. The group which has practically only two numerals lies to the south of Indonesia—i. e., part of New Guinea and Australia. That with five is found in the middle district—i. e., in portions of New Guinea—while that with ten numerals is characteristic of the northern district, whence it has spread into Micronesia, Melanesia, and Polynesia. Herr Frobenius notes the various exceptions and variations, as well as the way in which the numerals illustrate primitive addition, multiplication, and subtraction.

Strategy.

"What is in that box you are so careful about, if I may ask?" inquired the man who had secured the lower berth in the sleeper.

"That's a collection of rare snakes I am taking to the museum. They are too valuable to be trusted out of my sight," replied the man, who was preparing to climb to the upper shelf.

"Say, I'll trade berths with you."

At this instant he caught the stony glare of Mrs. Meeker's eye turned in his direction.

"——Four pounds!"

And he said it with pausing the twentieth part of a second.—Chicago Tribune.

Battle Hymn of the Republic.

(Old Favorite Series.)

[Written by Julia Ward Howe during the Civil War; sung to the air of "John Brown's Body."]

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord,
He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored;
He hath loosed the fatal lightning of His terrible swift sword;
His truth is marching on.

I have seen Him in the watchfires of a hundred circling camps;
They have builded Him an altar in the evening dews and damps;
I can read His righteous sentence by the dim and flaring lamps.
His day is marching on.

I have read a fiery gospel writ in burnished rows of steel;
"As ye deal with My contemners, so with thee My grace shall deal;
Let the hero born of woman crush the serpent with His heel.
Since God is marching on."

He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men before His judgment seat;
Oh, be swift, my soul, to answer Him! be jubilant, my feet!
Our God is marching on.

In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in His bosom that transfigures you and me:
As he died to make men holy, let us die to make men free,
While God is marching on.

Hairbreadth Escapes on the Battlefield.

At the battle of Modder river Sergt. Penderend was struck by three bullets in less than as many minutes, and escaped practically unharmed. "First," he says, "a shot glanced off the side of my boot and struck my rifle just in front of my face, filling my eyes with dust and splinters. I rose up a little, when another shot struck the middle finger of my left hand. I got on my knees, when a bullet struck me fair in the chest on the buckle of my haversack, breaking it through the center and causing a slight puncture of the skin and bruising my chest. I have been congratulated on being the luckiest beggar in my battalion." One of the American soldiers in the trenches before Manila had a still more astonishing escape from sudden extinction. One bullet grazed the top of his right ear, a few seconds later another took a microscopic slice from the lobe of the left ear, while a third bullet flashed along the top of his head, removing the hair in a perfectly straight, narrow line. As the soldier put it in a letter to his parents, "It was very kind of them to part my hair so beautifully for me, and it will save me a lot of trouble for some time to come." One of the most remarkable of recorded experiences was that of a corporal in the late frontier campaign in India. After several hours of fighting, during which the bullets had been flying thickly around him, he was congratulating himself that he had not even been touched, when on removing his helmet he saw a small perforation in front which could only have been made by a bullet. On turning the helmet round to look for the point of exit of the bullet, he found not one but two holes, and could only arrive at the seemingly incredible conclusion that two separate bullets must have struck his helmet at exactly the same point, and made two separate openings for their exit. Each bullet in its passage through the helmet must have gone, literally, almost within a hair's breadth of the top of his head. One of the men wounded at Wynberg had a still narrower escape from death. A bullet entered one temple and came out at the other; and yet the man has made a complete recovery and suffers nothing from the terrible wound beyond an occasional headache.

Told By the Orderly.

The orderly was telling the story.

"Scared? Why, I was never so scared in my life. But I had to sit up there on that grave and make a bluff that I wasn't afraid. My feet were so cold that they would have froze snowballs. The old man deployed the company as skirmishers. The firing was so hot that they couldn't advance, but laid down behind a rice dike and kept a-blazin' away until the big guns could get up and drop a few shells. The old man fixes the men so they're all right. Then he goes and sits down on a grave on the hill just back of the company. Well, of course, he couldn't have got any place where the gugles could have got a better chance at him. But he just sets there, cool like, and lights a cigarette. Well, I'm the hot stuff orderly with a reputation to sustain. So I have to put up a big front and sit down behind him on the same grave and light a cigarette, too. The bullets come a-flying around there and dug up the dirt and went 'pop, pop' overhead, and say, honest, the orderly was scared to death. But the old man puffs his cigarette and he says, 'Orderly,' he says, 'I guess they are a-shooting at us.' And the orderly, he says, 'Yessir,' and you ought to have heard his teeth a-rattling. Then the old man says, 'Orderly,' and I says, 'Yessir.' 'We don't care, do we, orderly?' says the old man, and the orderly says, 'No, sir.' He was just a-holding himself by the shoulders to keep from getting up rolling and down the other side of that hill. 'Orderly,' says the old man, 'there ain't a bullet made could hit you or me, is there?' 'No, sir,' says the orderly, and his feet were so cold they almost froze together. Then the gugles fired another volley, and a bullet went through the old man's hat and another one spun past the orderly's ear. 'Orderly,' says the old man. Say, the orderly was so near dead by that time that he could just grunt, 'Sir.' 'Orderly,' says the old man, 'they didn't used to have bullets that could hit you or me, but I guess they're a-making a new kind now. We will get off our perch,' and the old man climbed down from the grave, and you ought to see the orderly roll up and hug that rice dike. But cold feet? Say, honest, my feet won't thaw out until next summer."—Chicago Tribune.

An Effective Censorship.

In contrasting the rigors of the present press censorship in the Transvaal with the lax methods pursued during the rebellion, former State Senator Harmon W. Brown of Ohio, who held a responsible place on the staff of Gen. Rawlins during the civil war, related a few days since the following incident: "One day before Vicksburg the correspondent of a copperhead paper went to Gen. Rawlins for news. The general pondered for a moment and took me one side. 'Take this young man,' he said, 'up to the top of those trenches, within a stone's throw of the enemy. Take him up there and lose him. I don't care what happens. Understand?' I said I did, and we started through the lines. Both of us were mounted. I pointed out a crest overlooking the enemy and told him he could get a good view from that point. 'Ain't you coming with me?' he asked. 'No,' I replied. 'I know all I want to know.' So he started. As soon as the top of his hat and the tip of his mule's ears showed above the crest there came a volley of musketry 10 yards wide that cut the air like a knife blade. The crown of his hat was sliced off as with shears; he managed to drop to the ground in safety, but the persevering mule was literally filled with lead. After the firing ceased the correspondent crawled to the spot where I was. 'Did you learn what you wanted to know?' I asked. 'Eh?' gasped the correspondent, wiping his face and looking at his hands to see whether they were bloody. 'What I wanted to know? Oh, yes, of course. The enemy are over that ridge all right.' When we returned to headquarters Gen. Rawlins saw us and hailed me. I went inside his tent. 'I thought I told you to lose that copperhead correspondent somewhere,' he said testily. 'I did the best I could sir,' I answered. He came back, but I have the honor to report the mule a total loss.'"

Gen. Lawton's Song.

During the early years of the civil war a party of young men walked out of a theater in New York after the performance of an opera then popular, "Maritana." Standing head and shoulders above his companions, Henry W. Lawton, then a captain of the Thirteenth Indiana, was perhaps the most conspicuous of the group. He had only recently been promoted from the first lieutenancy of the Ninth Indiana, and he was on a short furlough to New York. He grew enthusiastic over the performance. He had not been able in Indiana to see much of opera, and, together with his natural liking for music, the martial spirit of Don Cesar de Bazan completely won him. The tenor on that occasion was an excellent one, and the young captain was taken with the famous solo beginning:

Yes, let me like a soldier fall
Upon some open field.

At the conclusion of the many encores Capt. Lawton turned to his friends and remarked that the song expressed his sentiments in their entirety. As Lawton walked out of the theater he tried to sing the words, but beyond the first few he could remember little. When he returned to his regiment he went to the bandmaster and asked him to get the music and to learn the piece upon which his fancy had fallen. When the selection arrived, the bandmaster was dismayed to find that it was almost strictly a tenor solo. Nevertheless, so persistent was Capt. Lawton that he turned the solo into a march, which the band played as one of the favorite pieces of the regiment. And, during the continuous rise of Capt. Lawton through the various grades to that of colonel of the regiment, he never lost his love for that bit of song. After the war his love for the piece continued, until, among his friends, it became known as Lawton's song.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Modern Bullet.

"The modern rifle, while it greatly exceeds in range, accuracy of fire and general effectiveness its immediate predecessor," says a soldier, "is not so likely to kill at certain ranges as was the old Springfield. A Mauser or a Krag drills an exceedingly small and perfectly clean hole, and there have been many instances of men being wounded and remaining unaware of the fact until long afterward. One major in the battle that preceded the capture of Manila was knocked heels over head in a trench, but immediately got upon his feet, and, after making a minute examination of his person, could find no evidence of a wound. There wasn't much time to speculate just then on the cause of his stumble, but he was certain that he had not been knocked over by a shot. That night, however, when undressing, he discovered a hole in his trousers between the knee and hip, and close examination revealed a corresponding one in the rear. He then for the first time became conscious of a slight stiffness in his leg. A surgeon was called in, and his practiced eye discovered that a Mauser bullet had gone clean through the major's leg, but he never suffered in the slightest degree from that wound. I only give you that as an instance of a Mauser wound that came under my personal observation, but the medical records of the war abound in cases of wounds received far more curious than that."

Ready Tact.

An instance of tact and wit used in an excellent cause is given in "War Memories of a Chaplain." One of my chaplain friends was on an army transport going south with officers and men from various regiments. The officers were playing cards in the cabin from morning to night. When Sunday came, the chaplain took a good supply of reading matter from his cabin, and was on hand with it as the breakfast table was cleared off, and the officers were getting ready to play cards as usual. Stepping to the head of the table, he said, good naturedly: "Gentlemen, tracts are trumps today, and it's my deal." "All right, chaplain," the officers responded, "give us a hand." The books and papers were given out. No cards were played that day. The chaplain had his opportunity unhindered, because he showed tact in his way of presenting his case.

Fair Ines.

(Old Favorite Series.)

O saw ye not fair Ines?
She's gone into the west,
To dazzle when the sun is down,
And rob the world of rest.
She took our daylight with her,
The smiles that we love best,
With morning blushes on her cheek,
And pearls upon her breast.

Oh, turn again, fair Ines!
Before the fall of night,
For fear the moon should shine alone,
And stars unrivaled bright;
And blessed will the lover be
That walks beneath their light,
And breathes the love against thy cheek
I dare not even write!

Would I had been, fair Ines,
That gallant cavalier
Who rode so gaily by thy side
And whispered thee so near!—
Were there no bonny dames at home,
Or no true lovers here,
That he should cross the seas to win
The dearest of the dear?

I saw thee, lovely Ines,
Descend along the shore,
With a band of noble gentlemen,
And banners waved before,
And gentle youths and maidens gay—
And snowy plumes they wore:
It would have been a beauteous dream
If it had been no more!

Alas, alas, fair Ines!
She went away with song,
With music waiting on her steps,
And shoutings of the throng.
And some were sad, and felt no mirth,
But only music's wrong,
In sounds that sung, Farewell; farewell
To her you've loved so long.

Farewell, farewell, fair Ines,
That vessel never bore
So fair a lady on its decks,
Nor danced so light before.
Alas for pleasure on the sea,
And sorrow on the shore;
The smile that blest one lover's heart
Has broken many more!

—Thomas Hood, 1799-1845.

Green Hair.

According to the Medical Press, greenish hair in men occupied in copper works and in copper mines is not unknown, for as far back as 1654 Bartholin drew attention to its occurrence. Since then several other observers have recorded instances of the same. The most recent case is that of Doctor Oppenheimer's, who, at a meeting of the John Hopkins Medical Society, showed a specimen of green hair obtained from a patient who had been under his treatment. The hair was a pale but distinct green, this color being more marked on the head and the mustache. But, curiously enough, in the hair all over the body the same coloration was displayed. Copper was easily demonstrated chemically. Microscopically, the hair was uniformly colored, no crystals being seen anywhere. The patient did not return after his first visit, and it was ascertained that he died two years later with a severe cough. The fact, however, is certain that workers in copper works need not necessarily become affected with the poisonous metal, provided that scrupulous cleanliness is observed. The hair must be washed daily in a solution of soda, ordinary water being useless for the purpose. Experience shows that the part first to become affected is the mustache, and next the head, but if the latter be protected by a thick cap no coloration is produced.

Sympathy Between Birds.

In the zoological garden at Paris a notable occurrence took place the other day. Prof. A. Milne-Edwards, the eminent naturalist, witnessed it, and made it the subject of an article which has just appeared in a French scientific journal. Two so-called sun birds have been for a good while inmates of the aviary in the garden. These birds are popularly known as Japanese nightingales, though they are not found in Japan, and their song in no way resembles that of the nightingale. They have red bills, orange breasts and yellow wings. Their home is in India and in China. The two birds in Paris fared comfortably until one day a gray cardinal got into their cage and at once picked a quarrel. One of the sun birds lost almost all of its feathers and was grievously wounded. The poor creature found itself crippled and unable to sit on the perch. Furthermore, its feathers being gone, it suffered greatly from cold. Marvelous now was the sympathy manifested by its companion. Every evening it gathered moss and hay, with which it made a warm bed for the invalid. Every night it perched beside the sufferer on the cold floor, its wings being spread out to warm its companion as much as possible. For several nights it played the part of a good Samaritan. All its efforts were unavailing, and the wounded bird died. Thereupon the other literally grieved to death. It refused to eat, and remained crouching in the cage until it had joined its companion.

The Ungainly Adjutant-Bird.

"The plainest of the large wading birds to be seen in many of our zoological gardens is the adjutant, a native of India and Africa," remarked a naturalist. "Nature seems to have designed him in an experimental mood, and, disgusted with her handiwork, to have turned him out unfinished. The young adjutant, with his bald head and beak like a pickaxe, is repulsively ugly, and the melancholy gravity of his demeanor suggests that he has seen himself mirrored in some still pond, and the revelation is weighing upon his mind. As he grows older, however, and begins to take a lively interest in dead rats, the effect of the shock to his vanity passes away. He becomes jaunty—nay, frivolous—and in sheer lightness of heart attends dancing parties on the mud slopes of his enclosure, where he ducks and bows and kicks and scrapes with half-distended wings, to the admiration of his feathered companions. All the cranes and storks are great dancers, and in the early spring season you may see really graceful terpsichorean performances in the paddocks of any zoo where they are on exhibition. An elderly adjutant practising his steps all by himself is a spectacle the sympathetic observer can hardly regard without mingled laughter and tears. He is so awkward, so ungainly, yet so cheerfully earnest about it, you are sorry for the deluded bird, and yet cannot refrain from hoping that the heart of the hen adjutant will be moved by the pathetic display of inaptitude."

Courtship in Japan.

A Japanese girl who desires to get married does not hesitate to inform the public of her desire. In a recent issue of the Japanese Journal, Kanazawa Shimbum, one of these girls, who signs herself "Hosuijeshi," is very outspoken on this point, as the following notice shows: "I, the undersigned, am a pretty girl with abundant hair, flower-like face, perfect eyebrows and a good figure. I have money enough to take life easy and enable me to spend my years with some beloved man who will ever be my companion, and who can admire the flowers with me by day and the moon by night. If any clever, accomplished, handsome and fastidious gentleman is disposed to accept this offer, I can assure him that I will be true to him for life, and that after life is over I will be ready to be buried with him in one grave."

It is not an unheard-of thing for European girls to advertise for husbands, but it is very doubtful if any European or American paper has ever contained such a poetical matrimonial advertisement as this one. Moreover, it is doubtful if any European or American girl would ever think of offering to share the same grave with the gentleman who might accept her offer of marriage. Verily, they do things differently in Japan.

Pisa's Leaning Tower.

The Leaning Tower of Pisa, that celebrated and beautiful bell tower, is situated in the city of Pisa, Italy, and was built during the twelfth century by the German architect William of Innspruck. It is cylindrical in shape, 50 feet in diameter, 180 feet high, and leans about 14 feet out of the perpendicular. It is entirely of white marble, and consists of seven stories, divided by rows of columns. The top, which is surmounted by a flat roof and an open gallery, commanding a splendid view of the surrounding country, is reached by 300 steps. The tower was not originally intended to lean; but the foundation settled more on one side than on the other until it reached its present inclination, which it has maintained with scarcely any perceptible increase for hundreds of years. The upper part of the structure was built in a manner to counteract in part the inclination; and the grand chime of bells seven in number, of which the largest alone weighs 12,000 pounds, is mounted with reference to counteract this fault still further.

Greek Fire.

Greek fire was a composition which the Greeks of the Byzantine Empire used as a means of defense. It is supposed to have been composed of nitre, sulphur and naphtha, as principal ingredients. It was highly inflammable, and was said to have the power of burning under water. It was projected either on blazing tow, tied to arrows, or through a tube, and wherever it fell it made great havoc, from the inextinguishable nature of the fire. At Constantinople the process of making Greek fire was kept a profound secret for several centuries; but at the time of the discovery of gunpowder it formed a recognized defensive element in most wars from Western Europe to Asia Minor. The invention of this material has usually been ascribed to Callinicus of Heliopolis, in A. D. 668; but there seems to be reason to believe that it was rather imported from India.

Strange Uses of Postage Stamps.

Most of us have read of rooms which have been papered entirely with canceled postage stamps. But certain monks at the Hospital of St. Jean de Dieu, at Ghent, in Belgium, have utterly transcended all this fly, in their leisure moments, decorating the walls with gorgeous landscapes, glowing with color and full of life, which are formed entirely by means of the postage stamps of all the nations of the World. Palaces, forests, streams and mountains are represented, butterflies flit about in the air, birds of beautiful plumage perch on branches, snakes and lizards glide about, and innumerable animals find places here and there. The pictures are most artistic, in the style of Chinese landscape gardening, and already between nine and ten millions of stamps have been used.

Vegetarian Bedding.

Sir Isaac Pitman invented the "vegetarian bed," composed, not of feathers, but of mosses, ferns, flowers and hay. This bedding material, commended as healthy and health-giving by many doctors and others, has become famous in the vegetarian circles, and deserves to be more widely known. "It smells like ozone," is the testimony of more than one physician, and many say that sleeping upon it "gives rest to the brain and mind."

Relative Value in Noses.

The Boon county circuit court took up a case today in which the Missouri University football team was involved as witnesses in behalf of one of its number. E. D. Smith, one of the team, sued a livery firm for damages for a broken nose sustained from an accident while riding in a wagon belonging to the stable. The wagon was overturned in a creek and the entire eleven tumbled into the water. Smith's nose and R. W. Nelson's leg were broken. Nelson's case will be tried later. In the case today the main argument for the defence was that the breaking of a nose was of little import to a football player. The amount sued for is $500.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Fish Scales in Demand.

There has been a call at the American consulate in Lyons, France, for fish scales, to be used in the manufacture of artificial pearls. The supply is not equal to the demand. It is said that good prices will be paid for them. The scales should be packed in salt as soon as removed from the fish and packed in tin cans. Specimens sent to, to consulate from America will be examined, and reports about them made to the sender.—New York Tribune.

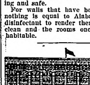
Only he who lives a life of his own can help the lives of other men.—Phillips Brooks.

SMALLPOX DISTRIBUTORS.

How the Germs Are Nurtured, and the Disease Is Spread.

It would seem that people will never learn to be careful. The recent alarming spread of that dire epidemic, smallpox, throughout different sections of the country has been traced by physicians and sanitarians in many instances directly to the moldy and rotting layers of paper and paste which cover the walls of many houses. The practice of laying layer after layer of paper on a wall, using common flour paste, is especially calculated to create homes for disease germs. People could not do more to effect such a result if they tried. The rotting vegetable matter affords caves from which are ready to dart forth the infection at every opportunity. There is no excuse for this practice, as walls and ceilings can be coated with a pure, cleanly and sanitary material like Alabastine, for instance, at no greater expense. Alabastine is a rock-base cement, which incorporates itself with the wall or ceiling. It is easily applied, comes ready to mix with cold water, requires no washing or scraping before renewing or retinting, is beautiful, long-lasting and safe.

For walls that have been infected nothing is equal to Alabastine as a disinfectant to render them pure and clean and the rooms once more habitable.



The above illustration shows one of the mammoth buildings occupied by the great Mail Order House of the John M. Smyth Company of Chicago.

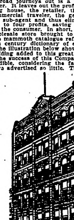
For one-third of a century this Company has been in business. Beginning in a small way, they supplied their neighbors in the near-by towns, each year widening their field. They are now selling merchandise direct to the consumer at wholesale prices throughout the United States.

Some years ago they began supplying their customers with an illustrated catalogue. As the business expanded they were obliged to increase the size of this catalogue, until today it exceeds 1,000 illustrated pages, quoting the lowest wholesale prices on everything to Eat, Wear and Use. By a superior process of color photography they illustrate many of their goods in natural colors, bringing out the rich color value of curtains, carpets, draperies, and the latest designs in wall paper, etc., thus enabling the customer hundreds of miles distant to select goods at his own fireside, knowing by the description, illustration and price the quality of goods he may expect.

This feature of their business is becoming more and more popular each year, for it not only saves long and tiresome railroad journeys but is a great time saver. It leaves out the profit of the jobbing house, the retailer, the expensive commercial traveler, the general agent, the sub-agent and thus eliminates from one to four profits, saving this amount for the consumer. In short, it is a great wholesale store brought to the home. The mammoth catalogue referred to is a 20th century dictionary of economy.

The illustration below shows the recent building added to this great enterprise.

The success of this Company seems incredible, considering the fact that they have advertised so little. Their spirit of fairness and industry is the secret of this wonderful success. The quantity of goods they require in some lines enables them to handle train loads of merchandise secured at the lowest possible cost and freight rate.



When goods in the rough are coming from the mills and factories in the East, the lake steamers are pressed into service at a freight expense which is but little in advance of the iron ore rates.

Their references are: Any bank or express company, or any man, woman or child in Chicago.

Lacked Winning Nerve.

"When I was a racing fiend," said the old telegrapher, "I one day got a tip by wire from an operator, a friend of mine in Philadelphia. It read: 'Lillian K sure! Get in with both feet!' I fancied Lillian K myself, so I pawned my watch, borrowed all I could and went to the poolroom. The race was due in about half an hour, and Lillian K was up in the entries all right, but there were no odds against her.

"So I says to the man at the desk, 'What's the odds on Lillian K?' He looked at me like he was too tender hearted to rob a 'come on' and pitched me over a blank ticket and says carelesslike: 'Make out your own odds, I'll take 'em any way you fix it.'

"That was too much of a jolt for me, and I told him to hold on to the ticket for a minute while I went out to see a man. I went out and took a drink and tried to figure whether the man was four flushing or whether I looked any greener than I felt. Then I came back and tried to get my roll out of my pocket, but it wouldn't come, and finally I sat around and watched the report come in, and put me on the blacklist if Lillian K didn't win at 200 to 1, and the only man on it was a little humpbacked shoe pirate with his box under his arm and a dollar in dimes, nickels and coppers."—Washington Star.

Irish Trust and Distrust.

The most trustful people in the world in money matters are the Irish. A stranger can go into any shop and get a check cashed without the least difficulty, though the proprietor never saw him before and never heard of the drawer. Bank notes are very largely used, as almost every bank in the country issues notes worth £1, £2, £3, £5 and upward, and they are all looked upon as being quite as good as gold.

But Bank of England notes, even in the large towns, are looked upon with suspicion, while in remote places people won't take them at all. It is said that this suspicion of English notes is hereditary.

From the time of James II up to 75 years ago the law was such with regard to currency that if an Irishman wanted to pay £100 in England he had to remit £118 6s. 8d., while if he were being paid a debt by an Englishman he received only £85. Naturally he thought rather badly of English money, and in the 190 years during which this state of things continued the Irish people became so deeply convinced that John Bull was cheating them that they still regard the Bank of England as a corporation of robbers.

The Jews In Frankfort.

George Brandes thus describes the position of the Jews in Frankfort, Germany, at the beginning of the nineteenth century: "All Jews were forced to live in the narrow, miserable, overcrowded Judengasse (Jew street), their sole abode since the year 1462. At the beginning of night all the inhabitants of the ghetto were locked in. They were not allowed to use the sidewalk while walking in the street in the daytime, but had to take the middle of the street. They had to remove their hats before every passerby, who would call out: 'Jew, make your bow!'

"To prevent too large an increase not more than 14 couples were permitted to marry in any one year. On every festive occasion they were driven into the ghetto. On Sunday the gates were locked regularly at 4 o'clock, and no one was allowed to pass by the guard at the gate except when on an errand with a prescription to the drug store or for the purpose of mailing a letter. One general rule was 'No Jew allowed on a green spot.'" Napoleon abolished this state of affairs in 1810, but it was restored after his downfall.

A Suspension of Sentence.

For 25 years Squire Quigg held the office of justice of the peace in Doniphan county, and in the early part of his administration he held the idea that a justice had as much jurisdiction as a district court. Once a shooting scrape occurred in the township, and the culprit was brought before the squire for preliminary examination. After listening to the arguments the squire ordered the prisoner to stand up. He then said, "Mr. Prisoner, it is the sentence of this court that you be hanged by the neck until dead, dead, dead." Turning to the constable, the squire said: "Take this prisoner outside and hang him to the tree in the yard. There is a rope halter in my buggy."

The constable made a move for the prisoner, and then the squire, taking a second thought, said, "Mr. Constable, I guess you had better not hang the prisoner until we see whether his victim dies."—Kansas City Journal.

Her Proper Place.

Miss Brooke, the English actress, once gave a couple of seats for the theater to her landlady, who had never seen her on the stage. On the following day the landlady seemed to be satisfied with the play, but she did not give any opinion of Paula. So Miss Brooke asked her the straight question. "What did you think of me?" Then the landlady exclaimed with a bland, admiring smile: "Oh, Miss Brooke, dear, you're far too good for the stage! You ought to be in a shop, tryin on mantles!"

Strange Prophecies.

Clement V and Philip IV procured the condemnation of Molay, the grand master of the Templars, to the stake. As he was led to execution Molay cited his persecutors to appear before God's throne, the king within 40 weeks and the pope within 40 days. Within those respective times both died. Rienzi, the last of the tribunes, condemned to death Fra Moriale. When he had pronounced the sentence, the culprit summoned the judge to meet death himself within the month, and within the month Rienzi was assassinated.

In 1575 Namning Koppezoon, a Roman Catholic, tortured to death during the religious strife in the Netherlands, recanted his extorted confession when on the way to the scaffold. A clergyman, Jurian Epeszoon, tried to drown his voice by clamorous prayer. The victim summoned him to meet him within three days at the bar of God, and Epeszoon went home and died within that time. While at the stake Wishart openly denounced Cardinal Beaton: "He shall be brought low, even to the ground, before the trees which have supplied these fagots have shed their leaves." The trees were but in the bravery of their May foliage when the bleeding body of the cardinal was hung by his murderers over the battlements of St. Andrews.—Chambers' Journal.

The Butterfly's Pocket.

The male butterflies have the proud privilege of a pocket, but the pocket of a butterfly is wonderfully made. It is really an extension of the under wing folded back on the upper side, but it is exquisitely colored and marked like the upper side, so that it is very hard to detect, and no one has yet discovered just how it is opened, although undoubtedly the butterfly can throw it open while he is flying.

At first glance there seems to be only white or amber colored silk floss within, but examine this with a microscope and you will find twisted ribbons, slender rods shaped like a shepherd's crook, others jointed bamboolike and flexible rods and tiny scales of various sorts and patterns.

It is known that insects have a marvelously keen scent, and it is believed that all these odd little objects are perfume boxes and that the fragrance so thrown abroad is a signal call to the female butterfly, which may be wandering about in the air. It is, to say the least, a very interesting guess, and there is evidence to prove that butterflies and moths are summoned from distances by odors that we would hardly notice.—Philadelphia Times.

A Maori Legend.

In Cassell's Little Folks there is a quaint Maori fairy tale which concludes thus: "Suddenly the father, who had been looking up into the western sky, cried out in a glad voice: 'There they are! I see them!' The mother came running out at his cry, and together they saw their two children standing hand in hand far away in the sides of the sky, the two little stars that had not been there before. 'Let us follow them,' said the mother, and together they rose into the deepening twilight and fled after their children.

"But Piri and Noko, far off in the sky, saw their parents coming and, thinking they were angry, sped away toward the western horizon. The parents followed, and when they reached the highway of Tane that god of light changed them into stars. And now, when the night is clear, you may see two little twin stars flying away toward the west and some distance behind two larger stars in vain pursuit. Thus forever they go round and round the world, Piri and Noko running away from their parents because they were so foolish as to think their mother did not love them."

Not Entitled to a Puff.

"I believe the man who was more afraid of advertising something for nothing than any newspaper man I have ever seen," said a Chicago newspaper man, "was John Knapp of the old St. Louis Republican. He hated to print a doctor's or lawyer's name for fear he would give a free puff.

"One time there was mention made in the paper of a man having died of Bright's disease of the kidneys. Old man Knapp hunted up the copy reader.

"'What do you mean,' he said, 'by running in the name Bright in our columns? He is not an advertiser in our paper and is not entitled to a notice unless he pays for it.'"—Denver Post.

Not Nicotine, but Pyridines.

It is doubtful whether any nicotine ever reaches the mouth of the smoker except that present in the moistened tobacco which is in contact with the lips. The smoke products of tobacco do not contain any important quantity of nicotine, the chief toxic bodies being related to that interesting series of organic bases known to chemists as pyridines.—Lancet.

The peculiar gait to which the South American horses are trained, known as the "paseo de trote," is a mincing step, so light and easy that the hoofs scarcely touch the ground. It is said to have been acquired in the early days of the Spanish invasion.

It's love that makes the world go round, but money makes it go round without squeaking.—Somerville Journal.

Scored on McCullough.

"The late John McCullough, the tragedian, was a great friend of mine," said Comedian Crane, "and when in this city used always to live at the Gilsey House. One day I went there to call on him and, he being out, left my card, upon which, underneath my name, by way of a joke, I wrote in large letters the word 'Actor.' The next day I was passing McCullough on the street when he stopped me with, 'Say, Billy, what do you mean by leaving a card in my box with such an infernal lie as that written on it?'

"I got even with him, however, later. McCullough was inordinately fond of the game of seven up, and one evening I had the satisfaction of beating him nine straight games. Bright and early the following morning I again left my card for him at his hotel, this time writing below my name 'Seven up player.' When I saw McCullough later in the day, I jollied him with 'That wasn't any lie I put on my card this morning, was it, John?' And he evidently saw the point, for he didn't reply to my question."—New York Tribune.

The Best at the Bottom.

Speaking of poison murders, a native of Maine told of a peculiar crime that occurred in his state. This was the case of a man who had tired of his wife, and in order to rid himself of her in the shortest and most expeditious manner possible he determined upon her death. Divorce, while a feasible method, appealed not to his frugal mind, since it involved a large initiatory expense from counsel fees and a continuous one from alimony.

So on murder he resolved, arsenic as the agent to effect it, and the method through which to introduce the poison into the stomach of his victim without arousing her suspicions the usually innocuous and popular lemonade.

At the trial it was proved that he carried through his plans with skill and finesse, but after the deadly lemonade had been drunk by his too trusting spouse, noticing that some of the precipitate remained in the bottom of the glass, he stirred it well up and again handed it to his victim with a loving smile, at the same time remarking, "But the best's at the bottom, my dear."

To Subscribers.

A Good Play—Well Played

A joint celebratian of the Royal Neighbors and Woodmen took place last evening at Brink's hall. It being the occasion of the third anniversary of the former and the fourth of the latter. The hall was tastefully decorated with the always appropriate national colors and emblems of the orders. The play entitled "Carl Johnson" was rendered by home talent. The characters were all well represented the following being deserving of special mention. Ray Sorsoleil in the leading role of Carl Johnson with Arthur Lang a close second as Mr. Small, an old line insurance agent and Jens Nelson taking a double part as Mr. Smith and De-Snooky. At the conclusion of the play supper was served by the Royal Neighbors after which dancing and card playing were indulged in until a late hour.

Dear Sir:—At the annual town meeting held in the school house of District No. 166 the following officers were elected for the ensuing term: O. L. Larson, August Krause and Herman Ortloff, supervisors, the former being chairman; Nels K. Anderson, clerk; A. W. Lind, treasurer, assessor and justice of the peace and Fred Swanson, constable. For overseer of highway in each of the six road districts chosen were Rudolph Ristue, Oscar Swenson, H. Sevre, H. Ortloff, Ole Larson and A. W. Lind. By the report read at the town meeting it appeared that all orders are paid and $196.00 in the treasury, except the order of $235.00 for the grader due October 1902. On motion it was ordered that farmers could use the grader for ditching by paying one dollar per day into the town treasury and common wages to one of the supervisors, or a man appointed by them to superintend and run the grader.

Physicians do not always know it all. A gentleman tells this experience: "Up to the age of 24 I never drank a cup of coffee. I had an attack of dyspepsia and consulted an eminent specialist. After examining me he said, 'Young man, coffee drinking has ruined your stomach; if you will give up coffee you will be well.' I paid him his fee of $25 and from that day began drinking coffee, and my dyspepsia passed off."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent

It is perfectly fitting that Mr. McKinley should give the gold pen which Representative Overstreet bought for him to use in signing the gold standard bill to Mr. H. H. Hanna, of Indianapolis, who was the head of the bankers lobby which pushed the gold standard bill from start to finish.

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee has opened headquarters and started the work of the campaign. Secretary Kerr, who is in charge, says the prospect for electing a democratic House is becoming brighter every day and the same thing has been publicly said by prominent republicans.

Senator Turner, of Washington, made an able speech this week, bristling with legal argument showing that the Constitution necessarily followed the flag into all the possessions of the U. S. He challenged any Senator to produce a single decision of the Supreme Court holding it to be necessary that the Constitution should be extended by act of Congress over acquired territory.

The Administration continues to oppose the Davis amendment to the Hay-Pauncefort treaty, and Secretary Hay has gone so far as to supply the British with a reason for rejecting it if adopted, by asserting officially that a similar provision in the Suez convention was omitted intentionally "because the conditions were different." When Lord Salisbury quotes his own language back to him, Mr. Hay will doubtless be at a loss to reply. The amendment, however, in the opinion of all Democratic Senators, is worse than useless, in that it does not give us the right to fortify. Without that right, we can only "defend" the canal by keeping a fleet of warships at each end of it and it is quite obvious that we are likely to have no warships to spare after defending our enormous coast line against any first class power. However, the Republicans have got to do something to hold up their end, and not confess defeat on every suggestion and policy that they make, and so it is probable that the treaty will be amended and passed.

The muddled condition of the Republican party in regard to Porto Rico should be highly encouraging to the Democrats, who, sticking fast to the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, can afford to watch with complacency the struggles of their opponents to square their conscience with their dealing and with political expediency as well. With the House pulling one way, the Senate pulling the other and the President on the fence ready to flop, it is difficult to tell just how the matter will finally be adjusted. It now seems likely, however, that the $2,000,000 gift bill will be joined with the tariff bill so amended as to strike out duties on goods sent from the United States to Porto Rico. The provision for a delegate in Congress will also be stricken out, for what exact purpose no one seems to know unless it is to enforce the fact that the Porto Ricans are a "subject people." The combined bill as amended will supply the Porto Rican government with necessary money for temporary expenses, will put its markets at the mercy of American manufacturers and will still retain 15 per cent protection for the United States sugar and tobacco trusts. Thus everybody ought to be happy, except the Porto Rican people who will pay the duty and be taxed without representation. Such a little thing as this, however, should not trouble Americans whose ancestors went to war with the greatest empire in the world because of its attempt to enforce a similar state of affairs against them. How clearly all this is a matter of expediency is shown by the fact that the agreement was only obtained by the threat of Senator Foraker that if something of the kind was not decided on, he would introduce a bill giving full territorial rights to Porto Rico, and force it to passage by the assistance of the Democratic votes.

A. R. De Fluent, editor of the Journal, Doylestown, Ohio, suffered for a number of years from rheumatism in his right shoulder and side. He says: "My right arm at times was entirely useless. I tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and was surprised to receive relief almost immediately. The Pain Balm has been a constant companion of mine ever since and it never fails." HER HEART'S SECRET;

Or, UNDER A SPELL.

BY JEAN WARNER.

CHAPTER I.

A "Commencement."

It was commencement day at Madam Fleury's fashionable academy. Her spacious salon was filled with the elite of the city. Doting mammas were there, fluttering their matronly feathers with pride and pleasure; solid papas, whose beaming countenances were shadowed with no premonitory suggestions of the madam's semi-annual bills; sympathetic aunts, benevolent uncles and masculine cousins innumerable.

For the madam's establishment was patronized exclusively by the creme de la creme; the madam's young ladies were remarkable everywhere for their stylish manners and elegant deportment; the madam's diploma, embossed in satin and mounted on sandal-wood, was, as she proudly boasted, a passport to the best society everywhere.

There were fifty figures, faultlessly arrayed in imported "commencement" dresses, seated on the carpeted stage, that had been temporarily erected for the proper display of these human exotics.

With their elegant coiffures all in the same fashionable style, their elaborate dresses, cut in the same pattern, their elaborate music, elaborate essays and elaborate manners, the effect might have been satisfactory, but was slightly monotonous.

So, at least, thought Herbert Clive, as, ensconced in a remote corner of the room, he submitted, with polite resignation, to a three-hours' "classical entertainment."

"If they don't all look like the rows of paper dolls Fan used to cut when she was a little girl, there might be some fun in picking out the pretty ones; but—"

Mr. Clive's criticism was brought to an abrupt termination, for at that moment a young girl stepped out from the ranks which seemed a direct contradiction of his assertion.

Her simple white dress was devoid of all ornament; the hair, of a pale, golden hue, was neither puffed nor coiled, but rippled back from a low, broad brow, and fell in wavy clouds to her slender waist; her face, a pure Grecian contour, was of a transparent whiteness, that it seemed no pain, nor pride, nor pleasure could tinge, with life.

With careless but unconscious grace, she took her seat at the harp, that stood alone on a crimson dais, and at the first touch of her delicate hand upon the strings, every whisper in the room was hushed; all eyes were turned toward the fairy-like creature, who could sweep the golden chords into such magic harmony—who could wake the soul that sleeps within the poet's soul.

A wild, sweet prelude, very grateful to ears weary of crashing overtures and shrill choruses, floated through the room for a moment, and died into a low accompaniment, and then the musician's voice arose in a song whose weird melody haunted Herbert Clive until his dying day:

"I'll bind thee with a charm, my love,
I'll seal thee with a spell,
That thou shalt love me more than all—
Shalt love me more than well
For all my dower is magic power—
A power I dare not tell!"

The pathos of the last two lines seemed to Herbert Clive indescribable. They were like the moan of some being cursed with unearthly powers that separated it from human kind; they were at once a cry of triumph and a wail of despair—

"For all my dower is magic power—
A power I dare not tell!"

The song died into silence. A murmur of applause, admiration, and perchance of relief, ran through the audience; but the singer was not encored. The emotions excited by her song were not of the order agreeable to fashionable society. There was a heartbreak in the tones, of which society scarcely approved.

"Who is she?" puffed a stately dowager, near Herbert, as the young musician arose from the harp, and returned to her place among her companions.

"I don't know," was her friend's reply. "A pretty little creature, but without any style. Ah, let me see," and, with a second thought, the lady glanced at her perfumed programme. "'Ballad—original—by Miss Sybil Wraye.' That must be her name, then—Sybil Wraye."

"Sybil Wraye!" That name brought back some half-forgotton associations to Herbert Clive.

Fan had written something home about the girl. What was it? His sister's school-girl letters had in general very little interest for him. He had glanced over them carelessly, smiling, perhaps, at some outburst of girlish enthusiasm, and then (ungallant fellow) twisted them into lights for his cigars.

What was it Fan had written about this Sybil Wraye? It was a strange name, yet it seemed appropriate to her.

And all through the remaining exercises Herbert Clive's eyes were drawn, as if by fascination, to that alabaster profile, that, shaded by its veil of golden hair, seemed to stand forth like some exquisite carving from the groups of pretty, aristocratic but meaningless faces around it. Sybil Wraye, who was she?

She seemed to have neither, father, mother nor friend among this gay audience, when the graduates stood up to receive their diplomas. She alone was without a floral offering from loving hands. Happier girls smiled their thanks for costly baskets and rare bouquets.

Pale, and proud, and silent, she took the hard-earned tribute of her success with a quiet bow, and turned away without blossom or bud to sweeten this hour of girlish triumph with promises sweeter still.

Who was this Sybil Wraye? Herbert glanced at the bouquet he held in his hands. He had purchased it for his sister, but Fannie was laden down with flowers now.

So, without waiting for a sober second thought, the young man scribbled on a card the name that had so awakened his interest, and dispatched the bouquet, by a polite usher, to Miss Sybil Wraye.

He saw the swift look of surprise that passed over the girl's pale countenance as the flowers were handed to her; he noted the faint smile dawn upon her lips, and then change into a quiver of pain; he caught one glance at the wondrous gray eyes hidden beneath those silken lashes, and a strange, pitiful tenderness stole into his heart.

Poor child — friendless, sorrowful child! How young, how lovely, how lonely she was! What charm was it that seemed to set her apart from all the others? What fascination drew his gaze to her fair, delicate face?

He had seen thousands of women far more beautiful, thousands more attractive; yet this pale, slender girl had awakened emotions in his heart he had never felt before.

"Good gracious, brother!" and Fannie's merry voice aroused him from his dream, "are you napping in this dark corner? I have been looking everywhere for you. Do carry some of these flowers, and my fan, and my diploma. Oh, dear, dear! I am so excited and nervous, and delighted, that I scarcely know what I am about. To think that my stupid school days are over at last. There! good gracious, some horrid man has nearly torn my dress off. Bertie, did papa send me the bracelet he promised me, and do you think the dear old darling will give me a summer at the springs?"

"Take a long breath, Fan—do," laughed her brother. "I can't answer forty questions at a time. Why, ten minutes ago you were a very model of elegant composure. I was gazing at you in silent and wondering admiration.'

"Don't be aggravating, brother, please," pouted the pretty graduate. "You were not looking at me at all, or I need not have searched the room over half a dozen times to find you. There were plenty more gallant cavaliers ready to escort me, but I had an especial reason for finding you; and, dear me! that reminds me—where is she?" cried Fan, looking around her with sudden self-reproach. "I declare, I have been in such a flutter that I lost sight of the darling girl entirely. It's just like her to go off in some dark corner by herself; she is so sensitive. Take care of all these things, brother," and the heedless girl dropped books, diploma, fan and flowers in a careless heap at his side. "I must go find Sybil."

And, without waiting for another word, Fannie Clive, whose charming impulsiveness had been a very thorn in Madam Fleury's flesh, darted off through the gay crowd to search for her forgotten friend.

The audience was dispersing now, and so many admiring friends stopped the pretty graduate with compliments and congratulations that it was some time before she could follow the object of her search.

Sybil's harp was covered, and she was gone; the stage was vacant, and the busy groups, laughing and chatting in the spacious salon; there was no sign of the golden-haired songstress, whose bewitching melody had a few moments ago held the gay audience spell-bound.

A long, covered balcony led from the drawing room to a miniature conservatory; where the madam gave elegant lessons in botany, and here it was that Fannie at last found her friend.

She was standing beneath the shadow of some dark-leaved Egyptian plant (whose classification had defied all the researches of feminine science), and the fair, flower-like head was bent over a bouquet of snowy blossoms she held in her hand.

"Sybil—dear Sybil!" cried Fanny, springing forward to her side, "what are you doing here, you naughty girl, all alone? Why did you run away from me? Herbert is here, and—"

Something in the death-white face upturned to hers, made the impulsive girl pause a moment, and then ask, quickly: "Are you ill, darling? Are you suffering? What is the matter, Sybil?"

"Nothing," was the slow reply—"nothing, I am very well, Fannie. You should not have sought one like me, dear, in the hour of glad triumph. Yet it is like you—like you, and only you."

"It was like me to rush off in my headlong way and leave you to mope here by yourself!" said Fannie, remorsefully. "Come, darling; Herbert has the carriage waiting. I wrote them all that I was going to bring the sweetest, dearest girl in the world home with me. Let us go change our dresses, so that we can take the evening train, for I know that dear fellow is fuming himself into a fever at our delay, even now."

A quick change passed over Sybil's face—a spasm, whether of pain, terror or fear, it was impossible to tell.

"No, no! don't ask me, Fannie, my dearest, kindest old friend—don't take me with you to your home. It is better for you, for me, for us all, to part now—now. I cannot go with you. I—I must not!"

"Must not! Cannot!" echoed Fannie, in blank dismay. "After promising me for six months—after all my plans and projects are settled—after I had set my whole heart on this visit? Oh, Sybil, Sybil! I did not think you could treat me so unkindly—I did not think you could be so fickle, so false!"

The sudden blow was too much for warm-hearted Fan's already excited nerves, and she dropped on the bench behind her and gave way to a very tempest of childish tears.

"Don't dear—don't!" said a low, constrained voice in her ear, and Sybil's icy hand was laid upon her brow. "Don't cry this way, Fan, or—or you will make me yield, despite myself."

"I'll never forgive you Sybil Wraye!" sobbed the spoiled pet of fortune vehemently, "never, never, never! You promised me and you deceived me—you that I have loved better than any one in the world—you promised me and you deceived me!"

"No, no, no!" the answer came, as if wrung in desperation from the white lips; "you shall never say that of me, Fannie, you, who have been my only friend. I will keep my promise—I will go home with you; but, oh, Fannie, Fannie! it is not of my own free will. Remember that you forced me, by tears and reproaches that I could not withstand."

"I knew you would, you delightful girl!" exclaimed Fannie, kissing her in a rapture of delight. "There is Herbert now, looking for us. Brother," and twining her arm about her friend's waist, Fan smiled at the tall gentleman whom Madam Fleury had just led to the conservatory door, "this is the dearest and best of friends, who is coming to spend the summer with us. Mr. Clive—Miss Sybil Wraye."

CHAPTER II.

A Double Warning.

Madame Fleury had evidently something upon her mind, disturbing its usual elegant composure.

Her bright black eyes followed the two young girls as they left the room to make the necessary changes in their toilet, and then, with a little preparatory cough, she motioned Mr. Clive to one of the seats under the orange trees.

"There is something I intended to mention to your father, Mr. Clive, if he had honored us with his presence to-day. But—ahem!—that being impossible, I feel that I owe it to myself, and—ahem!—the reputation my academy has always held in the highest and most select circles of society to mention to you, as your father's fitting representative."

Herbert bowed. The madam's preface was somewhat appalling. Had Fan been found guilty in problems of propriety? Had she lost her heart or her diamonds? or run up too large a bill in ribbons and sugar-plums? The young man's ideas of feminine difficulties were rather vague.

"Your sister," continued the madam, gradually recovering her usual suavity of manner, "is, as I need not inform you, Mr. Clive, one of the loveliest, frankest and most impulsive of girls. Buth the very candor and simplicity which we all find so bewitching in the young, makes it incumbent upon friends and guardians, whose judgment has been ripened by knowledge of the world—renders it incumbent on them, I repeat, to be doubly vigilant and prudent in all that concerns—ahem!—the welfare of those committed to our charge. Do you follow me?"

Herbert, with rather a perplexed expression of countenance, implied that he did.

"This being the case," continued the preceptress, with a gracious smile, "and knowing, well, as I do, the high position which your sister will rightfully assume in society, I have observed with no little anxiety the choice she has made of friends; and I assure you, Mr. Clive, that the intimacy she has formed with Miss Wraye has been entirely without my approbation. I have remonstrated with Miss Clive more than once. I have pointed out to her young ladies of her own standing in society, with whom she could properly and naturally form ties of friendship; I seriously objected to this visit to your home; but your sister has been deaf alike to my advice and remonstrances. I found that I was entirely powerless to control the singular infatuation for this chosen friend."

Herbert's brow had darkened strangely during this lengthy address.

"May I ask," he inquired, briefly, "on what you ground your objections to this young lady's intimacy with my sister? Do you know of anything prejudicial to her as a companion to those of her own sex and age?"

"She would not be among my pupils, sir, if I did," was the lofty reply. "No; my objections are grounded on my knowledge of society, and what it demands. Miss Wraye has no position, no friends, no influence to elevate her to an equality with your sister. She was placed here by a lawyer, who acts as her guardian, pays her bills promptly, and denies her nothing that a young lady in good society requires; but beyond this I know nothing of her. She has been here now for more than a year, during which time she has received no letters, seen no friends, and maintained the singular, ungirlish reserve of manner, which I consider both unnatural and ungracious in one so young, though, in justice to her, I must add that her remarkable talents and ladylike deportment have been beyond question of criticism.'

Mr. Clive's brow brightened, and he drew a breath of relief. It would have been rather hard for him to have heard anything against Fan's cherished friend. That cameo-like countenance was surely above all shadow of reproach.

"I understand the responsibility of your position, madam," he answered, politely; "but I am too much of a democrat to give your objections the weight they may, perhaps, deserve. Miss Wraye seems to be a very charming young lady, and Fannie is undoubtedly attached to her. It would be a pity, I think, to let a cold, worldly wisdom sever a tie that seems to me the natural and spontaneous outspringing of heart to heart. There is something so very charming in a first friendship—it has all the freshness and fragrance of spring."

Herbert would have launched into the metaphorical, had not the cold, irresponsive light of the madam's black eyes suddenly brought him back to a matter of fact.

"As you please, Mr. Clive," she answered, with her set, society smile. "I have only done my duty in explaining to you the position the young lady holds in my academy; and, having done so, I shall consider myself relieved of all further responsibility.'

"What an old grimalkin she is!" was Herbert's mental comment, as the two young girls entered the room.

And Sybil, in her dainty brown traveling dress, with her pale-golden hair caught up in a Grecian knot under a graceful straw hat, seemed lovely and ladylike enough to have stepped from a throne.

His generous heart swelled indignantly as he noticed the contrast in the madam's farewells—how gushingly-gracious was her embrace of dear Fannie, how cold and constrained her good-bye to Miss Wraye; and he vowed inwardly that all he could do should be done to make this beautiful girl, for awhile, at least, forget the shadow that seemed to rest so unnaturally on her opening life.

He would brighten her path with sunshine, though it only gleamed a day.

It was not a very difficult task for Herbert Clive to be agreeable. Gifted with a natural charm of manner and graceful address, a warm heart and a lively fancy, he could not fail to please, even without making any particular exertion to do so.

But the madam's cold, and, it seemed to him, cruel, warning, had served as a spur to his ardent, generous nature. He felt as if he could not do enough to show this friendless, lonely girl she was a welcome and honored visitor to his home.

It was a twelve-hours' journey to Clive Towers, and as the sun set in purple glory behind the western hills, the travelers began the pleasantest portion of their trip—their sail up the broad river, on whose sloping banks was situated Herbert's princely home.

Fannie had scarcely set foot on the steamer ere she was met by a party of merry young friends; and after the first introductions and supper were over, a moonlight dance was improvised on the spacious decks, and the sounds of gay music and happy laughter woke the echoes of the solemn hills beneath whose shadows the noble vessel passed.

Herbert did his devoir manfully, though somewhat wearily, to several blooming partners, ere he contrived to slip away from the mirthful scene.

He missed one fairy-like form from the light-hearted group—one sweet, low voice from the silvery chorus—and already he felt a void and silence because Sybil was not there.

He found her all alone, standing at the stern of the steamer, looking into the waters that were here tossed into turbulent waves and showers of pearly spray by the mighty wheels.

As he reached her side, Herbert noticed her start nervously and throw something which she held in her hand into the seething waters; and, with a feeling akin to pain, he recognized the flowers he had given her that evening floating for a moment, worthless waifs, upon the moonlit waves.

He had fancied she valued them a little—a very little. She had held them in her hand all the evening, had touched them tenderly, and once or twice inhaled their perfume, as though it brought some sweet, sad memory. And now she had flung them away like withered weeds.

"Why have you stolen off from us all, Miss Sybil?" he asked, with assumed lightness. "I did not know young ladies were so fond of indulging in maiden meditation fancy free."

"I am used to being alone," she answered, simply, "and these tossing waters have a charm for me. I like to hear their passionate murmur as the steamer passes through their heart. By-and-by they will be all still again—all still. We can only see the life and the spirit here."

"You would like the ocean better," he answered. "There you see, you feel, the life everywhere. There the swelling, seething, restless waves are never still, and the proudest vessels are their sports and playthings, just as our frail human skiffs are tossed about on the sea of life."

"Is there not always a Fate at the helm?" she asked, dreamily—"a stern, impassive Fate, that steers our little barques where and when she will? I have found it so already."

"I prefer to think I hold my own helm," answered Herbert, cheerfully, "and, so far, have found it very fair sailing. And the Fate to whom I resign my post must come in a very charming guise, Miss Sybil, I have never seen her except in dreams until"—he paused, and then added, recklessly, "until to-day. Why did you throw away my flowers?" he continued, eagerly. "Did you not know I breathed a spell upon them?"

"I have no right to accept gifts from you," she answered, coldly. "We are strangers, Mr. Clive."

"Not so," he answered. "Fannie's friendship is a link between us. You must call Fannie's brother friend, Miss Sybil."

"I have no friends," she answered, with a stifled sigh. "I can make none. Forgive me, Mr. Clive, if—if I seem cold and ungracious; but if I am here as your sister's guest, it is against my own will, against my own judgment, against my own sense of justice and right. I am here in a false position that I scorn to hold under a false—"

She paused suddenly, as if some passionate impulse had made her say too much.

But, with Madam Fleury's cold, worldly warning still echoing in his ears, Herbert thought he understood the girl's proud, indignant protest.

She would not be patronized, pitied, protected, even as his sister's guest. She would hold herself aloof from his world and from him. It would need sunshine, indeed to thaw this icy wall of maidenly reserve; and, with a man's pertinacity, Herbert vowed he would do it.

"You have thrown away my flowers and cast aside my friendship," he said, in a tone of half-playful reproach; "and yet I don't despair, Miss Sybil. Some intuition tells me we will be warm friends yet. I feel already the magic power of which you sung this evening drawing me to your side."

She lifted her face to his for one instant, and he was startled at its look of white dismay. There was no girlish affection in her strange answer:

"Heaven forbid! If I believed that any dark Fate was drawing our paths together, I would cast myself this moment into the waters swelling beneath our feet, and end all!"

KEPT HER RELATIVES ANXIOUS.

New Orleans Woman Who Gained Favor by Making Many Wills of Big Figures.

"Several years ago," said a New Orleans lawyer, chatting about queer experiences in his profession, "a woman died in this city who, to my certain knowledge, had made at least twenty-five different wills. Of course there are people in the world who have a mania for will-making, just as there are maniacs in other directions, but there was a distinct method in this woman's madness. She made her numerous wills for the deliberate purpose of exciting cupidity, and then profiting by it, and if the true story of the curious complications growing out of that policy could be written it would form an astonishing chronicle of greed and duplicity.

"To begin with, she had a couple of pieces of improved property, worth perhaps $6,000, and a lot of personal belongings which were mere junk and rubbish, but which she valued at a fabulous figure. Between the two she was reputed to be worth from $50,000 to $60,000, and there was much jealousy as to the prospective succession among a lot of distant relatives. The old woman's plan was to take up her quarters with some particular set of her kin and make a will in their favor. Needless to say, she would be treated with every consideration, but she was irascible, and invariably got into a quarrel in the course of a few months, and moved somewhere else, where the same programme was repeated. She spent years in migrations of that sort, going the rounds of her relatives several times and camping temporarily with numerous personal friends.

"When she finally died it was found that her last authentic will left the coveted property to a niece who had shown her scarcely any attention at all, and the cry of rage and disappointment that arose was something simply terrific. I dare say she engendered more family bitterness when she was alive, precipitated more rows, and was instrumental in causing a greater number of people to stop speaking when they passed by than any one person in the parish. This was an extreme case, but it was by no means unique. Almost every lawyer in town who has a large general practice could cite instances where judicious will-making has kept old age surrounded by affectionate solicitude."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

WATERING THE LAND

HOW IRRIGATION IS PROGRESSING IN IDAHO.

Heretofore Arid Regions Being Rapidly Transformed Into Gardens—Farmers' Societies in Many Instances Own the Irrigating Works.

(Boise, Idaho, Letter.)

Most of the people who farm in the rainfall regions suppose that the irrigation of land is a complicated process and that the art of doing it can only be acquired after years of experience, whereas, as a matter of fact, it is about the easiest and most simple work the western farmer has to do. In most cases the children attend to it under the direction of their parents, and any boy of 10 or 12 can do a man's work when it comes to irrigation.

The western farmer is wholly indifferent as to rainfall. He doesn't depend upon it in the least. The water that interests him is that which flows down into the valley from the melting snows in the mountain ranges. These waters he diverts into great canals which run along the rim of the valley about the irrigable lands and are tapped at stated intervals by what are called "laterals" or sub-ditches which flow from farm to farm and out of which the farmer takes the water for his fields. In some cases the waters of these mountain streams are acquired by the community of farmers along their course, each one holding as many shares of stock in the co-operative canal scheme as he owns acres of land, and being entitled to so many inches of water for every acre of his ownership. This is the usual plan. But when the construction of the main canal, owing to engineering difficulties, is too expensive a piece of business for the farmer to afford, irrigation companies undertake the work and build the canal into portions of the country where large areas of land are to be reclaimed. These irrigation companions are "common carriers" of water and furnish it for a nominal price per acre per annum to the farmer. Sometimes these irrigation companies own large tracts under their ditch which they sell in small farms with the water right, to settlers at a nominal prices per acre. In other instances they do not own land at all, leaving that to be acquired by the settler under the various acts of congress.

Perhaps no portion of the Union is now making such active progress in irrigation development, or is receiving so large a quota of immigrants as southern Idaho. There are millions of unoccupied acres in that state which only await settlement to become as productive as the lands upon the Nile. Efforts are being put forth by the state authorities to bring the advantages of these lands to the notice of the eastern farmer, and the several railroads of the state are engaged in the work.

Perhaps the easiest and the best way to acquire information is from the General Passenger Agent of the Oregon Short Line at Salt Lake City, from whence conservatively prepared pamphlets descriptive of irrigation methods and containing reliable information about the various localities now open for settlement, are being mailed free.

The time is certainly not far distant when the unoccupied public domain of Idaho will be entirely taken up, a condition which will be most unfortunate to those who delay taking advantage of the rare opportunities now offered.

Saw a Frozen River Explode.

A farmer living near Banker, on the Nebraska side of the Missouri river, had a remarkably narrow escape from instant death as the result of an explosion—not of dynamite or nitroglycerine, but of ice in the Missouri river. Banker was driving across the river on an ice bridge. When about the center of the main channel he suddenly heard an ominous rumbling underneath the ice, and was not long in deciding that something unusual was about to happen. Lashing his horses into a wild run, he headed for the shore, which he had just reached in safety, when the explosion or "blow-up" occurred. It is said by those who witnessed the incident that large bodies of heavy ice in an area of about a square mile were thrown fully forty or fifty feet into the air by the force of the upheaval. The phenomenon is said to have been caused by the sudden and extreme change in the weather to colder, the ice forming so quickly and so solidly that no air-holes were left, the pressure of the imprisoned air finally becoming so great as to force its escape in the manner stated, by tossing hundreds of tons of ice into the air as though it were feathers.—Minneapolis Times.

No Name for His Colonel's Home.

The colonel of a well known Highland regiment, on retiring from the army, built for himself a snug villa which he named "The Retreat." His gardener, who was an old soldier from the same regiment, on being shown over the place for the first time by the colonel, was asked by the latter what he thought of the house.

"Fine! But I dinna like that," said the old soldier, pointing to the name painted on the entrance gate.

"Why, what's the matter with it?"

"Weel, sir," replied the veteran, drawing himself up, "ye ken ye never heard that played on oor bugles."—Answers.

Not Worth His Salt.

The above is an expression we often hear, but few people realize its antiquity or its original meaning. It is handed down to us from ancent Roman days, when the soldiers received a portion of salt as part of their pay. "Sal" is the Latin for salt, and when in the course of time the salt was commuted for money the amount was called "salarium," or salt money. Hence our word salary, and also the phrase, "not worth his salt."—Golden Penny.

Strong.

The butter lobby were more numerous and influential than the oleomargarine lobby, and the pure food legislation prevailed.

Soon after this, Butter and Oleomargarine chanced to meet, in allegory.

"How's the battle?" asked Butter, not, perhaps in the very best of taste.

"The battle," replied Oleomargarine, with terrible sarcasm, "is to the strong!"

Seemingly, there was no reconciling these two discordant factors of our civilization.—Detroit Journal.

PECULIARTIES OF GENIUS.

Stories of Mme. Sembrich, Sig. Tamagno and Sig. Foli.

One prima donna at least has been known to take her own cook to prepare dinner for her when she was invited out to dine. Mme. Sembrich is not so exacting in her requirements. In one respect she is unyielding—everything she drinks must be warm, even champagne. The other night at a large dinner party she surprised her hostess by asking for a pitcher of hot water. When it was brought to her she proceeded to dilute the champagne in her glass, "to keep," as she expressed it, "from taking cold." Her husband, possibly fearing that with such a sensitive organization Mme. Sembrich might take cold if he failed to pour hot water in his champagne, followed the same hygienic course. But Tamagno was the trying one, when it came to dinner parties. Upon one occasion, the last, indeed, of the kind, he was invited to dine in the sacred and innermost circles. Some of his fellow singers, including the De Reszkes and Mme. Melba, were also invited. The first thing he did was to open his opera hat and put it on the floor beside his chair. The soup, fish and the earlier courses passed without surprise. But after awhile hothouse grapes, bonbons and other edibles found their way into his hat. With each relay he would say briefly, "For my daughter." Finally, when the company arose from the table, his colleagues completely overcome with chagrin, he took the bouquet of the lady who sat next to him, calmly saying, "For my daughter," and placed that on top of the collection, put his hat under his arm and marched out. Signor Foli some years since took part in a concert at St. Helen's, where he sung "The Raft." He had just finished his first verse when an infant in arms made the hall resound with its cries. Foli commenced the second verse, the first line of which runs "Hark What is that which greets the mother's ear?" He could get no farther than the end of the line by reason of a fit of uncontrollable laughter. He left the stage, but soon returned, smiling, and sung in his inimitable style, "Out on the Deep."—Denver Times.

REBUKE TO A BRIDE

During the Honeymoon That Lasted Through Her Life.

"Never shall I forget," said a bride, "the first word of criticism I received from my husband. Everything was moving along beautifully. There hadn't been a single cloud over our honeymoon. Then one morning I found Hal standing before my dressing table looking down disgustedly at the comb lying there. 'What was the matter?' Here two cheeks blushed like scarlet geraniums. Well, I had it full of combings, a habit, I frankly admit, I had always been guilty of. This time it got me into a pickle. Hal held that comb out at arm's length, the untidy mat of hair clinging to it, and I will say he tried to make his voice nice and lamb-like, but I saw by the line of his lips and the flash of his eye that he was thoroughly put out. 'Elizabeth,' he said, 'is this your comb?' just as if he don't know it was the very comb he had given my last birthday. I meekly answered 'yes.' 'Then,' he said, 'I would try to keep it like a lady's comb.' With that he turned on his heel and stalked out of the room, leaving me sniffly and terribly abused. But it was a wholesome lesson. I never forgot it, and my comb rested in spick and span cleanliness on my dresser ever afterwards. Not that comb. I packed it out of sight, handsome as it was, that very morning, and couldn't bear to use it again. But I've never been caught napping with its substitute. Not a single hair is allowed to remain in it over time." This bride's husband had the courage to correct her for her fault. How many men, though, naturally neat themselves, have to endure the petty trials of a wife who is careless in just such toilet trifles?—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Scientific Bequest.

An important bequest has been made to the University of France by M. Raphael Bischoffsheim, the banker of Dutch origin who became a naturalized Frenchman nineteen years ago and now sits in parliament for a division of the Alpes Maritimes. He has made over the freehold of the Nice observatory, founded by himself, with its branches, instruments, library and lands, to the university, together with a sum of £100,000, to be devoted to the maintenance of the establishment on Mont Gros, so well known to English visitors who patronize Nice or its neighbors in winter. The total value of the Bischoffsheim bequest is estimated at 5,000,000 francs, or £200,000. The Nice observatory has done good work and scientific men are glad to see that its future is assured through the liberality of its founder.—London Telegraph.

The Byzantine Empire.

Byzantine Empire was the Roman Empire of the east. The name was derived from Byzantium, the ancient name of Constantinople, the capital of the empire. As a separate power it began its existence in 395 A. D., when Theodosius the Great died, bequeathing the Empire of Rome to his two sons, who divided it—Arcadius taking the eastern half, with his capital at Constantinople. It was a rich and powerful sovereignty, and continued to exist for over ten centuries. During the last few centuries it was gradually but surely declining before the Turks and Saracens, and ended with the Mohammendan conquest of Constantinople in 1543. It was also called the Greek Empire, and was the home and head of the Greek church.

Spread of the English Language.

Writing on the decline of the French language, M. Jean Finot points out that at the end of the last century French was the language spoken by the greatest number of civilized people, whereas now it stands fourth. English is spoken by 116,000,000, Russian by 85,000,000, German by 80,000,000, and French by 58,000,000.

How to Catch Cold.

The various ways in which a cold may be brought on are thus described by Dr. J. H. Kellogg: "A little knife-blade of air blowing in through a crack in a window upon some part of the body will chill that part and the blood vessels of that region will become contracted, affecting, somewhere in the interior of the body, an area in reflex relation with this portion of the surface of the body. For instance, the blood vessels of the skin of the top of the shoulders and the chest are associated with the blood vessels of the lungs, so that whatever happens to the blood vessels of the skin of the shoulders and chest happens also to the blood vessels of the lungs. If there is a contraction of the blood vessels of the back of the neck there will be a contraction of the blood vessels of the nose and throat, and if there is a contraction of the blood vessels of the top of the shoulders and the shoulder blades there will also be a contraction of the blood vessels of the lungs. When the influence of the cold is continued this contraction is followed by congestion.—Good Health.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Forcing Fruit Bearing.

(Condensed from Farmers' Review Stenographic Report of Wisconsin Horticultural Convention.)

A. L. Hatch spoke on what can be done to make plant live, grow and bear fruit. He said in part: A tree or any plant should have a balanced ration. The soil must be suited to the plant to be grown, and must contain the proper foods. Thus, you can't grow apple trees successfully on muck soils. Cultivation should begin early in the season, for it is early in the season that the tree makes most of its growth. Every fruit tree and plant should make a good growth every season. We should mulch and cultivate our trees every year. I have found that spring pruning gives better fruitage than at any other season of the year. Later pruning removes foliage that contains growth matter.

Water sprouts and those not coming out where wanted should be rubbed off in the spring, while yet in the bud stage. The real winter protection is in so growing the tree that the wood is well ripened and hardened up to stand the winter. The man that permits the foliage of his trees to be damaged by insects or diseases will have trees with wood only partly ripened, and such will have less power to stand hard winter conditions than will the trees that have had good foliage to ripen up their wood.

Q. Do you recommend puddling the roots of all trees before setting?

A.—Yes, sir. But perhaps I should not say all trees. However, I do not know any other way of getting good capillarity, that is, getting the roots so intimately connected with the dirt that capillary attraction can operate between them. This does not mean that we should make a thick, heavy mud to hold the roots. Would not you, Mr. Kellogg, puddle your trees before setting?

M. S. Kellogg—Yes.

Q.—How deep is it advisable to cultivate the orchard?

Mr. Hatch—That depends on how much cultivation the orchard has previously received. If it has been always in grass, the roots will be found so near the surface that only very superficial cultivation can be given; but if the orchard has been cultivated from the first, the roots will be deeper. If I had trees that had been planted for ten years, and never cultivated, I would not cultivate more than four inches deep. Grass sod in the orchard is very injurious to the trees, especially at times of the year when soil water is deficient and trees have to depend to some extent on the occasional showers. In that case the roots of the grass drink up about all of the moisture before it gets down to the roots. I have dug up sod in the orchard hours after a good shower and found that not one drop had got within reach of the roots of the trees; every blade of grass was acting as a pump, pumping the moisture back into the atmosphere. There are multitudes of trees that by reason of the sod beneath them are thirsty most of the time during the growing season. You must remember that not a particle of food can enter the tree except by being carried in water; therefore you can starve a tree to death by depriving it of water. The reason that so many orchards in grass are moderately successful is because they get in the springtime the water from melting snow and from spring rains, and for a part of the growing season have all the water they can use. But they remain thirsty for a large part of the season.

Q.—Can't you extend the season of cultivation if the cultivation is light?

Mr. Hatch—Professor Bailey says that the orchard should not be cultivated after midsummer.

Q.—Can we make trees bear alternate years?

Mr. Hatch—Yes. If the trees are going to bear this year we can prune a part of them and prevent them from bearing a crop this year; they will then probably bear next year.

Superficial Farming.

There is a time in the history of every country when superficial farming pays better than any other kind of farming, or at least that is the opinion we hold without giving the assertion a systematic investigation. That time is when inhabitants are few and the rich lands free and abundant. The land is pastured over superficially, plowed superficially and cropped over superficially. The results are satisfactory. The new settlers, living in log cabins that cost nothing but labor, pay no taxes to speak of, and find it possible to get all the clothing and other necessities from the products of their own lands or flocks or herds. With all wants abundantly supplied there is no inducement to do anything but superficial farming. The fathers transmit their methods to their sons, and they to succeeding generations, and that mode of farming becomes fixed. In time the methods come to be regarded as "orthodox" for all conditions.

Meantime people become more numerous and land scarce. Populations crowd each other and the value of land rises. Taxes multiply, and the farm expenses become items of the first consideration. It is evident that new problems have arisen that the old-style farmers cannot solve. The customs of generations, however, prove strong, and the multitude of farm owners will hang to them, even to the point of seeing their farms slip away into the hands of the mortgagors.

Superficial farming must be discarded. It is not in accordance with the changed people and times. It cannot give revenue enough to meet the obligations that the new conditions impose. Superficial tillage must give way to intensive tillage. Superficial pasturage must give way to a system of pasturage that utilizes the soil to a foot in depth instead of to a depth of two or three inches. Superficial operations of all kinds must be abandoned except in the far West, where lands are still cheap and conditions of life are primitive. The wise farmer will be willing to sell a part of his immense farm and use the capital thus obtained to operate in a more intensive manner the smaller area of land remaining.

Feeding Fat into Milk.

The New Zealand Dairyman, commenting on the attempts to feed fat into milk, says:

In 1874-77 the great German investigator Keuhu, feeding cows on palm nut meal in particular, and also malt sprouts, peanut meal and cottonseed meal, concluded that these feeds increased directly the amount of fat in the milk, and for a time these statements were hardly disputed. In 1879 the same learned investigator, after further experimenting, changed his views and wrote: "The system of feeding is only of secondary importance for milk production; the yield of milk is primarily dependent on the development or productive capacity of the milk glands of each cow, and even with changes from light to heavy feed the supply does not increase in proportion to the nutriment supplied. The same holds true where the farmer aims to increase any single component of milk—as fat—since it is not possible to obtain a one-sided increase of this or any other component in the milk by changes in the system of feeding. No such changes can, at any rate, be reached as of practical importance." But this plain statement from one of the most careful investigators the world has produced was not accepted as final, and scientists have worked over the question again and again in a multitude of ways.

Perhaps the best illustrations of how they have started and how they came out of the investigations in many cases was by Patrick at the Iowa station. This investigator fed one lot of his cows heavily with sugar meal, a by-product of the glucose factory, giving to another lot a lighter feed of mixed grain; then the conditions were reversed. Analysis showed apparently in some cases that the cows had increased as much as .5 of one per cent butter-fat, and the conclusion of the investigator was that sugar meal was one of the feeds which would surely increase the fat percentage of milk. But all the cows on the trial did not increase the fat in their milk, and to pile up more data another experiment was undertaken with sugar meal as one of the feeds. This time there was no increase in fat, and the investigator ceased his contentions that sugar meal fed to cows would put fat into their milk.

Apple Maggot.

One of the worst pests that the apple grower has to fight is the railroad worm, called also the pulp worm, and the apple maggot, says a communication from the Vermont Experiment Station. The fruit growers of Vermont are unanimous in giving this insect the first rank among their insect enemies. It is worse than the tent caterpillar. That can be entirely overcome by spraying, whereas spraying has no effect on the railroad worm. The railroad worm, or apple maggot, is the cause of the pulpy, punky condition of the apples as we find them now in the stored fruit and in that offered for sale. The eggs are laid just under the skin of the apple by a small fly. This fly begins her work in June and keeps it up pretty much all summer, so that there may be worms of all ages in the apples. She has a strong preference for sweet apples, and has practically ruined the crop of Talmans last year. Still she works in all varieties, sour as well as sweet, and causes hundreds of dollars' loss to the fruit grower. The authorities at the Vermont Experiment Station frankly admit that no satisfactory way of dealing with it has been discovered. They say that considerable good can be accomplished by keeping hogs or sheep in the orchard to pick up the windfalls. These windfalls are usually full of apple maggots, and the hogs digest them out of existence. Experiments are being made at various places in the United States, and we hope eventually to know some more effective way of dealing with this pest. But for the present we must rely on the practice of destroying the windfalls.

Sorghum Hay.

One must sow at least a bushel of seed to the acre. In real rich soil I would sow a little more, writes a contributor to Nebraska Farmer. For hay sorghum should not be cut until the seed is thoroughly ripened, as it will cure quicker, and the stalks are sweeter, and the seed is of value. I cut a part of my acre for green feed for horse and cow. Where cut when shoulder high, but quite green, it makes a second crop fully as high and thick as the first crop. This second crop ripened. If the second crop doesn't ripen, let it stand until the frost hits it pretty hard. When well cured, sorghum hay will stand for more wet weather than hay. A neighbor has some in the field yet, and I hauled in part of mine only last week. We regard sorghum forage as one of the most valuable of Nebraska crops for stock.

Quality of Seed Corn.—The yield of corn is dependent in no small degree on the quality of the seed, which should be selected before the corn is cut, having regard to the size and character of the stalk as well as to the ripeness and type of the ear. When the season is especially favorable for thoroughly maturing the ears, enough seed to last at least two years should be gathered, completely dried out before frost, and stored in a warm, dry place. A difference of 2 per cent in the yield of dry matter on two adjacent acres was noted in favor of the crop grown from well-ripened seed over the yield from seed grown in a wet, cold season.—Clinton D. Smith.

Mixed Grasses for Pasture.—In selecting grasses for the pasture those that mature at different periods should be chosen, so that a good supply of feed may be coming on at all times of year. The stock do not do their harvesting all at one time and so do not require that the grasses ripen simultaneously. The larger the number of grasses the better.

Wheat is grown in practically all countries of the world, but comes to greatest perfection in cool climates.

Molasses for Stock.

In a number of European experiments reported molasses feeds were tested with dairy cows. No deleterious results were noticed, even when 4 to 5 pounds of molasses was fed daily. An extended study of the value of molasses as part of a ration for pigs, steers, sheep, milch cows, and horses was recently reported in a French agricultural journal. The principal conclusions from the investigation were as follows: When molasses formed part of the ration of sheep, pigs, and steers, the gains in live weight were rapid. When molasses was fed to milch cows the total milk yield and the amount of fat and milk sugar in the milk was increased. The increase is not regarded as sufficient to warrant the conclusion that molasses is a suitable food for milch cows. Molasses is regarded as an excellent food for horses. It was readily eaten, and vigor and weight were maintained when it was added to the ration. Molasses may be advantageously employed for rendering inferior hay or fodder more palatable.

The report of the Canadian Experimental Farms already referred to notes briefly the successful use of molasses in fattening steers. Three to 5 pounds was fed per day, diluted somewhat, and poured over the cut coarse fodder. It is said the steers developed a great liking for it, and to all appearances it gave good results. The test was summed up as follows:

The most important points in favor of this new feeding stuff may be stated as follows: (1) It contains a large percentage of sugar, the most assimilable form of carbohydrates found in cattle feeds. This class of nutrients is used by the animal for the production of energy, the maintenance of the vital heat, and the production of fat; (2) it stimulates the appetite, and (3) probably increases the digestibility of the other constituents of the ration.

In the experiments cited above beet-sugar molasses was fed. An interesting experiment in which cane-sugar molasses was added to the ration of horses was recently reported in an Australian journal. At the Rarawah sugar plantation in the Fiji islands over 400 horses were satisfactorily fed a ration containing a considerable amount of molasses, as much as 30 pounds per head daily being fed at different times. The ration finally adopted consisted of 15 pounds of molasses, 3 pounds of bran, and 4 pounds of maize per head daily. In addition green cane tops were fed. The health of the horses remained excellent. Molasses did not cause diarrhoea, but rather constipation, which was counteracted by the bran fed. Feeding molasses effected a saving of over $45 per head per annum. Such a saving was, however, believed to be possible only by reason of the large quantities of waste molasses and valueless cane tops available on the spot. The experiment was continued for a considerable time. Some of the conclusions drawn were as follows:

For working horses the sugar in cane molasses is a satisfactory substitute for starchy food, being readily digested and transformed into work. Fifteen pounds of the molasses can be given to a 1,270-pound working horse with advantage to the health of the animal and to the efficiency of its work. It produces no undue fattening, softness, or injury to the wind. The high proportion of salts in it has no injurious effect. An albuminoid ratio as low as 1:11.8 has proved highly suitable for heavy continuous work, when a sufficient quantity of digestible matter is given.

These are only a few of the tests which might be cited. It is not the purpose of this article to recommend that molasses be generally adopted as a feeding stuff, but rather to call the attention of those who are interested to the subject so that tests may be undertaken or experience already gained may be reported.

Care of the Brood Sow.

The sow that has been bred for a litter of spring pigs should not be neglected now. She should have a good, comfortable place to sleep, writes Wallace Jamison in Modern Farmer. It should be warm and dry, and she should not be crowded in with other hogs. If she can have the run of a woods lot or pasture field, so much the better. A little grazing every day will be good for her and the pigs expected. It will help to keep her in good condition. If she must be confined in a pen, she should be fed some food of a laxative nature. A little wheat bran with the kitchen slop will be beneficial. The feed given her is not only for her sustenance, but is also giving a start to the pigs that are to follow. If good, vigorous pigs are wanted, their welfare should be looked after now. The sow should not get too fat. She wants to be kept in good growing condition, and her surroundings and feed should be such that she will be contented and happy. A poor, bony, squealing sow, with her fore feet on the top rail of the fence when you go to feed her, is not the sow to bring forth pigs for you to be proud of and profit by.

Feed for Pigs.—For pigs just after weaning we find nothing better than wheat middlings and skim milk. Sometimes we cannot get all the skim milk we want, and have to divide the limited supply among those most needing it. We have used ground oil cake and ground flax seed in very small quantities, steeped with the middlings; but though they are better than nothing, they do not equal milk. Of the two, probably the ground flax seed is the better, but it should not constitute more than about five per cent of the total food. By the time the pigs are about three months old a little ground grain is usually added. We like barley for this purpose, and often add a few oats ground as finely as possible.—Ex.

"Primaries" are the flight feathers of the wings, hidden when the wing is closed, being tucked under the visible wing, which is composed of secondary feathers. Usually the primaries contain the deepest color belonging to the fowl, except the tail, and great importance is attached to their color by breeders.

If all milk for calves were pasteurized, it is probable that tuberculosis among cattle would soon very largely disappear.

Why She Stopped the Paper.

She came down the street three steps at a time, and sailed into our printing office like a whirlwind. She waited for no ceremony, but wildly asked: "Is this the paper printing office?" "Yes, madam." "I want to stop my paper." "All right, madam." "Stop it right away, too." "It's stopped," the foreman said, as he drew a blue pencil across her husband's name on the subscription list. "There, now!" she said, "maybe that will learn you some hoss sense and how to do the square thing next time, and not slight people just because they are poor. If some rich, stuck-up folks happen to have a baldheaded, knock-kneed, cross-eyed and toothless brat born to them you're in an awful hurry to put it in the paper and make it out an angel; but when poor people have a baby you can't say a word about it, even if it is the purtiest baby borned. That's what I am stopping my paper for. This ort to be a lesson to every paper in Cass county," and she went out as mad as an old wet hen.—Cass County (Kas.) Dem.

AN APPEAL TO HUMANITY

We need your assistance in announcing to the world the GREATEST REMEDY that Science has ever produced, and you need our assistance to secure relief for yourself and friends through SWANSON'S "5 DROPS."

A REMEDY SUPREME As surely as the American Navy has conquered and will conquer all that opposes it, so will "5 DROPS" unfailingly conquer all diseases like Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Catarrh of all kinds, ASTHMA, Dyspepsia, Backache, Sleeplessness, Nervousness, Heart Weakness, Toothache, Earache, Creeping Numbness, Bronchitis, Liver and Kidney Troubles, etc., etc., or any disease for which we recommend it. "5 DROPS" is the name and the dose. "5 DROPS" is perfectly harmless. It does not contain Salicylate of Soda nor Opiates in any form. The Child can use it as well as the Adult.

5 DROPS [TRADE MARK.]

Read carefully what Mr. L. R. Smith, of El Dorado Springs, Mo., writes us under date of Nov. 27, 1899, also Martan Bowers, of Caraghar, Ohio, under date of Dec. 16th, 1899:

NEURALGIA

I do not know how to express how wonderful I think your "5 DROPS" medicine is. I was suffering intensely with NEURALGIA and thought for a month that I would have to die. One day a lady called to see me and brought me an advertisement of your "5 DROPS." I resolved to try it and sent for a sample bottle. Have been taking it for three weeks and have not had an attack of suffering since I took the first dose. I believe it has saved my life. This statement is positively true. I shall also take pleasure in recommending your "5 DROPS" for the cure of NEURALGIA.
L. R. SMITH.
El Dorado Springs, Mo., Nov. 27, 1899.

RHEUMATISM Your "5 DROPS" came to hand on the 11th of last month and was glad to receive it for I was suffering at the time with untold agonies. The first dose helped me out of my pain on short notice. Bless the name of God for it. It will do all you say it will, and more too. I had severe pains all over my body, when night came I could not sleep. The worst pain was in my left leg. I could not put my foot to the floor without suffering great pain. Have used four different kinds of medicine for RHEUMATISM and got no relief until I got your "5 DROPS," which gave me immediate relief as above stated. MARTAN BOWERS, Box 83, Caraghar, Ohio. Dec. 16, 1899.

30 DAYS to enable sufferers to give "5 DROPS" at least a trial, we will send a sample bottle, prepaid by mail for 25c. A sample bottle will convince you. Also, large bottles (300 doses) $1.00, 6 bottles for $5. Sold by us and agents. AGENTS WANTED in New Territory. Don't wait! Write now!

CONGRESS

Resume of the Week's Proceedings.

The Senate.

Washington, March 13.—During almost the entire session of the senate yesterday Mr. Rawlins (Utah) occupied the floor in a discussion of the Philippine question. He went deeply into the constitutional phase of the question. His argument was largely legal and technical. He is opposed to the holding of the Philippines. Eighty-six private pension bills were passed.

The House.

Yesterday, for the second time within a week, a Democrat was unseated by the house and a Republican seated in his place. R. A. Wise was given the seat hitherto occupied by W. A. Young from the Second Virginia district. Previous to taking the vote John S. Wise of New York, who was formerly a member of the house from Virginia, and who is a brother of R. A. Wise and his attorney in the case, was excluded from the hall by Speaker Henderson on the protest of the Democrats that he was abusing the privilege of the floor, to which he was entitled by the rules of the house, by interfering with the debate upon the case. The votes were exceedingly close. While none of the Republicans voted with the Democrats, enough were absent and unpaired to reduce the Republican majority upon the final vote from 10, the normal majority, to 7. The urgency deficiency bill, carrying $1,430,380, was passed.

The House.

Washington, March 14—The last legislative step in the enactment of the financial bill was taken by the house of representatives yesterday when the conference report on the bill was adopted by a vote of 166 to 120; present and not voting, 10. The senate had already adopted the conference report, so that it remains only for President McKinley to affix his signature to the measure to make it a law. Representative Overstreet, the author of the bill, will take it to the White House to-day, and the signature is likely to be affixed soon thereafter. Already arrangements have been made for securing the pen with which the president will sign the bill. The debate on the report continued throughout the day, Mr. Overstreet of Indiana opening, and Mr. Brosius of Pennsylvania closing in support of the measure, while Mr. Little of Arkansas closed in opposition with a severe arraignment of the bill. The vote was on party lines except that nine Democrats joined with the Republicans in supporting the conference report.

The Senate.

Personal explanations were made yesterday in the senate by Mr. Allen of Nebraska and Mr. Butler of North Carolina of their positions on the financial question. Both announced their belief in the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. The statements were called out by reports to the contrary which had gained circulation. Mr. Turner of Washington began an extended speech on the Porto Rican bill. He maintained that the pending measure clearly was unconstitutional and expressed his belief that it would be so held if it were passed upon by the supreme court.

The Senate.

Washington, March 15.—Two arguments were presented to the senate yesterday in which almost antipodal positions were taken by two senators. Mr. Teller of Colorado, in a brief speech maintained that the constitution could not extend over territory acquired by the United States, while Mr. Turner of Washington elaborately contended that the constitution embraced the acquired territory the very moment the United States took possession of it. Mr. Teller held that this government could make this outlying territory into states or could hold it as colonies as it saw fit; while Mr. Turned maintained that the United States could not maintain colonies or dependencies. Abide from the constitutional letters the two senators were in practical agreement. Both were opposed to the pending bill and both were opposed to any of insular territory becoming a part of the United States or any of its inhabitants citizens of the United States.

The House.

The District of Columbia appropriation bill was taken up in the house yesterday, and under the latitude allowed Mr. Adamson of Georgia discussed the Nicaragua canal, Mr. Cowherd, the Philippine question; Mr. Howard of Georgia, questions relating to the Philippines and the "open door" policy in the Orient; Mr. Rucker of Missouri, the advisability of electing senators by the people, and Mr. Boutelle of Illinois replied to Mr. Cowherd. The house adopted a resolution setting aside alternate Fridays for the discussion of private bills reported by the claims and war claims committee.

The Senate.

Washington, March 16. — "I assert most emphatically that when the senator says I told him I should not speak on this subject, he does not state the truth."

This was the sensational retort made in the senate yesterday by Mr. Gallinger of New Hampshire to a statement just made by Mr. Penrose of Pennsylvania. Senators were astounded and the auditors in the galleries quivered with excitement. There had scarcely been the slightest intimation that the debate would take such a turn. For nearly three hours the senate had had under discussion the bill appropriating $2,095,000 for the benefit of the people of Porto Rico. Mr. Fairbanks of Indiana had just concluded some remarks on the measure and suggested that the senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. Pending a motion to that effect, Mr. Penrose, who has charge of the case of Former Senator Quay, suggested that a time be fixed for a vote on the case. In the course of his remarks he intimated that certain senators were throwing obstacles in the way of a vote and indicated that Mr. Gallinger was one of those senators. Mr. Gallinger quietly replied that he desired to be heard on the question, but had not had an opportunity to speak. To this statement Mr. Penrose retorted that the New Hampshire senator had assured him that he did not expect to speak on the Quay case. Instantly Mr. Gallinger was on his feet and, with evident feeling and with great vehemence, replied as above quoted.

"I do not know whether I do not speak the truth," hotly replied Mr. Penrose, "or whether the senator from New Hampshire failed to tell me the truth." Mr. Gallinger retorted that the whole proceeding of Mr. Penrose was unmanly and beneath his notice.

The proposition to fix a time for a vote was postponed until to-day, but it was some time before the excitement subsided. The debate on the appropriation bill developed a decided difference of opinion, as Mr. Jones of Arkansas offered a substitute for the measure a bill to return the duties to those who had paid them and providing for absolute free trade between the United States and Porto Rico. The bill had not been disposed of when the Quay case was called up. Mr. Wellington of Maryland presented an elaborate argument against the seating of Mr. Quay, and the remainder of the session was consumed in a running discussion of the constitutional questions involved.

The House.

The district of Columbia appropriation bill, carrying $6,608,378, was passed by the house yesterday, and also a bill granting the abandoned Fort Hayes military reservation to the State of Kansas for experimental station and normal school purposes.

The Senate.

Washington, March 17.—After a debate, at times spirited, extending over parts of two days, the senate yesterday passed the Porto Rican relief appropriation bill. As passed, the measure carries $2,095,000, the president being authorized to use that sum for "public education, public works and other governmental and public purposes" in Porto Rico. Mr. Allen (Neb.) offered an amendment to the bill declaring that the Constitution extends over Porto Rico by its own force, but it was lost by the decisive vote of 36 to 17. Mr. Jones (Ark.) withdrew a free trade amendment offered by him and that proposition, therefore, did not reach a vote. Other efforts to amend the bill were fruitless. An order was made by the senate as to consideration of the case of former Senator Quay, it being unanimously agreed that it should be taken up two weeks from next Tuesday and discussed until disposed of, the discussion not to interfere with the unfinished business, the Spooner bill authorizing the president to govern the Philippines until otherwise directed, the appropriation bills or conference reports.

The House.

Yesterday was the first private bill day in the house under the new rules. About two hours were spent in the discussion of a bill to pay Representative Swanson $1,769 for extra expenses incurred by him in his contest in the last congress, but the bill was ultimately abandoned. Six bills of minor importance were passed.

News of the Northwest

BEING INJURED, HE SUICIDED.

After Losing a Foot Under the Cars Hynes Cuts His Throat.

Winnebago City, Minn., March 15.—Francis Hynes, a prosperous young farmer living four miles east of town, was killed by jumping from a freight train. His body was found beside the tracks opposite his farm. It is supposed that he boarded the train with the intention of jumping off when near his farm. Evidently when he struck the ground after jumping he was thrown under the train. One foot was cut off and his leg was fractured. When his body was found his throat was cut. It is supposed that he was crazed by the pain and, feeling that he must soon die, cut his throat to end his suffering.

KILLED BY AN EXPLOSION.

Fatal Result of Thawing Dynamite on a Stove.

St. Paul, March 15.—Axel Cederberg was killed at 8 oclock yesterday morning at Pelham street and University avenue by an explosion of dynamite. His brother, Charles Cederberg, was seriously injured. The brothers were engaged in blasting a cellar for a tenement house to be erected at the point named. They have been using dynamite and yesterday morning, as the explosive was frozen, they started to thaw out sticks equivalent to four pounds upon a sheet iron stove.

ELECTIONS IN MINNESOTA.

Cities, Villages and Townships Elect Officers.

St. Paul, March 15. — Municipal, village and township elections were held throughout the state yesterday. The issues, wherever there were any, were purely local and have no political significance. The question that appears to have most frequently entered into the contest was the license issue. The result shows that a majority of the towns prefer the license system to the illicit sale of liquor.

WEDDING OF TOWNS.

Centralia and Grand Rapids, Wis., Become One.

Grand Rapids, Wis., March 15.—The leading wedding event for many years was celebrated by the consolidation of the cities of Centralia and Grand Rapids, carried by a large majority. The municipality now has a population of 6,000, and is to be called Grand Rapids. Whistles, bells, fireworks and a jubilee demonstration is occurring to an extreme never before known here.

Depositors Will Be Reimbursed.

Huron, S. D., March 15. — Ethereal Wilson, proprietor of the Bank of Hitchcock, robbed of nearly $12,000 when the building was destroyed by fire Friday night, has planned for a thorough investigation and apprehension of the guilty parties, being aided by depositors and leading citizens of Hitchcock. Mr. Wilson produced assets of nearly $14,000, and will pay depositors in full in a few days.

Popularity Made Manifest.

Brit, Iowa, March 15.—The issue in the school election was the retention or dismissal of Prof. A. M. Deyoe, who has been at the head of the schools for the past eight years and has brought them to a high standing equally for the moral and intellectual welfare of the pupils. That the people appreciate his efforts was shown by a vote of three and one-half to one in his favor.

An Appeal Taken.

Winona, Minn., March 15.—The Winona Railway and Light company has appealed from the order of Judge Snow in the damage suit brought by James Palmer, in which he received a verdict for $1,800. The judge's order denied the motion for a new trial and cut down the verdict to $1,200, to which the plaintiff agreed.

Coal for Duluth and Superior.

Duluth, Minn., March 15. — Already about 1,500,000 tons of coal to come to Duluth and Superior have been covered in freight room at about 50 cents a ton. This is a little more than a third of what coal men expect during the season. For Lake Michigan ports room for about 300,000 tons has been contracted.

Drowning Averted.

AVENGED HIS CHILD'S DEATH.

Father Kills the Slayer of His Daughter.

Butte, Mont., March 17.—A tragedy at Bannock, reports of which have just been received, resulted in the death of Fred Brown and Myrtle Lytle, the daughter of William Lytle. Bad blood between the families had resulted from a charge brought by Mrs. Brown that Lytle had made a criminal assault on the person of the five-year-old daughter of Brown. Last Tuesday Brown told Lytle he would bring his gun up to Lytle's house and straighten this thing up. Wednesday morning, about 11 o'clock, Brown appeared at Lytle's house. Myrtle Lytle went to meet him, and was seen to talk with him. He said he intended to "kill the whole outfit." She turned to go into the house, when Brown shot her in the back, delivering a second shot after she fell. Lytle heard the shots, ran to the door with a gun, and seeing his daughter lying on the ground, fired at Brown with deadly effect, killing him instantly. Lytle surrendered. Myrtle died. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of justifiable homicide.

HERE'S A CHANCE.

North Half of Colville Indian Reserve to Be Opened.

Tacoma, Wash., March 17.—It is understood the north half of the Colville Indian reservation will be thrown open for settlement about May 1. The district contains rich agricultural, timber and mineral lands, and boomers are already gathering at Spokane and other towns to rush across the line. As near as can be told the district contains about 300,000 acres of first-class agricultural land. There is about as much mineral land, and the remainder is covered with a splendid growth of fir, cedar and hemlock.

A $300,000 FIRE.

Furniture Factory Completely Destroyed.

Muskegon, Mich., March 17.—A fire broke out in the machine rooms of the Sans & Maxwell furniture manufactory at Pentwater last night and the plant was entirely destroyed. The fire is now consuming the lumber yard and dry kiln. A heavy wind prevented the firemen from getting the conflagration under control. Help was summoned from Hart. The loss on the Sans & Maxwell plant is estimated at $300,000. It is said the loss is fully covered by insurance.

WITHOUT A TRACE OF GOLD.

Attempt to Swindle Two Englishmen in a Mining Deal.

Chicago, March 20.—The assay of six supposed bars of gold that had been placed in a trust company's vaults pending the completion of the sale of a mine from which the gold was supposed to have come, was completed yesterday, and showed that the bars were composed of copper, zinc and other metals, without a trace of gold. The bars were left with the trust company by two men giving their names as R. G. Miller and William Schroeder, who published an advertisement in a London paper offering to sell a gold mine for $50,000, and induced Sir Frederick Vigor and T. D. G. Drayton of England to come to the United States to close the deal. The Englishmen say they had borings taken from the bars and an analysis showed the borings contained 76 per cent gold. One of the Englishmen went with one of the alleged gold miners to California to see the mine, but says the alleged owner disappeared suddenly one day; the other supposed owner also disappearing from Chicago. This turn in affairs was precipitated by the demans of the Englishmen that their traveling expenses be paid. The Englishmen had a trust company appointed receiver for the six bars of supposed gold, and the analysis which they ordered made will be sent to them in England. They sailed from New York Sunday.

FATHER'S AWFUL CRIME.

Kills His Daughter and Her Husband.

Butte, Mont., March 20. — Thomas Pooley, a saloonkeeper last night shot his son-in-law, Thomas Littlejohn, and the latter's wife, Lyda; during a difficulty on the street in the upper part of town. There had been bad feeling between Littlejohn and Pooley since the former married the latter's daughter, without the father's consent. Last night Littlejohn and his wife, the latter carrying their baby, met Joorley on the street. They quarreled and Littlejohn knocked Pooley down, and, according to the latter's story, began kicking him. Pooley drew a pistol while on the ground and shot Littlejohn. He died in a few minutes. Another shot missed the intended victim and struck Mrs. Littlejohn in the head. She died soon afterward. The baby was uninjured. Pooley was arrested.

PORT OF DULUTH.

Now the Second Largest on the Lakes, Ranking Close to Cleveland.

Duluth, Minn., March 19.—By the enrolling of thirty propellers and barges belonging to the Bessemer Steamship company Duluth is made the second largest port of entry on the great lakes, ranking close to Cleveland. The total number of vessels now enrolled at this port is 275, with an approximate tonnage on 230,000 tons. The vessels enrolled Saturday were recently acquired by the Bessemer company from the American Steel Barge company, and were formerly enrolled in the Buffalo district. This gives the Bessemer people a total of fifty-four vessels on the lakes, all of heavy tonnage.

Tid-Bits of News for Scandinavians.

A HOPELESS TASK.

Effort to Restore the Old Norwegian Tongue Bound to Fail.

Norroena, "the first paper published in the Norwegian language in America," displays no little irritation because several critics doubt the advisability of attempting to restore the old Norwegian language at this late day. The study of the old Norse language should be commended and encouraged, but it does seem that the disciples of Ivor Aasen and Arne Garborg, notwithstanding their determination and enthusiasm, have undertaken a hopeless task when they labor to supplant the present language of Norway—let it be called Danish if they will have it so. The official language of Norway will not be displaced, but the various peasant dialects will surely die out as the means of communication are improved and the people of the various parishes become more closely united. There is a gradual evolution in the language of the country and it will no doubt be modified by the influences of the various dialects until it becomes even more distinct from the true Danish tongue than it is at present.

The abuse heaped on Bjornson for taking the lead in the crusade against the movement to force the official language out of the country is ill timed, for there can be no question but that Bjornson is actuated by wholly unselfish motives and that he has only his people's welfare at heart. Strife and a confusion of tongues are all that the visionary enthusiasts can hope to accomplish. It would be fully as ill advised to supplant English in Ireland by the old Erse.

Norway's independence and progress need not be restrained in the least by a continuance in the use of the prevailing language any more than the retention of English in America has in any wise affected the advancement of the United States.

In view of the greed of the powers of Europe it behooves the smaller nations to unite for mutual protection. To adopt a new language, or rather restore an old one, would tend to make the Norwegians greater strangers than ever before to the Swedes and Danes and retard the Scandinavian union which now appears to be desirable. As the Danes and the Norse have practically a common tongue they should encourage the adoption of a Scandinavian language in order that the three kingdoms should eventually become one country, which seems to be the tendency, though the end is still far away.

Even at the best the language or "waal" proposed by Ivor Aasen is an artificial one, a sort of a "lobscous" sewed together from various dialects. It is not old Norsk, and if his followers are working for that they might better take advantage of the Icelandic language, which is the purest Norse dialect in existence and is used by a people still living. At the risk of incurring the animosity of the editor of Norroena, it may be stated that the general sentiment is that he is engaged in a hopeless and useless endeavor and that he will not only have the honor of publishing the first paper in that he calls "Norsk waal," but also the credit of conducting the only paper in that curious and interesting tongue. His paper is entertaining and there will be no regrets if his venture should prove profitable, but he should not grow irritable or abusive when criticised for what the great majority of his countrymen believes is misguided effort.

"WHEN WE DEAD AWAKE."

The Performance of the Drama Does Not Please Ibsen.

The first performance of Ibsen's newest masterpiece, "When We Dead Awake," in Norway was eminently a successful one. The theater was filled and the players were warmly applauded and were recalled many times. The principal parts were taken by Fru Wettergreen as Irene, Fru Dybwad as Mya Rubek, and Herr Blick as Ulfheim. Fru Wettergreen as Irene reaped a well earned harvest of applause. The calls for the author was not responded to. It was taken as a sign that he was not satisfied with the rehearsals of his play.

"When We Dead Awake" missed its mark in Stuttgart, at which place it was first put on the stage. Ibsen's works, as a rule, are particularly appreciated in Stuttgart, and between 1898 and 1899 no less than twenty of his plays were produced there in success. In Copenhagen its success was hardly greater, even with Fru Hennings, the gifted Danish actress, in the part of Irene. Great, therefore, was the desire in the Norwegian capital of going one better than their continental neighbors.

To Control Beer Licenses.

It is proposed to organize a company at Gothenburg to control all the beer licenses in the city. The company would get 5 per cent on its capital and the rest of the profits would be expended for purposes of general usefulness. Some people favor the proposition because of its real or imagined advantages. Others are decidedly against it. The latter claim that the scheme originates with capitalists who desire a safe investment for their money, and say that no private corporation should be allowed to get a monopoly of the sale of beer. Such a change, it is said, would ruin those who are now making a living by this business, and then the new company would raise the prices and thus put an extra tax on every inhabitant of the city who uses malt liquors.

Heroic Work.

Capt. P. Hartman, of the Danish steamer Fredensborg, and his crew have attracted much attention for their heroic conduct in saving the crew of the Scotch vessel Talus in the North sea. During a heavy blow a leak was sprung by the shifting of the ballast. The rescue was made in a storm and over three hours were required in a task that seemed impossible on account of the high seas. One hour afterward the Talus plunged to the bottom.

Jim Hollowell, the prize fighter, is now an adjutant in the Boer forces.

Italy's Fast Cruiser.

Rome—The preliminary trials of the new Italian cruiser Puglia have resulted most satisfactorily. The cruiser revealed wonderful speed, surpassing any cruiser built hitherto for the Italian navy.

Paris Police on Bikes.

Paris—Two hundred and fifty of the Paris police are to be mounted on bicycles. They will carry a saber in the handle in the daytime and a revolver will be attached to the shoulder at night.

They don't make pianos of pine wood in order to give them a natural pitch.

American Railways Through Norse Eyes.

Harald Skavlan, chief engineer of the Voss-Langevand railway of Norway, was in St. Louis recently. He gave the St. Louis reporters much information about Norwegian railways and commerce, extolled the ability of King Oscar and impressed on the minds of his listeners that Norway was a free and sovereign state. Of America, he said, among other things:

"I have been greatly impressed with three things in the United States and British Columbia—the monster rotary snow plows on the Canadian Pacific, the vast snow sheds on the Northern and a part of the Union Pacific railways in the United States, and the magnificent union stations in St. Louis, Philadelphia and Boston.

"I arrived in New York Jan. 21, and have since visited the principal cities in British Columba and the Unted States. In your country I have visited mest of the larger Northern and Eastern cities. From St. Louis I go to Washington, thence to Omaha, Salt Lake, San Francisco and points west and northwest, returning home in May."

The Welfare of Sailors.

A great improvement in the lighthouse and life-saving service has been made by Norway in the past few years. Over 400 new lighthouses have been built and placed in service, making a total of 682 stations on the Norwegian coasts. In addition many of the old lights have been increased in illuminating power. Canon to be used as fog signals have been supplied to several stations. There are ten life-saving stations equipped with the well known rocket apparatus, life boats, etc. The great improvements made in this service is highly appreciated by Norway's seafaring classes.

A Bishop Goes.

Bishop B. C. Schousboe of the Aalborg diocese, Denmark, is dead. He had a reputation as a pulpit orator and a Greek scholar, and had some time ago been appointed by the government to prepare a revised translation of the New Testament from the Greek, which he was engaged on up to the time of his death.

Of General Interest.

Among the Scandinavians who lost their lives at the battle of Magersfontein was the Swedish baron, Otto Wilhelm Stael von Holstein. He was but twenty-one years of age.

A number of mass meetings have been held in Copenhagen recently to protest against the sale of the Danish West Indies, as such a transaction would be a national disgrace.

There is already some talk of a Scandinavian exposition to be held in Christiania in 1906, but some argue for a postponement until 1914, when Norway will celebrate its first centennial.

A correspondent reports that Minister Steen and Councillors Lochen and Nysom are anxious to retire from the government, but, if so, they will probably not be permitted to do so until after the next election.

Sigrid Arnoldson has had a glorious success in Italian opera at St. Petersburg. Her income for twenty appearances was over 500,000 francs, a record unequaled by any singer in Russia except Adelina Patti.

Kjel Pederson Ronne, the founder of the Norwegian colonies in Clay county, S. D., died recently at the home of his sons at Elk Point, S. D. He settled in Dakota in 1860 and was eighty-five years of age at his death.

Miss Helga Fagerskjold, who achieved great notoriety for suspected complicity in a murder in Sweden, was recently discovered in the Norwegian hospital in Brooklyn, where she was an efficient and favorite nurse. She disappeared when her identity was discovered.

Orders were issued on Feb. 26 for the mobilizing of the following vessels of the Norwegian navy: Tordenskjold, Harold Haarfager, Frithjof, Viking, Valkyrien and four torpedo boats. The vessels will be manned by the naval reserves of 1896 and will be put through squadron maneuvers.

J. B. Halvorsen, the librarian of the University of Norway, has joined the silent majority. Halvorsen was a prodigious worker and his exactness, together with his learning and diligence, made him a man who was really a great marvel. His best known work is the bibliography of Norwegian literature and authors.

The invitation to the Swedish composers to produce a new national song brought 116 compositions. The three judges have selected ten songs each, and from these thirty will be selected the ten best. A large chorus will sing these at a big festival, at which the names of the prize winners will afterward be announced.

The record for ski jumping was broken by Aksel Refstad at Solberg, near Christiania, on Feb. 8. He cleared thirty-six meters, a trifle over 118 feet, but fell. The prize went to O. Trandberg, who made 35¼ meters and maintained his balance. A shoot of 115 feet through the air is a splendid feat, as well as an exhilarating experience.

A colony of about 1,000 Swedes, Norwegians and Danes is being formed in Copenhagen by agents of James L. Gates of Milwaukee, who will locate them on lands in Chippewa county, Wis., which he controls. Each colonist must have $500, of which $200 is to be paid on the land and the remainder reserved for living expenses until the crops are ready for the market.

With or Without.

Miss Crochet (after an attack upon the piano)—"How do you like that? It is a song without words?"

Fogg—"It would be absolutely perfect but for one thing."

Miss Crochet—"What's that, pray?"

Fogg—"If it was also without music."—Boston Transcript.

New Use for War Maps.

A householder in London recently noticed that his cook had stuck up in her kitchen a map of South Africa, with the British possessions colored red, the Transvaal brown, the Orange Free State yellow, and Portuguese territory green. "Do you take an interest in the war, Mary?" he asked. "No, sir," replied the cook, "but I mean to 'ave a skirt like that brown bit and blouses like them other colors; and I'm just keepin' the map to match the patterns with when I get a hevening hoff, sir."

Monument for Hahnemann.

Washington — Samuel Hahnemann, founder of the homeopathic school of medicine, is to have a monument erected in his honor in Washington. It will occupy a place near the statue of Daniel Webster.

Butler Sues London Papers.

London—Gen. Sir William Butler, who was commander-in-chief and acting governor of Cape Colony before the war broke out, has begun suits against the London papers which have been attacking him.

PLATFORM TALK

AND ECHOES FROM THE NEBRASKA CONVENTION.

The Chicago Platform—What That Great Deliverance Contained—Gleanings From the National Political Field—The Virginia Congressman's Story—State and Twin City Notes—Political Round-up of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, March 26, 1900.

All eyes have been Nebraskawards during the past week, for the action there by the allied forces on national issues, and the candidacy of Mr. Bryan. Results were entirely reassuring. The platform adopted by Democrats and Populists differed in no important matter. Affirming the Chicago platform, there is such ringing application of the principles of that great deliverance to the issues which have since arisen, as re-inspires all patriotic men and women to that effort for such success at the polls, as is foreshadowed. No doubt a wise platform has been made for Nebraska. It arraigns the Republican administration upon events and issues since 1896; for the new money trust, created by the gold standard, greenback-retiring law; for failure to enforce anti-trust laws, and to enact others if the present are ineffectual, since it has both congress and president with which to do so; for its imperialism shown in the Porto Rican tax, denounced as flagrant violation of the nation's organic law; for the wicked Philippine policy, and declaring for independence for that people under American protection. This much negatively.

Positively, the declaration is for expansion of trade by peaceful means; opposition to militarism and sympathy with the Boers in their struggle for national existence. That the Republican leaders who sympathized with Cuba fail to be interested in the struggle of the Dutch, is shown to illustrate the paralyzing influences of our own imperialism in the Philippines and in Puerto Rico.

Very significant of the trend of the times is the expression favoring municipal ownership of public utilities, and recognition of the principles of the initiative and referendum. Strictly American also, is the demand for the immediate construction of the Nicaraguan canal, and preservation of the right to fortify it. The free coinage reaffirmation is as emphatic and unequivocal as language can make it, to which is added a demand for an American financial system which shall not be subject to the fluctuations and disturbances of foreign powers; recognition of the sovereign right of the government to issue all money, whether coin or paper; retention of the greenbacks and retirement of national bank notes, as fast as greenbacks can be substituted for the same.

The reiterated affirmation of the Chicago platform, in all its parts, naturally directs attention to that great document again. How many people who have opposed it, and how many who denounced its makers and supporters, really know what it contained; how many such ever read it, or could enumerate more than its chief declarations? Aside from the free coinage declaration, the Chicago platform contained the following declarations, which people will do well to enumerate and see how few of them, even the most partisan can conscientiously disapprove.

Re-affirmation of allegiance to the essential principle of our government and the devotion of the Democratic party to the fundamental principles of the constitution.

Denunciation of gold mono-metallism as a British policy, un-American and anti-American, against that spirit of love and liberty which proclaimed our independence in 1776 and won it from England in the War of the Revolution.

Opposition to interest-bearing bonds in time of peace and trafficking with banking syndicates.

Issue of all paper money by the government, made redeemable in gold and silver coin.

Denunciatory of high tariff laws like the McKinley law, as a breeder of trusts and monopolies.

Demand for the use of the remaining constitutional power to provide for legislation so that the burdens of taxation may be equally and impartially laid, since the supreme court has made the income tax invalid.

Protection of American farmers and artisans from foreign pauper labor.

Arbitration of differences between employers and employes in interstate commerce.

Condemnatory of the formation of trusts and pools, and control of the same by the federal government.

Condemnatory of profligate waste by billion dollar Republican congresses.

Denunciatory of interference by federal authorities in local affairs as in violation of the Constitution, and for trials by jury in cases of contempt.

Against discrimination by the government in favor of any of its debtors, referring to the Pacific railroad funding bill.

Just claims for pensions to deserving Union soldiers; denunciatory of arbitrarily dropping soldiers from the pension rolls.

Early admission of all territories into statehood when qualified for same by population and resources and home rule for same.

Sympathy with the people of Cuba in their struggle for liberty and independence.

Appointments based on merit with fixed terms of office, and equal opportunities of all citizens of ascertained fitness in the civil service.

No third term of the presidential office.

Improvement of great waterways for the interior states, and cheap transportation to the water.

Such were the chief planks for the support of which the 6,500,000 who voted for the matchless Bryan, were denounced as anarchists and revolutionists!

With five of the Minnesota delegation standing for tariff, the balance for free trade backed by the two senators, what better illustration of the party inconsistency, than the old story of the hunter's dog, that ran upon a barb wire and was cut clean in half from end to end, exactly in the middle. The hunter clapped the parts together and the dog got well, but he got the parts turned the wrong way, so that there was a head and a tail at either end. Thus when the dog was going forward he was also going backwards, and when backing up was going forward. Applied to the Republican position, both free trade and tariff are barked from each end of the party dog.

Speaking of political stories, the Congressional Record has one told by a Virginia congressman, as to how mean a man felt in his district, who had for the first and only time voted the G. O. P. ticket. He voted early, and feeling very badly took to the woods to hunt possums. A big rain came on, and the man crept into a hollow log for shelter. The log becoming soaked commenced to swell, and pretty soon he found himself so tightly squeezed that he was not able to move backward or forward. The squeeze tightened, and he concluded he was going to be killed and commenced to pray. Thinking over all the mean things he had done he suddenly bethought him of his vote in the morning and he instantly felt so small that he slipped from the log as if he had been greased.

Mark Hanna—"This d—d Porto Rico business has got to stop somewhere." And so has this d—d Hanna-McKinley business.

If there is a thing that Captain Van Sant steers clear from it is pro-Boer meetings. Having been unable to attend in the Twin Cities, the people got one up right in Winona, and the genial captain was again "out of town." This is sad.

And they do say that the captain's friends are not a little disturbed that he spoke for free trade the other night at Duluth. He had better waited, they say, till he knew just the kind of a straddle is to be made by his party.

Testimony to the high character of Minnesota wheat grading, from an unexpected source, is given in a Minneapolis Times symposium, mostly from Minneapolis chamber of commerce circles. The proposition distinctly stated that "Minnesota and Dakota grain was never valued so high in the world's markets," as shown in current and continued quotations, was sustained by numerous chamber of commerce men, among them Colonel George D. Rogers, secretary of the chamber, who, exploded in wrath, when informed of the systematic efforts of enemies of the present administration to discredit Minnesota grades and grain. Another testifying was Mr. F. H. Peavy, the elevator king, who expressed himself as strongly as a man could, in approval of existing conditions. Others were J. Q. Adams, the grain exporter, L. Christian & Co., the Northern Grain company, and Mr. F. L. Greenleaf, the latter being in position to know, as chairman of the new grain appeal boards. The latter board and its working is commended on all sides. Like testimony was also given by ex-Inspectors Tunnell and Gibbs, former state inspectors under Chief Clausen.

Speaking of grades and market prices, a "friend of the administration" asks for specific instances where actual market prices on stated dates, make comparisons of Minnesota wheat and grades favorable to the present regime, in comparison with the Clausen administration of the inspection department.

The matter was admirably covered in the public statement of Inspector Reishus himself last week. The facts cited by him are obtainable from almost any daily New York or foreign market report. The quotations that Inspector Reishus quoted were New York for March 1 to 4, inclusive, 1899, and March 1 to 5, inclusive, for 1900, on contract grades for No. 1 Northern and No. 2 Red, respectively. In 1899 the inferior grade outsold the Minnesota, while in 1900 the Minnesota "despised grade" outsold the other, as it should. The actual figures were:

New York Quotations:

		No. 1 Northern.	Red Winter.
1899.	March 1	83¼	86¼
	" 2	83½	85½
	" 3	84¼	85½
	" 4	83¼	85½
		No. 1 Northern.	Red Winter.
1900.	March 1	77¾	79¼
	" 2	77½	75¾
	" 3	78¼	74¾
	" 5	77¾	75¾

Also, back to June, 1898, Liverpool sales were: No. 1 Northern at 97¼; California No. 1, $.1 11¼.

Liverpool sales February, 1900, No. 1 Northern hard at 90¾; California No. 1, 86¾.

These figures speak for themselves.

The state lunacy commission changes by new appointments by Governor Lind, as well as the state board of medical examiners. The former consists of Dr. C. E. Riggs, St. Paul, reappointed, W. F. Milligan, Wabasha, and C. O. Cooley, Duluth. The medical board is Dr. Thomas H. Lowe, Slayton, Dr. Louis Fortsche, New Ulm, and C. J. Rognoli, Minneapolis.

Another appointment highly gratifying to all knowing the high character of the appointee, is that of H. D. Stocker, Jr., of Minneapolis, to the board of defectives. Mr. Stocker succeeds George F. Gifford, late editor of the St. Paul Globe, who has returned to journalism at Chicago.

And speaking of Minneapolis politics, that was a hard whack at the Bergstrom boom that the Times gave it, by declaring that Hennepin county does not want secretary of state anyhow. And the Times "speaks by the card," at least sometimes.

LITTLE PROGRESS

IS BEING MADE TOWARD THE RELIEF OF MAFEKING.

Campaign in South Africa Presents No New Features—"Unfortunate Occurrence" Reported by Lord Roberts—British Force Penetrates the Transvaal—Boers and Free Staters Now Bitter Foes—Burghers Take the Oath of Allegiance.

London, March 27. — Except for the unexpected "unfortunate occurrence" as Lord Roberts calls it, which resulted in the killing of Lieut. Lygon and the wounding and capture of Lieut. Col. Crabbe, Lieut. Col. Codrington and Capt. Trotter, the campaign presents no new features. These are guard officers. It is a testimony to their bravery but not discretion. They met a party of five Boers, whom they tried to cover. The Boers took refuge on a kopje, where they were hidden, and within five minutes every member of the British party was hit. Apparently little progress is being made toward the relief of Mafeking. A private telegram from a lieutenant at Kimberley, dated Wednesday, announces that he was on the point of starting for Mafeking, apparently with a relief column. Gen. Forestier-Walker and Prince Alexander of Teck have left Cape Town for Bloemfontein. It is reported from Ladysmith that Van Reenan's pass bristles with guns.

Mail accounts of the capture of Gen. Cronje, just received, bring out interesting points as to the rapidity with which Lord Roberts changed his plans after he found that Gen. Cronje had escaped from Magersfontein, where it was originally intended to attack or close in upon him. Lord Kitchener was sent forward to intercept him and at the battle of Paardeberg Lord Kitchener seems to have shown that he is better as an organizer than as a fighter, for it was at his order that the British infantry repeated the blunders of other generals, attacking intrenched Boers, who allowed the Britishers to get within a thousand yards before opening fire. As the British had absolutely no cover they lost heavily and uselessly and were compelled to fall back momentarily with some amount of confusion and to withdraw their transport to a safe distance. This fact makes a significant commentary upon the rumors that have been in circulation of some coolness between Lord Kitchener and Lord Roberts, which is said to have accounted for the former being sent to Prieska to suppress the rebellion.

Boers in Force North of Ladybrand.

London, March 27.—The Times has the following from Rouxville, dated Saturday: "Commandant Olivier, with a strong force and fifteen guns is moving north of Ladybrand. A large Boer commando has been seen from Basutoland proceeding toward Cocloan. Gen. French may intercept it."

British Penetrate the Transvaal.

London, March 27. — A dispatch to the Daily Telegraph from Kimberley, dated yesterday, says: "Prisoners brought in here report that a force of British cavalry has entered the Transvaal and penetrated to a point eighteen miles north of Christiana. The British forces at Fourteen Streams are being strengthened. A movement northward is expected soon.

Are Now Bitter Foes.

London, March 27.—A Bloemfontein correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, in a dispatch dated Friday, says: "The late allies are now bitter foes. So strong is the popular feeling here that were it desirable a large body of Free Staters would take the field and fight immediately against the Transvaalers."

Mafeking Being Shelled.

London, March 27.—The Daily Mail publishes the following from Mafeking, dated Wednesday, March 14: "We are still being heavily shelled. There have been several casualties. Skirmishing continues in the trenches. The native food question is becoming a difficulty. The Boers have broken the arrangement to respect the Sabbath by not firing and have seized the opportunity to extend their trenches."

Burghers Take the Oath.

Philippolis, March 23, via Norval's Pont, March 24. — Gen. Clements entered Philippolis at noon to-day. He assembled the burghers, addressed them and read Lord Roberts' proclamation in Dutch and English. The future of the Free State, he declared, would have to be decided by her majesty's advisers, but the burghers might be certain that the late government at Bloemfontein would never be restored. He advised all the inhabitants to accept the inevitable and to obey all the orders of the military and other authorities duly appointed, intimating that the land drost and sheriffs had been reappointed under the queen. The burghers began taking the oath of allegiance and surrendering their arms.

Reoccupied by Boers.

town was reoccupied Thursday by 400 Boers. A column left Kimberley Fri- West Barkly, March 27. — Griqua- day to drive them out. It is reported that all the loyalists there, including the women, have been imprisoned.

Britain's Total Casualties.

London, March 27.—The total British losses, exclusive of the invalids sent home, are 16,418 in killed, wounded and missing.

In a Fit of Jealousy.

Vienna, Ill., March 27. — Mrs. Vesta Hogg, in a fit of jealousy, shot and killed Mrs. Clara Gurley in this city yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Hogg was arrested and placed in jail.

Prairie Sails Homeward.

Rouen, France, March 27. — The United States auxiliary cruiser Prairie sailed for the United States yesterday morning. An immense crowd gathered along the quays to bid the vessel farewell, and hearty cheers were given.

Political Prisoners Banished.

Kingston, Jam., March 27.—Mail advices received from Colombia yesterday report that the revolutionists have been pressing the government forces and that a large number of political prisoners have been banished.

TO MURDER GOEBEL.

Plot in Which Prominent Men Are Implicated.

Frankfort, Ky., March 27. — "John Powers told me they had two negroes here to kill Goebel. They were Hocker Smith and Dick Coombs."

This statement was made Saturday by F. Wharton Golden, a frail, consumptive-looking Kentucky mountaineer, while on the witness stand in the preliminary examination of Secretary of State Powers, charged with conspiracy to kill Goebel.

Golden told a story of events leading up to the murder, that, if substantiated, will, in the minds of those connected with the prosecution at least, probably go far toward proving the contentions of the commonwealth that the murder was the result of a plan in which several prominent men were involved.

Whether the defense will seek to impeach Golden's testimony in this preliminary examination is not known, as the attorneys for the defense will not talk on the subject, but unless such attempt is made the commonwealth will rest its case, as both County Attorney Potsgrove and Attorney Campbell are satisfied that enough evidence has been presented to hold the defendant on the charges.

Golden, who claims to have been a friend to Secretary Powers and his brother, John Powers, for hours gave testimony that was to John Powers, but he also brought in the names of several others, including Charles Finley, W. H. Culton and Gov. Taylor, in his story of the bringing of the mountaineers to Frankfort previous to the assassination. Gov. Taylor, however, was not directly implicated, and the attorneys for the commonwealth intimated that they do not expect to have his name brought prominently forth in the story of the alleged conspiracy. Golden was not cross-examined, and adjournment was taken early in the afternoon on account of his physical condition, the witness having a slight hemorrhage during the morning session, and became so weak under the strain of the examination in the afternoon that he begged to be allowed a respite. He was quite nervous at times. Golden's testimony tended to show that a plan was made to bring several hundred "regular mountain feudists" to Frankfort who would, if necessary, as Golden expressed it, "go into the legislative hall and kill off enough Democrats to make it go our way." The testimony did not show that the alleged plot to kill Goebel was part of the original plan, nor did it contain the names of those who conceived that idea.

Particularly Damaging

Denied by Collier.

Frankfort, Ky., March 27.—The Republican adjutant general, Collier, yesterday denied that mines were being laid around the arsenal and capitol grounds, and in an explanatory communication to the Democratic assistant adjutant general, Murray, Gen. Collier said that some indiscreet man at the arsenal had dug trenches and made pretense of laying mines to create a sensation, but the work was entirely without the sanction or knowledge of Gen. Collier, and the men engaged have been sharply reprimanded.

GEN. WHEELER ON WAITING LIST.

Is Retained in Regular Service to Allow Special Act, if It Is Considered Advisable.

Washington, March 27. — After several conferences between Gen. Wheeler and officers of the administration it was announced that the war department had temporarily disposed of his case by placing him on waiting orders. This action retains Gen. Wheeler in the service of the United States until opportunity is had to determine whether he shall be given an active command or made the subject of a special retirement act or mustered out of the military service. It is stated that he would not be obliged to retire under the rules of the regular establishment until next fall, so there is still opportunity for the general to see active service again if he so desires.

SUPPRESSED FOR SEDITION.

Gen. Otis Disciplines Extremist Editors.

Manila, March 27.—La Patria and El Liberal, Spanish organs of the extreme Filipino party, have recently been publishing articles inimical to the military government. Gen. Otis has suppressed the former journal for sedition and imprisoned the editor, at the same time issuing a warning to the members of the extreme party that they should observe greater moderation. Senor Paterno, at one time president of the so-called Filipino cabinet, has received permission from the authorities to come to Manila and is expected to present himself this week at San Fernando, province of Union. The rebels in Gen. Young's district are becoming aggressive. The American battalion garrisoning the town of Namag Pachan was attacked on four consecutive nights recently. Reinforcements are now arriving there. Gen. Young proposes to pursue the rebels aggressively before the rainy season sets in.

General Advance in Wages.

Philadelphia, March 27.—In accordance with their notice posted shortly after Jan. 1, 1900, promising an advance to their employes to take effect April 1, the Berwynd-White Coal Mining company yesterday notified all its miners of a general average advance of 20 per cent. The miners are now placed upon a basis of 60 cents per gross ton and all day labor increased accordingly. This advance will make the wages the highest that have ever existed by nearly 7 per cent.

The Invernia Is All Right.

Liverpool, March 27.—The trials of the new Cunard steamship Invernia, built for the Liverpool-Boston service, which were made yesterday, proved every way satisfactory. She will sail for New York April 14.

Destroyed by Fire.

Fort Plain, N. Y., March 27. — Fire yesterday entirely destroyed the Clinton Liberal Institute building, entailing a loss of $95,000. The institute was a college preparatory school and military academy owned and conducted by the Universalists of the state and occupied a large four-story building. The building was not occupied, the Easter vacation having begun and the fire broke out during the fumigation of the school. The armory was saved. Most of the faculty and students lost their personal effects.

ARCH REBEL KILLED.

British Finally Get Rid of the Chief Disturber in Borneo.

Tacoma, Wash., March 27. — Yesterday's Oriental mail contains the news that the British forces in North Borneo have finally killed Matt Selteh, the archrebel who has three times incited the natives to rebel against British rule. He was killed in February in a fight which followed that in which the British land and naval forces under Capt. Harrington destroyed three stockade forts where Selteh and his followers made their strongest stand. In the fight a naval gun from the British gunboat at Labuan was used very effectively, sending solid shot through Selteh's forts. The British exhausted their ammunition during the fight. As soon as more could be secured they started after Selteh and killed him in a fight further back in the mountains. His followers were dispersed. The news was cabled to Singapore and Hongkong by Capt. Harrington. The British Chartered Company of North Borneo hired Selteh to end his rebellion two years ago, but he started another war when his money was gone.

BIG STRIKE IMMINENT.

New York Machinists at Loggerheads With Their Employers.

New York, March 27. — A strike of 30,000 members of the International Association of Machinists and the Amalgamated Society of Engineers in the New York district may be precipitated this week by the action of the New York and New Jersey Machinery Manufacturers association in organizing to resist a demand for a nine-hour day which was to be made April 1. This was inaugurated by Mr. Ward, district business agent. E. J. Warner, district organizer, said he expected Grand Master Machinist O'Connell to reach here to look over the ground and take charge of the matter. The strike will extend from Paterson, N. J., into New York State as far as Newberg. "There are 30,000 machinists in the district, of which 15,000 are unionist. We can take out every man, union or non-union," said Mr. Warner. "We are in this fight to stay, and will not stop until we secure a nine-hour day. In Chicago every machinist is idle, and in Cleveland 1,500 are out and 1,000 have won their strike."

BELLIGERENT STUDENTS.

Furious Pitched Battle in the Missouri State University.

Columbia, Mo., March 27.—Students of the state university engaged in a furious pitched battle in the auditorium of the institution Saturday night. There was intense rivalry between the classes over the preliminary contest to select representatives of Missouri university to a place in the debate with the Nebraska university, which takes place here in May. While awaiting the decision of the judges when the debate was over members of the academic classes and the law students came together in front of the rostrum and fought. The lights were turned out and the struggle went on in the dark, doors being broken down and furniture smashed. Six of the students had their clothing torn into ribbons, but none were badly hurt. The debaters selected by the judges are Milton M. Dearing of Columbia, John Kramer of Carrollton and R. L. Ward of Clubb.

BECOMES INSANE ON TRAIN.

Man Threatens to Shoot Passengers if They Don't Obey Him.

Wichita, Kan., March 27. — A man, evidently insane, left his seat in the smoker of a C., R. I. & P. train near here, and began swinging his revolver, threatening to shoot every passenger who did not leave the common coach, which was crowded. Passengers fell over each other in their haste to get into the next car, but they were not rapid enough for the old man, and he began firing through the windows. The women and children were finally locked in another car and the train officials were posted on the platform to watch him. He was finally placed under arrest.

STOP CIGARETTE SMOKING.

Weather Bureau Employes Must Give Up the Habit.

Washington, March 27—A death blow was given cigarette smoking in the weather service Saturday when Chief Willis T. Moore issued an order prohibiting persons connected with the service from smoking cigarettes during office hours, and stating further that those who smoked cigarettes at any time would be mentioned in the confidential reports which are made quarterly to him by chiefs of the several offices and divisions throughout the entire service. The order is plainly worded, and the chief evidently means that it shall be obeyed.

HEAD HUNTERS CAPTURED.

Prisoners Taken by British Expedition Includes Several Cannibals.

Victoria, B. C., March 27.—In Australian advices brought by the Warrimoo is news of a successful expedition against the head hunters of the Western island under British Consul Woodford's directions, twelve prisoners being taken, including several cannibalistic chiefs. Earl Buchamp is to resign at the end of the current year as governor of New South Wales. The belief is that he will resign as soon as the imperial parliament has passed the commonwealth bill.

Men and Girls Strike.

Milwaukee, Wis., March 27.—About 200 men and forty girls employed in the works of the United States Glue company, located at Carrollsville, ten miles south of this city, are on a strike. The trouble was precipitated through the discharge of Assistant Superintendent Murphy. Deputy Sheriffs are on guard at the plant to prevent violence.

Last Thought of Child.

New York, March 27.—Tenderly kissing her four-year-old son Robert, Mrs. Annie Devine got out the little fellow's toys and told him to play while she went into her bedroom to take some medicine. She took poison.

Killed His Wife While Drunk.

Oil City, Pa., March 27.—Amos Elder, an oil well driller, shot and killed his wife. He was intoxicated at the time and the shooting occurred after a terrible struggle. The murderer escaped.

St. Hilaire Spectator.

ST. HILAIRE, MINNESOTA.

In case there is a slump in the diamond business, Cecil Rhodes might find employment in the museums as the $10,000,000 prize beauty.

They have put a St. Louis man in jail on a charge of insanity because he believes he is in hell. The only trouble with that poor fellow is that he's too candid.

Ridding the heart of malice does not in itself free the hands from cruelty. A man may act cruelly from malice, but he may act just as cruelly from sheer coldness. He that would be kind must not only be delivered from the spirit of hate, he must be filled with the spirit of love. If the hands are never to be cruel, the heart must never be cold.

In the enterprising city of Buenos Ayres automobile carriages are no uncommon sight, in the form both of private vehicles and of delivery wagons. Cycle roads now radiate from Buenos Ayres to a distance of sixty and seventy miles in the surrounding country, and under the care of the Argentine Touring club these roads are reserved for the use of bicycles and automobiles.

A young missionary far in the interior of China received for baptism a little child. The name given was Moo Dee, so unusual a combination that the minister asked its origin. "I have heard of your man of God, Moo Dee," was the reply. "In our dialect Moo means love and Dee God. I would have my child, too, love God." Mr. Moody was not a Chinese, but his name told in that language the secret of his life.

The manager of an immense business declares that it costs his house twenty thousand dollars a year simply to correct errors in invoices and other papers—mistakes due to poor writing and poor English, for which employes are responsible. "Some stenographers need but the idea to turn out the perfect letter," said he, "while others are a means of grace because they try the patience." The money lost because of ignorance and carelessness in that single house would pay the salaries of a considerable body of teachers in secondary schools whose pupils are supposed to learn how to write plainly and speak correctly.

A situation involving some tension has arisen out of a conflict of interests between the live stock companies and the frontier settlers. The companies wish to continue their occupancy of the great plains of the West as cattle ranges, and are urging the government to lease them to the highest bidders. The settlers wish the lands subdivided for homes and farms, and protest that they shall still be held open to individual purchase or to private entry under the homestead law, which gives 160 acres to each actual occupant who makes certain improvements. The governor of Nebraska invites other Western governors to a conference in the interest of the settlers.

Details of the sudden eruption from the central crater of Mount Etna, last July, are gradually coming to light through scientific reports. One of the most striking phenomena of the outbreak was the formation of an "eruptive pine" or "cloud-tree" directly above the crater. A famous example of these volcanic smoke-trees is that which was seen standing over Vesuvius during the destruction of Pompeii. But Etna is a far mightier and loftier volcano than Vesuvius. The verge of its great crater is nearly 11,000 feet above sea level, and the "eruptive pine" last July rose more than 16,000 feet above the crater. It was finally blown off by the wind, hiding the sun as it drifted away in an elongated black cloud.

An era of good feeling has begun to make its appearance among the various denominations professing Christianity. It is now not an infrequent occurrence in any of the large cities to see priests of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Catholic, Baptist churches, etc., in conference discussing reform topics. But just as this happy state of affairs begins to show on the horizon of the church world, J. Alexander Dowie has made his appearance at the head of a sect which threatens to grow into great proportions under the title of the Zion. Zion has set its face against all other denominations and has begun the construction of the city, of Zion on the banks of Lake Michigan. The rapid strides being made by Dowieism has surprised church men generally. The real secret seems to be in its social and co-operative features. One of the corner-stones is a bank to which members may bring their money and check it out at pleasure. This feature may be adopted by other churches.

At a dinner given by a political club in New York recently a man who is unusually young for one who has attained to such prominence in his profession was for the first time in his life set down for a response to one of the toasts. When at last he was called on, his beardless face flushed and his manner was very embarrassed. Nevertheless he stood up and thus delivered himself: "Gentlemen, before I entered this room I had an excellent speech prepared. Only God and myself knew what I was going to say. Now God alone knows." And he sat down.

During the closing half of the nineteenth century, Cornwall, which from ancient times had been the world's greatest source of supply for tin, has lost that distinction. Even as late as 1859, Cornwall supplied one-half of all the tin produced, but now the Malay Peninsula stands at the head, having in 1898 turne out more than 60 per cent of the world's total production. The Dutch East Indies stand next, with 19 per cent, while Cornwall turned only only about 5,000 tons, not quite seven per cent of the whole.

THE HEAD HUNTERS OF LUZON.

When Maj. March's batallion of the Thirty-third infantry went on its wild chase up in the North Cordillera mountains after the flying Aguinaldo, his footsore men there came across some new and strange specimens of humanity.

These strange mountain people of Luzon are known as the Igorrote. This word Igorrote was originally the name of a single tribe, but for some reason or other has been extended in modern times to include all the head-hunting savages of Luzon. Of late "Igorrote" has become synonymous with "wild," and the word is now applied to the different hill tribes of the interior independent of their race or descent.

With the Igorrote it is said to be impossible for a young man to find a bride until he has at least one head to his credit. They are a fierce-looking folk, with long, lank hair, and go about with naked, tattooed bodies. When March and his men swept up the mountains on the heels of Aguinaldo and his little army, these Igorrote were astounded at the sight of the American soldiers. What surprised them most was the soldiers' "boom, boom fire sticks"—for such they termed the modern army rifle. These mountain folks are no friends of the Tagals, and were glad enough to point out to the Americans the direction in which the Filipino leader and his men had gone. They held, however, most superstitious beliefs regarding the powers of the Tagals, and soberly declared that they were in league with the spirits of the air and had floated away on a cloud when the white men pursued them over the mountain.

There were just 100 picked men in Maj. March's pursuing party, together with the "Chinos" packers, and they felt sure that they had Aguinaldo in a tight box, when, lo and behold, just as they were on his heels the slippery Filipino turned down some unknown trail and most mysteriously disappeared. This was in the wildest and most inaccessible country of all the island, far up among the interior mountain tops. When March's batallion arrived at Cervantes, it was found that the insurgent leader had fled two days before, making for Bontoc, another town up among the clouds, three days' march from Cervantes.

It seems that swift Igorrote mountain runners had been posted by Aguinaldo near the summit of Tilad pass to report the result of Gen. Gregario del Pilar's last desperate attempt to drive back the Americans. These mountain runners had returned to Cervantes with the news of Pilar's death and the utter rout of the rear guard on the very day the battle was fought. It took March's men two whole days and a half to cover the same ground, hurry as they might. Yet these wonderful Igorrote mountain runners had actually covered the distance in less than eight hours. Just how they did it no white man has ever discovered. It has been supposed that they have some secret signal service of their own by means of which they can flash messages from mountain peak to mountain peak. But even where an individual runner has been dispatched to deliver a message in person he has arrived at his destination in a wonderfully short space of time. They have, of course, a thorough knowledge of all the forest paths and numerous mountain passes. This means a great deal, as a journey that might be made in a day by a white man with a guide will often take at least a week if attempted without the necessary native to show the way.

One of the delightful characteristics of these strange mountain head hunters is the habit of devouring all enemies who have fallen on the field of battle. Physically they do not stand quite so low in the scale of civilization as the Negritos, but morally and mentally they are about as unregenerate specimens of humanity as are to be found in any part of this benighted globe of ours. Their chief diet is carabao meat and wild roots found in the woods, but a special delicacy reserved for state occasions is stewed dog meat.

Making Taxdodgers Pay It.

To punish a man for nonpayment of a certain tax by forbidding him to enter a restaurant is a custom in the canton of Berne. Every man in Switzerland must serve in the Swiss army if he be physically capable, and if he be not physically capable he must pay what is called the military exemption tax. The government says if a man has money to spend for coffee, beer or liquors he must also have money enough with which to pay his debt to the state. The law cannot prohibit a person from obtaining liquor through the intervention or help of a friend, but the privilege of dropping into favorite resorts and hobnobbing with friends—a custom which is dear to every Swiss—must be foregone.

Old Ring Comes Back.

Sixteen years ago W. F. Bishop of Chicago Lawn lost his wife's wedding ring while feeding his horse in a barn way out in Iowa. A thorough search was made, but the missing ring could not be found. Mr. Bishop left his name and address with the owner of the structure, with the request that in case the barn should ever be torn down a final search should be made. He returned home and the lost ring was replaced by a new one. So many years had elapsed that all hope of ever getting the original ring back again was abandoned. Last week, however, Mr. Bishop received word that the old barn had been torn down to be replaced by a new structure, and that the ring had been found and would be forwarded at once. The ring arrived yesterday through the mails, and Mr. and Mrs. Bishop are highly elated at its restoration.—Chicago Journal.

MRS. BUGGINS' PAJAMAS.

She Is Having a Hard Time Getting Them.

Mrs. Buggins has gone in for the emancipation of her sex, says the Philadelphia Record. She doesn't exactly want to run the universe, and she confesses she would not know how to vote if she tried. Her attempt at emancipation has taken the form of pajamas. For a long time she has railed against the conventionality that has bound her to the robe de nuit, and has cast envious eyes at the silk pajamas worn by Mr. Buggins. "I don't see why we women can't wear them, too," she said the other day. Then she went to a Chestnut street haberdasher's and asked to be shown pajamas for boys. "How old is the boy?" asked the salesman. "Gracious! I don't know," replied Mrs. Buggins, who is not blessed with any children of her own. And then, seized with a sudden inspiration, she added: "I think he wears a No 13 collar, if you can tell by that." The salesman told her that those sizes were not kept in stock, and would have to be made to order. "You had better bring the boy here, and then we can tell better about the size," he said. Mrs. Buggins promised and left the store, greatly dejected.

AFRAID OF AMERICANS.

Where They Are Popularly Supposed to Be Always Shooting Up the Town.

Ever since the Wild West show appeared in Budapest, Hungary, the citizens believe that every American carries a revolver. Not long ago three Americans were sitting at a table in a music hall, taking such refreshments as may be obtained at such a place. One of the Americans finally called for his check. The waiter performed a feat in mathematics and learned that three times three made seventeen. The American found fault with this system of multiplication and stood up to make protest. Instantly the girl who sold programs threw herself in front of him, and seized his arm. "Please don't," she pleaded. "He is a poor man; he has a wife and family." The manager came running, "Wait, wait," he entreated. "Please do not make any trouble. I ask that you do not shoot." Yielding to these entreaties, the American (who carried nothing more deadly than a penknife) spared the life of the trembling waiter, who had made a run for the stairway. There was another computation, and it was decided that three times three made nine, and then, the ferocious Americans departed, to the great relief of the natives.

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

A Knife Which Will Cut Wire—Disinfecting Wardrobe—Magnetism of the Earth—Corrosive Action of Metals—The Color of Water.

Magnetism of the Earth.

H. A. Rowland, professor of physics at the Johns Hopkins university, has just announced a remarkable discovery of great importance, being no less than an explanation of the cause of the magnetism of the earth. Dr. Rowland commenced his experiments nearly a year ago. The subject attracted him, owing to the lack of explanation of the theory of the earth's magnetism. The apparatus he used consists of a simple metal wheel revolved upon a shaft by means of an electric motor. The wheel itself is wound with several miles of fine wire, and in this magnetism is developed when the wheel is revolved. About the wheel is a casing of brass about a half inch from its circumference, leaving a space between which may be said to represent artificially the layer of atmosphere about the earth. Dr. Rowland is now working to show that the faster the revolution of the wheel, the greater will be the magnetism developed. He has already shown that magnetism is produced in this revolving body; and although upon such an infinitesimal scale in the laboratory experiments, Dr. Rowland is convinced that the principle holds good for the earth and other bodies as they revolve through space. The immense weight and great speed with which these bodies rotate add to the magnetism which they produce. It will take a long series of delicate experiments to bring out the various phases of the relation of magnetism to the speed of the revolving bodies. The results which have been obtained so far have been so satisfactory that work will be continued on this line.

Corrosive Action of Metals.

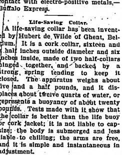
The corrosive influence of sea water on various alloys has been made the subject of an interesting investigation by the German admiralty. Copper, tin, zinc and iron aluminium alloys were tested, twelve strips of the alloy being taken in each case, nine of which were immersed in sea water and three of which were reserved for standards. At the end of eight, sixteen and twenty-four months three strips of each alloy were examined and compared with the standards. The results show that iron, tin and aluminum bronzes deteriorated very little, and there was little difference in regard to decrease of weight or strength even after two years' immersion. When iron and tin bronzes were in contact the former were very seriously attacked, one specimen after two years having lost two-thirds of its strength and four-fifths of its elongation. The conclusion of the admiralty was that the corrosive action between different metals depends upon the relative position in the electric scale. Metals were practically unattacked when in contact with those electro-negative to them, but quickly destroyed when in contact with electro-positive metals.—Buffalo Express.

Life-Saving Collar.

A life-saving collar has been invented by Hubert de Wilde of Ghent, Belgium. It is a cork collar, sixteen and a half inches outside diameter and six inches inside, made of two half-collars hinged together, and backed by a strong spring tending to keep it closed. The apparatus weighs about five and a half pounds, and it displaces about twelve quarts of water, or represents a buoyancy of about twenty pounds. Tests made with it show that the collar is better than the life buoy or cork jacket; it is not liable to capsize; the body is submerged and less liable to chilling; the arms are free, and it is simple and instantaneous in adjustment.

Disinfecting Wardrobe.

A hygienic wardrobe forms the subject of a patent recently granted to an inventor of Chicago, Ill., which has the merit of utility and sanitary cleanliness, although it can in no wise be regarded as a work of art. The framework is of metal, designed so that it can be readily taken apart, the parts being joined in such a way that no place is offered for the lodgment of vermin. The spaces between the metal frames are designed to be filled with a semi-transparent fabric buttoned to the metal. As the material admits of the passage of light, the depredations of moths and the propagation of germs are somewhat interfered with. Garments hung in this wardrobe are constantly subjected to the fumes of a disinfectant contained in a pendant holder screwed to the inside top of the wardrobe. The curtains may be taken down readily at stated intervals for cleaning, and for moving the whole thing may be taken apart and packed in a box.

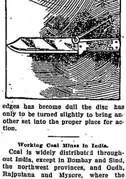


The Color of Water.

Prof. Spring reports on his experiments of many years to explain the color of the water. He has come to the conclusion that a pure blue is the natural color of water, for when we look through a long tube filled with distilled water against a brilliant white surface, a pure blue is seen; such as shown by the Lake of Geneva in quiet weather, a color which is not influenced by superficial or interior reflection. When pure water becomes slightly turbid by extremely finely divided white or colorless particles floating therein, they reflect, even in the case of ground mountain crystal, a yellow light, which unites with the natural blue into a brilliant green color, such as is exhibited by the Neuenburg and Boden lakes. The peculiar fact established by various observers, that the water of ordinarily green lakes turns perfectly colorless at times, is not due to a clarification, but, on the contrary, to an influx of a reddish mud, colored by ferric oxide, which completely neutralizes the green.

A Knife Which Will Cut Wire.

A combined hunting knife and wire-cutter comes from the land of barbed-wire fences. This combination is the subject of a patent recently granted to an inventor of Columbia, Texas, whose experiences on the ranches of that state lead him to believe that such a tool will be appreciated by the ranchman. The blade is formed with a recess, in which a lever is pivoted, made with corresponding recesses. To the lever and blade cutting discs are secured. In severing a piece of wire the knife is placed with the cutting edges of the disc embracing the wire, and the lever is pressed toward the handle of the knife. When one set of cutting edges has become dull the disc has only to be turned slightly to bring another set into the proper place for action.



Working Coal Mines in India.

Coal is widely distributed throughout India, except in Bombay and Sind, the northwest provinces, and Oudh, Rajputana and Mysore, where the product is either scantily distributed or entirely absent. The seams in Bengal and Assam are frequently from 50 and 80 feet to as much as 180 feet in thickness. The pits are often of considerable depth. At present the deepest appears to be about 700 feet. In many cases the working of the seams leads to the escape of little or no fire damp, so that the miners are able to work with naked lights. At the present time Bengal produces more than three-fourths of the coal mined in India. Indian coal varies much in composition and quality. Most of it is quite suitable for ordinary purposes, while some of the samples, e. g., certain of those from Bengal and central India, are of excellent quality, equal to that of the best British coals. The fixed carbon of the Bengal coal ranges between 50 and 60 per cent, and the calorific value exceeds 6,000 calories—equal to about 10 British thermal units—while the ash often does not much exceed and in some instances falls below 10 per cent, and the sulphur frequently present in but very small proportion. A great deal of the Bengal coal is se[illegible] coal. Many samples c[illegible] contain little sulphur, [illegible] therefore suitable for [illegible]

Curious Effects of [illegible]

A Russian scientist [illegible] esting letter to Knowledge respecting the effect of lightning upon trees and buildings. He says that if the whole surface of a tree is damp when the lightning strikes it little harm is done, but if it is dry the spark will take the course of least resistance along the damp wood beneath the bark, and the latter is blown off by the steam suddenly generated as a result of great heat. Water steam at very high pressure is the force that generally causes the actual disruption in a tree struck by lightning. The baron quotes a curious case in which a monumental column at Gatchina, in Russia, was destroyed from much the same cause. It was fifteen meters high, and its stones were held together by interior iron angles. After a period of very rainy weather much water had collected between the stones, and when lightning struck it the entire column was blown to fragments. In this extraordinary case there is no doubt that the lightning spark, retained by the intervals between the iron angles, instantly produced a great quantity of steam of very high pressure in the interior of the damp column, and the latter was actually blown up by its explosion."

The Disinfection of Telephones.

The under secretary of state of France, who is responsible for the posts and telegrams in Paris, has, with a view to avoid the transmission of infectious diseases, issued an order that the receivers and transmitters of all public telephones shall be disinfected daily by being washed in a strong solution of carbolic acid. This concession to the principles of hygiene has not been very well received by medical men. The idea, they say, is excellent, but they take exception to the choice of a disinfectant, for carbolic acid has an abominable smell and has but very feeble power in the destruction of microbes.

Pasteboard Shingles.

According to the Railway Review, the Tokio Card and Pasteboard company, of Japan, is now experimenting with pasteboard as a substitute for roofing shingles. It is said that shingles of this material can be produced at a cost about 50 per cent cheaper than that of the wooden article. The pasteboard is made of the desired thickness and tarred to prevent the material from being affected by the weather.

When I'm Old.

(Old Favorite Series.)

I would ask of you, my darling,
A question soft and low,
That gives me many a heartache,
As the moments come and go.
Your love I know is truthful,
But the truest love grows cold;
It is this that I would ask you:
Will you love me when I'm old?

Down the stream of life together,
We are sailing side by side,
Hoping some bright day to anchor
Safe beyond the surging tide.
To-day our sky is cloudless,
But the night may clouds unfold,
And its storms may gather round us;
Will you love me when I'm old?
And its storms may gather round us;
Will you love me when I'm old?

When my hair shall shame the snow-drift,
And my eyes shall dimmer grow,
I would lean upon some loved one
In the valley as I go.
I would claim of you a promise,
Worth to me a world of gold;
It is only this, my darling,
That you'll love me when I'm old;
It is only this, my darling,
That you'll love me when I'm old!

How to Keep Young

If we take a little leaf out of the mind-cure books we can have physical rejuvenation through a youthful spirit, which must find expression. Cast away sadness—for that is hateful to youth—and cultivate instead a real interest in all that is going on, whether in the world about you or in the great world. Observe a young girl of normal intelligence who has not been "spoiled." Could anything be more striking than her keen, voracious interest, in contrast to the tired apathy of her elders? Keep your interest alive, feeding it on catholicity of subjects, as you value your youth; for if certain mental muscles are not used they will atrophy, and you will be old, no matter what is the date of your birth. Every human being you encounter is the central point of the universe from his or her point of view; how, then, can such a one escape the interest of others? Every life has its life aims just as vital as yours. Interest yourself in others, and, with no such intent at heart, you will find the spirit refreshed. Away back in nursery days we learn of the little girl who wept in contemplating the bridge she did not have to cross after all; but the lesson did not go very deep, for we keep on worrying until we have lines up and down the forehead and lines across. "The thirty-year marks," they call them, but that is a mistake. Thirty years of worry would wrinkle a marble forehead, but thirty years of optimism would keep smooth the most delicate skin. Worry spoils the digestion and brings ill-health, which in turn ruins beauty. Worry enwraps the mental faculties, and prevents them from free exercise, hampering judgment and shutting out light. Even those who do it must know these things well, yet still keep on, for not to worry means a condition of spiritual strength and elevation which is only attained by gradual process, and everyone has not learned the way. The lines on the face are the expression of "the body's guest." They will come; but who could object to a crinkling around the eyes that make a smile the merrier, or lines about the corner of the mouth that have a kindly meaning? Such lines stamp the face with undying youth.—Harper's Bazar.

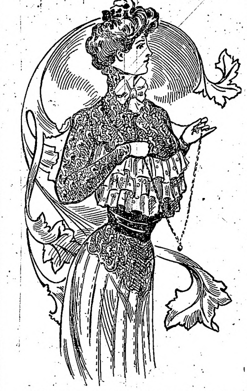
Untidy Girls.

One often wonders how it is that some loveable girls, who are domesticated, obliging and accomplished, are so terribly careless of their personal appearance at home. They are in the minority, it is true, but they are to be met with very frequently, and it is for their benefit that this paragraph is penned. Why should the members of your own household, who are, presumably, far dearer to you than strangers, be treated with less consideration than outsiders? If you are staying at a friend's house, you would not leave your bedroom without making a careful, though not necessarily elaborate, toilet. Why, when under the parental roof, should you take your seat at the breakfast table with hair still in "irons," neck and wrists decidedly untidy, and a general appearance of neglect and slovenliness pervading your attire? Even if there are household duties of a "grubby" nature to be performed—fires to be lit, grates to be brushed, or carpets to be swept—these can be done just as well if the hair has been neatly arranged, the morning ablutions conscientiously performed, and a neat dress donned. Then, just before breakfast, another washing of the hands, and the putting on of a collar and a pair of cuffs, will make the busy girl quite as attractive in appearance as she undoubtedly is when "dressed" for the afternoon. The habit of going about the house untidily attired is one which grows rapidly on the unwise girl who once adopts it. It appears so much more easy to keep in the "curlers," instead of giving the hair its matutinal brushing and arranging. The complexion-preserving wash is shirked, because the water "is so cold"—this is not an exaggeration; there are some girls, who in winter never wash their face until after breakfast. The old gown, with frayed wrists, missing buttons, or broken button-holes, is put on morning after morning, until its wear becomes almost second nature; and no attempt is made to "look nice" until there is a chance of being seen by somebody outside the family circle. If these untidy girls could only hear the remarks made about them when by chance a stranger does happen to catch sight of them in their unlovely garb they would at once relinquish their slovenly habits. The strange thing is that it is generally nice-looking lassies who are the worst sinners in this respect. Plain girls know how greatly neatness of attire adds to personal attractions, and, very wisely, take care to adopt it.

Suggestions to Beautify the Home.

Nothing affords so great an opportunity for decoration as a window in a recess. A low seat running around it, the cushions upholstered with some artistic tapestry, is suggested at once. After that, growing plants should be hung from above and curtains arranged to make of the window a veritable cozy corner. Of course this is simple if the recessed window is built in the house. But the appearance of a recess may be given to any window, and is advisable often in the case of one in a large, bare room. Place a couple of brass arms so they will jut out from either side of the window and connect them in front with a brass pole, over which some curtains are draped. Curtains may also be hung from the side arms and the inner side of them partially concealed by tall palms. The decorations should be finished, of course, with a window seat. To beautify one of those long, narrow, commonplace halls, hang with some light paper and paint the woodwork in ivory and white. Then midway down the hall or just at the foot of the stairs place a brass rod from wall to wall. Throw curtains of some art material over it, and, from the center swing a lamp of wrought iron.

FOULARD WITH VELVET AND LACE.



Must We Wear the Saucer Bangs?

The reign of the pompadour is on the wane. Gradually it is getting smaller. Now a bit of the thickness is left out of the bunch on the side; again a little is taken away from its height. Slowly but surely it is losing its inflation; surely getting flatter and flatter. Thus far the new mode is excellent, for it always is delightful when the shape of a woman's head stands out clearly. But, alas! Dame Fashion has no wish to see the hair of her subjects dressed plainly, so she has begun to suggest the saucer bang. Paris already has adopted this ugly fashion, and so have those American women who always try the new styles without waiting for the conservative woman to make them "good form." It is to be hoped the latter never will happen. Surely the good taste of American women will revolt against the general adoption of this hideous method of dressing "woman's crowning glory."

House Gown.

Her Crowning Glory.

If you are a believer in the old saying, that a woman's glory is in her hair, you cannot help being surprised at the extraordinary want of artistic taste that many women show in the arrangement of their tresses, converting them into a disfigurement, instead of into a glory, says the New York Telegram. But, after all, the matter to each one of us is not so much how other people arrange their hair, as how we arrange our own. Do we do so in a way becoming to both face and figure? Nowadays we have plenty of styles to choose from, and it is less important to select the very newest than the one that is most becoming. In choosing a style pay heed to the following rules: For a long, thin face the arrangement of the hair should be full and round, and, if possible, the coils should just show from behind the ears. The nape of the neck should also be filled as much as possible, and softly waving or curling the hair will improve the appearance. For a sharp-featured face the hair should be arranged loosely, and at the back rather than the top of the head. A round, chubby face looks best with the hair arranged in a narrow style at the back and well carried down to the nape of the neck. Unless the forehead be particularly high, a fringe is not desirable, or, at least, only just so much as one is obliged to have nowadays for the sake of one's milliner. Very tall women should not dress their hair high, but leave that style to their shorter sisters. Young girls in their teens should wear their hair simply tied back as long as possible, and on no account should they turn it up until they have arrived at the stage of wearing long dresses.

Genius in Families.

In the Rivista Moderna Professor Arenfeld says all the men of genius are first born or second sons. Luther, Schopenhauer, Dante, Raphael; Da Vinci, Heine, Goëthe, Shelley, Milton, Byron, Leopardi, Moliere, Carlyle and Rossini, among many others, were all first-born or only sons. Beethoven, Cuvier, Michael Angelo, Rousseau, Pascal, and Garibaldi were second sons. The professor further states that the third son may be an eminent person, but that a fourth, fifth or sixth child will never be a shining light. However, for the consolation of the youngest sons in large families, it is further stated that after the sixth child the rest may again become men of talent.

To Wash Brushes and Combs.

To wash brushes, dip in hot water into which a small lump of caustic soda has been melted. Move the brush up and down until the bristles are quite clean, but be careful not to let the wood come in contact with the water, as the soda will remove the polish. Hold under the cold-water faucet, then shake as free from moisture as possible, and stand in an upright position to dry. It is best to dry in the open air, but not in the sun. To clean a comb dip a nail brush in hot soda water, soap it, and scrub the comb thoroughly. Rinse in cold water, and dry with a soft towel.

OUR COOKING SCHOOL.

Cake Without Eggs.

One coffee cup of sugar—powdered—two large tablespoonfuls of butter rubbed into the sugar, one and a half cups of flour, one-half cup of sweet cream, one-half teaspoonful of soda. Bake quickly in small tins, and eat while fresh and warm.

Fricassee.

Cut the beef in rather thin pieces, stem for thirty minutes in broth or gravy enough to cover, season with salt, pepper and, if liked, a slice or two of onion. Just before serving, stir in the beaten yolk of an egg, then a spoonful of vinegar. Pour over squares of toast.

To Make Pies Crisp.

To give a delicious crispness to the outside of your pies, when your pastry has almost finished baking, draw it from the oven and brush it quickly over with the white of an egg and a little water mixed together; then sprinkle with sugar and return to the oven for a few minutes longer. When making mincemeat, if a quarter of a pound of fresh butter is beaten up with the sugar and added to every pound of fruit it will be found a great improvement upon suet, especially for cold mince pies.

A Hundred Years to Come.

(Old Favorite Series.)

Where, where will be the birds that sing,
A hundred years to come?
The flowers that now in beauty spring
A hundred years to come?
The rosy lips, the lofty brow,
The heart that beats so gaily now;
Oh, where will be love's beaming eye,
Joy's pleasant smile, and sorrow's sigh,
A hundred years to come?

Who'll press for gold this crowded street
A hundred years to come?
Who'll tread yon church with willing feet
A hundred years to come?
Pale, trembling age, and fiery youth,
And childhood with its brow of truth;
The rich and poor, on land and sea—
Where will the mighty millions be
A hundred years to come?

We all within our graves shall sleep
A hundred years to come;
No living soul for us shall weep
A hundred years to come.
But other men our lands shall till,
And others then our streets will fill,
While other birds will sing as gay,
As bright the sunshine as to-day,
A hundred years to come.

—Wm. G. Brown.

Polly's Frocks.

It was the middle of the night and Polly's frocks all hung in the nursery wardrobe. They were quiet for a time, and then the light blue China silk one said: "Don't crowd so, Pink Gingham. You are crushing my lace ruffles. I am Polly's best frock, and I ought to have more room." "Pooh," said the Pink Gingham, "maybe you are her best, but she doesn't like you as well as she likes me. When she wears you she has to be so careful of you that she can't have any fun. She likes me best because if she gets me soiled I can be washed." "No, she likes me the best," said the Red Merino, "because she always wears me when she goes to grandma's, and we do have lovely times there." "Well, said a White Apron, "I know she's awfully fond of me, because she wears me to kindergarten, and she is so proud of my shoulder bows." "I'll tell you how we'll know which she likes best," said a dear little White Lawn dress. "To-morrow is Polly's birthday, and on that day her mamma always lets her wear any dress she chooses. Now, we'll see which of us she'll select. I think she'll take me." The Blue China silk said nothing, but shrugged its shoulders in a way that showed what it thought. Next morning Polly opened her eyes bright and early, and mamma came in and gave her five birthday kisses. "It's my birthday, isn't it?" she said, gleefully. "Yes, dear," said mamma, "and here's your first present. What do you s'pose is in this box?" "Oh, what, what?" cried Polly. "Open it quick, mudder, dear, I want to see." The frocks in the wardrobe wanted to see, too, and they poked their sleeves out between the doors, trying to elbow each other out of the way. "Oh, oh!" screamed Polly, in delight. "It's a beautiful new dress, all made of plaid, with gilt buttons! Oh, mudder, let me put it right on and wear it for my birthday." "Yes, indeed," said her mother, kissing her, and then all the other little frocks shrunk back into the wardrobe and hung there dejectedly without saying a word.

Life Under Water.

In February and March more genuine winter days come to us than at any other time when we have a reasonable and seasonable right to expect them. Our young people, then, may count upon the winter romps of snow-balling, coasting and skating that they are more sure of now than they were in the earlier days of 1900. The frozen surface of the ponds looks dead enough. It would scarcely seem that living water is beneath, and it is even harder to imagine that animal life is actually comfortably tucked away under that icy cover. Where do you suppose the frogs have gone for the winter? They have soft, smooth-skinned bodies that would freeze to death if exposed to the open-air temperature of this month. On the bottom of the pond they have made a bed for themselves in the ooze and mud, huddled close together to keep one another warm. Water, as you know, freezes at thirty-two degrees, Fahrenheit. In a pond, just as in your bathtub, the water on top is the warmer and the water at the bottom the colder. The reason is that warm water is expanded, and is lighter than cold, so that it rises to the surface, while cold water, which is contracted, is heavier and sinks to the bottom. But as water freezes it begins again to expand, and that is why ice is lighter than water. The water under ice forms a layer about four or five degrees above the freezing point, and the animals sleeping there through the winter are sheltered in it. There they live and sleep until the spring sun wakens them, and there they are warmer and safer than if they—being water animals—were so foolish as to try to sleep anywhere else. Some small water bugs do creep ashore to hide in the crannies of rocks and walls, but they are little creatures that can fit into such places. The bigger animals would die of the exposure. The frogs, the fresh-water mollusks, know where to go for the greatest comfort, and there they stay their appointed time. It would never do for an amphibious frog, for instance, to make a mistake, as a boy might, and to crawl out of his comfortable bed before he is called. Nevertheless, when they are called in the spring-time, the frogs and mollusks obey the summons. They don't lie abed longer than they need to—and that is the moral of this talk about their winter life and ways.—Our Animal Friends for February.

They All Ate Their Husbands.

As long ago as the beginning of the eighteenth century the idea of using the thread that the spider spins from its body as a substitute for the thread unwrapped from the coccoon of the silk worm was broached, but with little practical result. An Englishman, Mr. Rolt, secured 20,000 feet of silk thread from twenty-two spiders in two hours. Of late some experiments have been conducted by curious persons to ascertain which spider produced the best and largest quantity of silk, for it has been demonstrated that it is an excellent substitute for that of the silk worm. Spiders from Paraguay and Argentina, from India, China and Australia were tried, but the best results were secured from the spiders of Madagascar. It was found that after laying her eggs the female spider spins most freely. Six of these were selected and confined for the test. From one 2,000 yards of thread were secured in ten days; from the second, 1,350 yards in seven days; from the third and fourth 450 yards in four days; from the fifth, 1,400 yards in eleven days, and from the sixth 4,200 yards in twenty-seven days. A German manufacturer was so delighted with this test that he made elaborate arrangements for having a spider silk mill, importing a large number of the spiders from Madagascar to Germany. All went well until the females had laid their eggs and begun to spin, when all at once the males were found to have disappeared—their larger feminine companions had grown so fond of them that each female spider had eaten her mate. This catastrophe ended the costly experiment.

A Bird's Wonderful Flight.

Carrier pigeons have been in use for ages for the purpose of taking messages from distant places to their homes. Long before the invention of the railway and the telegraph pigeons were the swift message-bearers of mankind, and today even they prove of great service in carrying news from besieged cities, or from parts of the world where the telegraph and the railways are not. Among the remarkable exhibitions of the speed and endurance of homing or carrier pigeons was a journey made not long ago by a bird named Wilkins, and owned by Mr. Lautz of Buffalo. The pigeon was taken to Lawrenceburg, Tenn., a distance of 700 miles, and liberated. The bird first flew straight up, then circled a few times, and finally started flying rapidly in the direction of Buffalo. A southwest wind was blowing at the rate of about thirty miles an hour, and a thunderstorm was approaching. Likely enough the approaching storm frightened the pigeon and caused it to try to reach home ahead of the deluge, and likely enough the wind helped it greatly. But the bird flew faster than the wind, and reached its home loft in 13 hours 12 minutes and 41 seconds from the time of its liberation. Consequently the homing bird flew but a little less than a mile a minute, or at the rate of 1567 yards a minute—a record hardly equaled by the fastest express trains. After this wonderful flight of 700 miles the bird seemed only a little tired, and the next day it was at lively as ever.

Brave Children.

Probably one of the youngest heroes on record is Leonard Webber, aged five years, who has just received a certificate of honor from the Royal Humane society for saving his three-year-old brother from drowning. The Philadelphia Times tells the story. The children were playing with other boys on the edge of a pond, when the younger Webber fell into the water. The others, frightened, took to their heels, but Leonard, without the slightest hesitation, plunged in and rescued his brother. Quite as remarkable was a case which comes from a remote corner of Russia, where a boy of nine years actually had the temerity to tackle a great, gaunt wolf that had assailed a tiny playmate as he lay asleep. The rescuer seized an ax that had been left by a woodman, and gave battle to the wolf, which, finding itself thus attacked, promptly scuttled off to the wood. Russia has been the scene of much youthful heroism. Some years ago, while a peasant woman was sitting with her little daughter, aged about 8 years, at supper, the curtains which divided the living room in which they sat from the adjoining bedroom caught fire through the explosion of an oil lamp. The mother sat still, not knowing what to do, but her daughter, child as she was, possessed more presence of mind. Seizing a knife, she climbed upon a chair, cut down the blazing curtains and then smothered the flames with the hearth rug. In two minutes the fire, which might have developed into a veritable conflagration, was extinguished.

A Lesson for Boys.

Thirty years ago Mr. H., a nurseryman in New York state, left home for a day or two. It was rainy weather, and not a season for sales; but a customer arrived from a distance, hitched his horse, and went into the kitchen of the farmhouse, where two lads were cracking nuts. "Is Mr. H. at home?" "No, sir," said the eldest, Joe, hammering at a nut. "When will he be back?" "Dunno, sir, mebbe not for a week." The other boy, Jim, jumped up and followed the man out. "The men are not here, but I can show you the stock," said he, with such a bright, courteous manner that the stranger, who was a little irritated, stopped and followed him through the nursery, examining the trees, and left his order. "You have sold the largest bill that I have had this season, Jim," his father said to him, greatly pleased, on his return home. "I'm sure," said Joe, "I'm as willing to help as Jim, if I'd thought in time."—Success.

More Wonders of the Sea Depths.

At the recent scientific conference at Munich, Professor Chun exhibited the results of the German Deep-Sea expedition. Some of the fish found at a depth of about 10,000 feet, resembled, he said, the fossil species in the rocks of the Mesozoic era, when the earth's atmosphere was dense with carbon. These fish, in many cases, had special means of collecting light. Some possessed enormous eyes, occupying nearly the whole side of the head, and some were supplied with telescopic organs. Others carried their light on their heads in a manner similar to that of the glow-worm.

You may depend upon it that there are as good hearts to serve men in palaces as in cottages.—Robert Owen.

SHREWD CASHIER.

Saved $50,000 for His Bank by Prompt Action.

A cashier employed in a large western city recently went over the collateral held by his loan clerk simply by way of precaution. He noticed that one of the bank's best customers had over $50,000 out on bills of lading of cattle on the way north. As the house in question had an abattoir, this was not surprising. The firm was rated at over $500,000, and its transactions were on a large scale. Suddenly it occurred to him that the way bills looked very much alike. Comparison showed that they were written by the same hand. He took one to the railroad which was supposed to have issued it, and found that it was a forgery. The handwriting on the bills was that of a member of the firm which was borrowing the money. This could mean but one thing—the firm was in desperate financial difficulties and about to go under. It was now too late to do anything in the matter that day. The cashier did not say a word to anybody, but went home. He did not sleep that night, but planned out his campaign for the next morning. The loans were all subject to call at any time. He waited until after the clearing house returns were in for the day to excite no suspicion. Then he had the guilty partner in the cattle firm rung up on the telephone. "Very sorry," he said to the cattleman nonchalantly, "but we are debtors in the clearing house today. Money is a little scarce. Guess we'll have to ask you to repay that $50,000 worth of loans today. Sorry to inconvenience you, and if you want the money again a little later, will be glad to have you call around." "Very well," came the reply; "will you have a check on our account in your bank or on our other bank?" "Better draw on the other bank, as that is customary," replied the cashier. In a few minutes the check, duly certified by the cashier of the rival institution, was sent in. The cashier took the precaution to send around to the other bank to make sure that the certification was no forgery. Then he sent for the forger. "Now," said he, "I have my money, and I can speak plainly. I want you to take your account out of this bank." "What do you mean?" demanded the cattle dealer. "You know perfectly well what I mean," was the reply. "You may take your account out of this bank and keep it out. We have no use for it." The account was withdrawn. Within less than thirty days the failure of the cattle firm was announced.—New York Mail and Express.

Reflections.

"Well," said the boy, reflectively, chewing some home-made taffy as he looked into the face of the policeman, "yeh spoilt me fishin' trip fer me, wen yeh pulled dat 'ere string last night, dat was hangin' fr'm me winder. Yeh see, I tol' me fr'ends I would let a string hang fr'm me winder so w'en he woke early 'n de mornin' he could kum to me house, pull de string, wake me up an' I would go a-fishin' on the ice wid him. Up 'n bed I tied de string to me right hand an' hung de string out er de winder an' went ter sleep. Me little brudder Louie, who I sleep wid, got mixed with de string on me hand an' putty soon he had it curled 'bout tree times 'round his neck. Well, 'bout hav past four 'n de mornin' me fr'end kim t' me house an' pulled de string, an' soon was chokin' littel Louie. Louie kinder woke up an' kicked me so dat I thot it was a robber an' called fer me Maw. W'en Maw kim up she saw little Louie chokin'. Maw den cut de string an' saved littel Louie's life. Den yeh pulled me fr'end who was pullin' de rope, fer a robber, 'cause yeh thot he was robbin' our house. In de mornin' me Maw saw de string 'round me hand an' warmed me up fer de day, I'll bet I'll never hang 'nother string out de winder. But anyway yew policemen is always 'round when yer not wanted."—Detroit Free Press.

A Candid Publisher.

In the recent death of J. Schabelitz, the famous Zurich publisher and author, the world of art and letters has lost one of its extraordinary characters. He was a shrewd business man, an excellent linguist, a skillful writer, and probably the most savage publisher who ever lived. When he accepted the famous memoirs of Count von Arnim, he wrote on the postal card, with the acceptance, the proviso: "I reserve the right to correct your infernally bad grammar." To an aspiring poet who had submitted manuscript, he answered by postal card: "I refuse to be disgraced by printing your doggerel. I don't return the copy because you didn't inclose enough postage. If you will send it, with the price of this card, I will send it to you, but, I don't think the stuff is worth the expense on your part." One of his postal cards to a novelist read about as follows: "For heaven's sake, come and take away the unnamable mass of paper you left here for me to look at." An ambitious historian was crushed by the following, written, like all of his correspondence, upon a postal card: "You are making the mistake of your life. You don't want to study history. You want to learn how to write."

Wise Cat.

These are the three reflections of Theophile Gautier's cat when she first saw a parrot: "This is certainly a green chicken," was her first thought. Succeeding it, came the conclusion: "Chickens, even if green, are good to eat." Then she sprang upon the perch, and the parrot shouted at her in French. "Ah," thought pussy, "it can't be a chicken at all! It must be a gentleman!"

Why He Trekked.

Johnny (entering parlor)—Oh, it's you, is it? Why, I thought—— Mr. Softleigh—You thought what, Johnny? Johnny—I thought it was one of them fellers from South Africa. Mr. Softleigh—What made you think that, my little man? Johnny—Why, sis said she was going to try and get rid of a Boer tonight. And Mr. Softleigh trekked soon after.—Baltimore American.

THE MORMONS DID IT.

WHAT WE OWE TO BRIGHAM YOUNG'S FOLLOWERS.

They Were the First to Put Into Operation the Idea of Irrigating Arid Regions—Has Grown Into Vast Proportions.

(Boise, Idaho, Letter.)

Criticise the Mormons as you will, they must be credited with the wonderful system of irrigation by which the wastes of the western states have been redeemed. On July 24, 1847, Brigham Young and his little band of pioneers began the construction of the first irrigation canal ever built in the United States.

Irrigation made of Utah's desert wilderness the garden spot of America. It is doing as much for Idaho, where the mountains are so located that ample valleys, and plains of millions of acres, may be easily and economically watered. On the Nile, in Italy, Spain and elsewhere in Europe, irrigation has prevailed for centuries. Indeed, 60 per cent of the world's breadstuffs and cereals are grown by irrigation.

Where "the vine-clad hills and citron groves" around Vesuvius in sunny Italy are found, a great population has been sustained for many thousand years—and the land has never worn out—its wonderful vitality being due to underlying strata of lava which by some curious chemistry renders the soil immortal.

Idaho's wonderfully productive soil covers lava strata deposited by volcanoes long ago extinct. The rejuvenation of the land results not alone from this lava, but from rich fertilizers annually brought to it by the irrigation waters. It is almost an aphorism that land is good where sage brush grows. Marvelous must therefore be the fertility of Idaho, for everywhere the green of the sage is seen. Wheat, corn, oats, barley, alfalfa, timothy, rye, flax, tobacco, broom corn, sorghum, sweet and Irish potatoes, beets, cabbages, hops, and fruits, such as prunes, apples, pears, plums, peaches, cherries, apricots, nectarines, grapes and all of the small bush products, grow profusely. Particularly do the apple, pear and prune attain to perfection in size and flavor.

Alex. McPherson of Boise City realized $600 per acre from apples. Geo. L. Hall of Mountain Home sold $500 worth of peaches from one acre. T. J. Phifer of Boise City realized $900 from two acres of Italian prunes. Instances like these can be multiplied ad infinitum.

But Idaho does not depend entirely upon agriculture. Its mountains are filled with mining camps which furnish a home market for far more agricultural products than the state is now able to produce.

Snake River Valley contains about 3,000,000 acres and some of the finest pastoral scenes there presented are in the midst of gold placer mining operations. Many farmers there realize handsomely for work during spare hours—washing shining powdered gold from the river's bed.

In a state having so many productive portions to select from it is hard to suggest particular locations, but settlers will find room for any number of new homes.

Different state and private agencies are sending out printed information about Idaho. Perhaps the most conservatively prepared matter is that now emanating from the general passenger agent of the Oregon Short Line at Salt Lake City, Utah. This railroad permeates almost every agricultural region in the state and stands ready to furnish to homeseekers every courtesy in the power of its officers.

At the present rate Idaho will soon be as thickly populated as Utah. It is in the same latitude as France, Switzerland, Portugal, Spain and Italy, and its climate is incomparable.

Vast timber areas furnish lumber of excellent quality. Cyclones and destructive storms never occur. The winters are short and people work out doors all the year. The annual death rate is the lowest of any state in the Union.

Verily Idaho is a wonderful state and destined to become the home place of many times its present population.

Fitz's Bulldog Vindicated.

Bob Fitzsimmons does not mind how much he is called a "stiff" or a "bluffer" by the street gamins or barroom loungers, but he resents reflections on the pugnacity of his latest bulldog.

The ex-champion is seen much nowadays on upper Broadway and in the lobbies of the big hotels. He is invariably accompanied by the dog. A few nights ago he was being joked by a number of friends in a saloon, and doubts as to the gameness of the "purp" were expressed.

"You think he won't fight, do you?" exclaimed Fitz.

He jerked off his silk hat, threw it to the dog, and the animal attacked it with as much viciousness as if it had been a wildcat. Eight dollars' worth of headgear was masticated before the astonished spectators could recover their breath. Fitz then stuck the remains on his head.

"That's the way he chews up dogs and people," he said, and the two departed for home.—New York World.

"Billy" Brady, Press Club Employe.

Twenty years ago William A. Brady, lessee of theaters, manager of traveling shows and backer of pugilists, was the billiard room boy of the Press club. The club rooms were then at No. 119 Nassau street, and Brady was known as "Blue Eyed Billy." He was popular with reporters and often received tips from them for running to newspaper offices with "copy." While Brady was employed by the Press club his father died and the members subscribed money to pay the funeral expenses. A reporter on a morning newspaper took much interest in young Brady and obtained him a job in the office of a weekly newspaper. Afterwards Brady went West and when he returned to New York he was a wealthy man. The reporter who had helped him had lost his grip and Brady had a chance to show his gratitude and improved it.—New York World.

Peculiarities of Quail.

There are many odd and interesting things to be said of the quail, which is known throughout a large scope of the country as the partridge. One is that it has the power when badly frightened of withholding its scent. A covey, quickly flushed, will scatter and lie so close the best dog in the world will overrun them, making no sign of point until the bird flutters up right underfoot. Another is that it has the faculty of simulating death, if taken winged in hand, and of coming quickly to life the minute the grasp is relaxed in the neighborhood of good cover. Further, the birds have a sort of barometric sense.

A woodsman marking the direction in which quail feed can almost certainly foretell the day's weather. If they choose stubble or cornfields, it will be mild and moist: if they go to the open woods, he looks for wind and sun: if they scurry for thickets of brier and sedge, then he knows bitter cold is imminent. Unless forced to migrate by lack of food a covey always sleeps within 100 yards of the nest it was hatched in, and this although it may have fed all day several miles away. The sleeping is done in a huddled ring, tails in, heads out, all around and so closely bunched that a good sized napkin will cover it. Instinct possibly lies back of the ring making. Thus the shy creatures hope to escape surprise from creeping vermin, minks, weasles, foxes, which steal upon them in the night.

A Peculiar Dutch Custom.

The four Sundays of November are observed as fete days in Holland. They are known by the curious names Review, Decision, Purchase and Possession, and all refer to matrimonial affairs, November in Holland being the month par excellence devoted to courtship and marriage, probably because the agricultural occupations of the year are over and possibly because the lords of creation from quite remote antiquity have recognized the pleasantness of having wives to cook and cater for them during the long winter.

On Review Sunday everybody goes to church, and after service there is a church parade in every village, when the youths and maidens gaze upon each other, but forbear to speak.

On Decision Sunday each bachelor who is seeking a wife approaches the maiden of his choice with a ceremonious bow and from her manner of responding judges whether his advances are acceptable. Purchase Sunday the consent of the parents is sought if the suit has prospered during the week. Not till Possession Sunday, however, do the twain appear before the world as actual or prospective brides and grooms.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Saw Too Much.

A farmer hired a man and put him into his field to work. After awhile the farmer came along and accosted the new hand:

"Did you see a carriage go down the road awhile ago?"

"Yes, I did. One of the hosses was a gray hoss, and the other was a roan and lame in his off leg."

"I thought I heard some men shooting over there on the edge of the woods."

"Yes; one of them was Colonel Jones. He was the tall one. The second one was Major Peters, and the third one was Tom McSniffer. Colonel Jones had one of them newfangled breechloadin guns what breaks in two."

"Did you see those wild pigeons fly over just now?"

"See 'em? Rather. There was 19 of them. They lit in that old cornfield down yonder."

"Well, you see too much for a man that is hired by the day. Here's your wages. When I want a man to keep watch of what is going on, I'll send for you."—London Answers.

The Doe and Her Fawn.

Fawns when first dropped are for some hours unable to stand. The doe does not remain beside them, but paces slowly around at a considerable distance. Every now and then she gives a little tremulous, bleating call, at sound of which the fawn lifts its head and tries to struggle to its feet. Should a man or a dog appear meantime the doe runs away in a straight line, but laggingly and halting, as though herself hurt unto death. When she thinks she has lured the enemy far enough away, she gives three great flying leaps, which take her at once out of sight, and goes back to her baby upon seven league boots. But if left undisturbed she keeps up the pacing until she sees the fawn standing, then paces daintily away in a straight line, choosing always the easiest grade. As she paces she calls faintly and every now and then halts, looking over her shoulder to see if she is followed.

His Very Own Jones.

There are many Joneses in this world, but perhaps not quite so many as people think. Not long ago two friends met who had not seen each other for ten years, since their school days.

"Whom did you marry, Billy?" asked one.

"A Miss Jones of Philadelphia," replied Billy, who was a trifle sensitive.

"You always did take to the name 'Jones.' I can remember when we went to school together you used to tag around after a little snub nosed Jones girl."

"I remember it, too," said Billy. "She's the girl I married."—Youth's Companion.

THE CHARIOT OF OLD

A GRIM REMINDER OF THE COMBATS OF THE HEROIC PERIOD.

This Vehicle Was Used in the Days of Antiquity For the Battle, the Chase, in Processions and in Games—How It Was Constructed.

The chariot was used in antiquity for the battle, the chase, in public processions and in games. It had two wheels and was drawn by two horses, and when one or two horses were added they were attached to each side of the main pair by a side trace, fastened to the front of the chariot.

These chariots have only come down to us in fragments, with the exception of the one in the archeological museum of Florence, which is a unique example of a war chariot, the so called "Biga di Frassino," found by Rossellino in a Thebes tomb. It is certainly as old as the fourteenth century B. C. It is probably a trophy obtained in the north by some Egyptian warrior.

There is an entire absence of metal in the construction. Immediately on the axle, without springs of any kind, rests the basket, or body, of the chariot, which consisted of a floor to stand on and a semicircular guard around the front and about half the height of the driver. It is entirely open at the back, so that the combatants might leap to the ground and up again, as became necessary by the exigencies of action. There was no seat, and generally in war chariots there was only room for the combatant and his charioteer to stand in.

The pole, as in the present instance, was usually attached to the middle of the axle, although to outward appearances it looked as though it sprang from the front of the basket. At the end of the pole was the yoke, which looked like a ram's horns. Depending from this by leather thongs was a Y shaped piece, which probably took the place of the modern horse collar. Probably broad bands were also fitted around the chest of the animals.

Besides the harness of each horse there were a bridle and a pair of reins somewhat in the same style as are in use at the present day. These were made of leather and were ornamented with studs of ivory and metal. The reins were passed through rings attached to the collar and were long enough to be tied around the waist of the charioteer in case of his having to defend himself.

The wheels and body were usually of wood, strengthened in places with bronze or iron. The wheels had from four to eight spokes, and the tires were of bronze or iron (in the present instance ash was used), and the pins which secured the fellies were of fossil bone.

This description applied to the chariots of almost any of the nations of antiquity, the difference consisting chiefly in the mountings. Thus the chariots of the Egyptians and Assyrians, with whom the bow was the principal arm of attack, were richly mounted with quivers full of arrows, while those of the Greeks, who used the spear, were plain except as regards mere decorations. The Persians and the ancient Britons used a class of chariots having the wheels mounted with sharp, sickle shaped blades, which cut to pieces whatever came in their way. This was probably the invention of the Persians.

The use of the battle chariot really belongs to the heroic period. The warrior, standing by the side of his charioteer, was driven in front of the line to invite hostile warriors to single combat. After the strategic skill of a commander superseded the demands on his personal valor the chariot was transferred from the battlefield to the hippodrome, where alone its original form was preserved. The description of the Homeric battle chariot, therefore, to a great extent also applies to the historic chariot of the race course.

The small diameter of the chariot wheel may be explained from the desire of preventing the chariot from being opposed by the impediments in the battlefield, such as debris or dead bodies. The rim was usually formed of four fellies, into which the four spokes were let. The upper rail, which was of either wood or metal, varied greatly in form and was intended to be grasped by the warrior on jumping on to the chariot, while the front part served for fastening the reins and the traces of the "wheel horses." In the Roman triumphal chariot a covering of leather served to ward off missiles, and later on the sides were composed of strong boards.

Unfortunately we know very little of the vehicles of everyday use in those days. They nearly all seem to be a variety of what we now term the "gig."—Scientific American.

No Excuse For Chimneys.

Notwithstanding that we have long since ceased to hoist coal to lofty apartments, having abandoned forever the old fashioned fireplace with its soot and cinders, the said fireplace is still with us in every new house that is built. Its open throat leads the same old draft up the chimney, and the same old result follows—colds and cold feet. There is no excuse for a chimney or a fireplace in a modern house heated from the cellar. The gas log is a nuisance and a sham.—New York Press.

Representative Champ Clark, of Mo., thus stated his position on the trust question: "It would be foolish for me to waste time making an anti-trust speech. The entire matter may be summed up in a single sentence. This is not a new issue. The first anti-trust speech was made about 4,000 years ago by an old gentleman named Moses, when he wrote upon the tablets of stone the inspired words, 'Thou shalt not steal.'"

Service to Blame.

We gladly print the following reply to our article in the issue of the 14th inst. in reference to the mail service between here and Lambert.

Red Lake Falls, March 21, 1900.
Editor Spectator.
St. Hilaire, Minn.

Sir:—After reading the article in your last weeks issue which I think reflects on the management of this post office. I wish you would publish the following reply:—The leaving time of the Lambert mail from the Red Lake Falls P. O. is one o'clock on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Two thirty on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. As the train from St. Hilaire is not due in Red Lake Falls until two-thirty p. m. mail coming down on that train cannot leave for Lambert and Lost until the following day. When the St. Hilaire Spectator arrives on Thursday p. m. train it could not reach Lambert until Friday at eight o'clock p. m. and reach Lost and Brooks on Saturday p. m. Should the papers arrive here on Friday as is often the case they could not leave this office until Saturday and as there is no mail on Sunday between Lost and Brooks they could not reach Lost until Monday p. m. making the best time possible under the present mail service. Respectfully,

Mrs. E. F. Marshall, P. M.
Red Lake Falls.

"An At Home"

will be given in the M. E. church on Tuesday evening April 10th. The evening will be spent in social, musical and literary entertainment at the close of which the ladies will serve luncheon. Admission, adults 25 cents and children 15 cents.

Rudyard Kipling's new animal story "The Elephant's Child," is a feature of the April Ladies' Home Journal. It is the first of a series of "Just So" stories, and describes, with Kipling's inimitable drollery, how the elephant got his trunk. Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady begins an interesting series of articles on his experiences as "A Missionary in the Great West," and Julian Ralph writes of "The Choir Boys of England." The now almost forgotten "Mysteries of the Century" which held the centre of the world's stage in their day, are graphically recalled, and "Singing 'The Messiah' on the Plains" gives a close view of the life of a music-loving Swedish community in the West. Edward Bok, indecrying "The Ease with which we Marry," suggests some restricting, uniform legislation, and speaks plainly on divorce. Ian Maclaren pays his respects to "The Genteel Tramps in our Churches," and "An American Mother" writes of "The American Women in the Market-Place." "Through Picturesque America" is being in the April Journal, two pages being devoted to views of the natural beauties of our country. "A successful country house in New England" and "Wellesley Girls in the Play" are among the other notable pictorial features. To every branch of activity which concerns the home makes the April Journal brings helpful suggestion or advice. By The Curtis' Publishing Company, Philadelphia. One dollar a year; ten cents a copy.

Sale of Ditching Jobs.

Notice is hereby given, that, on the 23rd day of April 1900 at 1 o'clock p. m. at the auditors office in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, I will sell the jobs of digging and constructing the ditch No. 1 of Red Lake county, established by the board of county commissioners of Red Lake county, State of Minnesota, by their order bearing date January 5th 1900, viz: In sections of 100 feet each, each of said sections to be known and numbered by stakes, as shown by the report of the viewers in said matter, commencing at the one including the outlet, and from thence, successively, up stream to the one including the source, also the constructing of the bridges required on said ditch according to plans and specification now on file in the auditors office of said county to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, said work to be completed within the time required, and in the matter specified, in said viewer's report. And no bid will be entertained which exceeds more than thirty (30) per cent over and above the estimated cost of the construction, in any case, as stated in the said order; and the successful bidder will be required to give a satisfactory bond, with two freehold securities, for the faithful performance and fulfillment of his contract, and to pay all damages that may accrue by reason of his failure to complete the job within the time required in the contract. The said order and estimates and profile are on file, and may be seen at my office.

Dated March 26th, 1900.

Adam Zeh,
County Auditor Red Lake County,
State of Minnesota.

Don't forget your "little subscription account" when selling your wheat.

—Dr. Thomas is an up-to-date in all the different branches in his profession. Remember the dates, April 23rd and 24th.

Physicians do not always know it all. A gentleman tells this experience: "Up to the age of 24 I never drank a cup of coffee. I had an attack of dyspepsia and consulted an eminent specialist. After examining me he said, 'Young man, coffee drinking has ruined your stomach; if you will give up coffee you will be well.' I paid him his fee of $25 and from that day began drinking coffee, and my dyspepsia passed off."

—To cure a cough or cold in one day take the Imperial Cough Syrup.

IMPERIALISM.

Let no one misunderstand the meaning of imperialism. It is not a term applied in derision. It is a word that has a meaning so important in the parting of the ways which our country has reached that it is not to be treated lightly or as a subject of jest. Imperialism is the policy of empires. An empire extends its limits beyond that of a kingdom and carries with it those powers which belong to a despotism. Imperial principals comprehend the governing of people without consulting their wishes, and without a voice in the form of government. An empire has vassels and vassel states; countries that pay tribute to it in one form or another. It has been the American idea that a government could be established and maintained when all of its subjects could have equal privileges. This desire for greater liberty gave birth to our republic. Liberty loving people from all over the civilized world came here that they might enjoy the privileges of a country where every citizen has the right of say in how he shall be governed and by whom. It was not to oppress that they came here, but to escape oppression.

The heroes of '76 did not fight that they might subjugate other countries, but to establish the fact that without representation there should be no legislation. Without a voice in a government they should not be taxed for its support.

Assuming control over distant and settled territory to be governed in that manner which empires would govern makes us to that extent an empire. It was at the time of her greatest holding of foreign countries that Rome was forced to change to an empire. It was then a great thing to say that one was a citizen of Imperial Rome. The empire soon broke of its own weight, the wild tribes over ran it and soon none were so pitiable as Roman citizens. It was this desire for territory which caused its change from a republic and its speedy ruin. This is the history of every country which obtained widly spread domain. That, however, is the material view of it and from the standpoint of wealth and power.

If your people believe in personal liberty they can not view with complaisance this depriving of ten millions of people in distant islands of their right to that which our forefathers fought for. But that is the question, the vital question, which will be settled in the coming campaign. Either we maintain a pure republic or change it into a nondescript, half republic half empire. The first fight is on now over Puerto Rico. Here the question is "shall the constitution follow the flag." If it does then it is not imperialism. Pehaps it is questionable expansion, but it is not imperialism.

Imperialism carries with it militaryism and the necessity for a large standing army. A large army is a menace to the republic and personal liberty. See the case of France. A standing army is not only a menace to our personal liberty, but is a constant menace to our neighbors both north and south. Imperialism means the certain absorption of all contiguous territory and here militaryism and imperialism again meet and clasp hands. It is not imperialism that we want, it is trade expansion, and kindly treatment of all people will more surely bring it than conquest. If imperialism gains, then the sooner we change our form of government to one more suited for the government of an empire the better it will be. Let us hope, however, that there is enough love for the deep underlying principals of our government that we will not be forced to confess that the government which our fathers planned and fought for is a failure and that civilization has not yet reached that point where a liberal form of government is possible. Let every legal citizen, native or foreign born think of it as the most momentous question we have had to face since the birth of the republic.—Bathgate (N. D.) Pink Paper.

A. R. De Fluent, editor of the Journal, Doylestown, Ohio, suffered for a number of years from rheumatism in his right shoulder and side. He says: "My right arm at times was entirely useless. I tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and was surprised to receive relief almost immediately. The Pain Balm has been a constant companion of mine ever since and it never fails." HER HEART'S SECRET;

Or, UNDER A SPELL.

BY JEAN WARNER.

CHAPTER II. (Continued.)

And then Fanny's merry voice called them from the cabin door, and the strange interview was over.

CHAPTER III.

Sunset Hill.

There are few fairer spots on earth than the mountain slope from which arose the granite crests of Clive Towers. The background of misty-blue uplands; the silvery river, winding through the mossy vale; the dark forest, tossing its whispering boughs to the mountain breezes, and the grand old mansion, so broad, so stately, yet so unpretentious—almost seeming itself a part of nature's handiwork, so well did the massive proportions and simple architecture accord with the landscape around it.

It was evening, and a merry group was gathered on the velvety lawn in front of the house.

Gay croquet mallets were wielded by pretty hands, and the musical click of the balls was mingled with the murmur of sweet voices and the ripple of silvery laughter.

Fannie Clive was there, a very Hebe, in pale rose-colored muslin and floating ribbons; her friend, cousin and constant cavalier, Fenton Forest, a dashing young navy officer, gorgeous in buttons and beard; Laurence Grey, a tall, slender, thoughtful young student-friend of Herbert's, and his sister Marian, a liquid-eyed brunette; and last, though by no means least of all, with her golden hair rippling over a robe that seemed woven of morning mists, Sybil Wraye, pale, slender and beautiful, with the heir of Clive Towers ever beside her, hanging, entranced, on her slightest whisper, watching eagerly for her faintest smile.

When the game was over, she would have escaped with Marian and Fannie to the rose garden, but Herbert was quick to detain her.

"Have you forgotten your promise to me, Miss Sybil? You were going with me this evening to Sunset Hill. It is just the hour to see all its beauties."

"Fannie will come with us?" said the young girl, glancing toward her friend.

"She has seen it a hundred times; besides, Fan never had much of an eye for the beauties of nature," was the brother's laughing reply. "She prefers the beauties of art. The hill is not a quarter of a mile distant, Miss Sybil, and there are no ogres to be met with on the way, although I could not have promised you as much three years ago."

"Ah!" she said, with a slight start.

"I had a scuffle about here with one of the most notorious villains that ever went unhung," continued the young man, lightly, "and I came very near saving the hangman that trouble. But such reptiles are hard to kill, and by the time I had recovered the senses which he had pretty well knocked out of me, he had dragged himself off to the river, where he may lie to this day, for aught I know."

"Did he attack you?" asked Sybil, in a very low voice. "Did he try to rob you?"

"I don't know as I should have resented that so much," answered Herbert, smiling. "A genuine Jack Sheppard might have appealed to my Bohemian sympathies. No; this fellow met me with mysterious threats and incomprehensible menaces. I always had the greatest objection to mystery; I can stand open, honest villainy very well, but underhand business maddens me. I love the sunlight myself, Miss Sybil, and can bear no darkness around me. But enough of an uninteresting subject. Here we are at Sunset Hill."

It was less a hill than a ridge of the mountains which, crowned by a crest of stately cedars, looking over a valley of gathering shadows to the golden west.

Far beneath flowed the river, slowly veiling itself in silvery mists; far beyond it were the realms of sunset, pillared in purple, and stretching out in vistas too dazzling for mortal eye to reach.

Sybil stood for a minute on the sunlit height, silent and breathless, then her gray eyes deepened; a faint rose, which might have been only a reflection of the glorious sky above, flushed her transparent cheek; and, forgetful of her companion, unconscious of the admiring gaze he fixed upon her lovely face, a song, soft and low as the evening twitter of the birds, trembled from her lips.

"Thou in the sunlight
And in the shade;
Yet, ah, by the sunlight
The shadow is made!
Thine be the gladness
And mine be the gloom;
For love, through thy triumph,
Is only my doom!"

"Sybil"—in the sudden tenderness which mastered him, Herbert forgot the formal prefix he had hitherto given her name—"Sybil, you must sing those sad notes no more. Poor little warbler! what thorn is piercing your tender breast, that draws forth from your lips such plaintive melody? Trust me with your sorrow, Sybil; let me be your brother, your friend—nay; what words are those for me to utter?—I, who have learned, in three short weeks, to love you with the love that surpasses all others—with a love that would shield you from every danger, every sorrow, every pain—with a love that trembles at its own height and depth, at its own despairing strength, perhaps its own wild folly. Sybil—'

"Hush, hush, hush!" she whispered, turning to him a face from which every vestige of life and color had faded. "You must not speak so to me—me! I—I am a stranger to you. You know naught of me."

"I know that you are the loveliest, purest, most perfect of women!" continued Herbert, impetuously; "I know that sweet voice of yours awakened the deepest depths of my heart; I know that I love you better than my life—that the dearest hope of my heart is to win you for my own, my purer, dearest self—my wife!"

"Would you choose a wife because her face is fair and her voice is sweet?" she asked, in a tone which trembled, half-scornfully, half-timidly. "Would you choose a wife whose heart and soul are sealed books to you? of whose past you know nothing? whose very name is unknown to you—for Sybil Wraye is not my name. Ah, you shrink, you falter, Mr. Clive! It is not for such as me to hear your words—to listen to your vows—to bear your honored name. It is not for me—"

"For you, and only you!" he answered, eagerly, striving to grasp her hand, as she would have turned away from him. "You are only trying me, Sybil. Darling that sweet, snow-white face of yours is pledge sufficient to me of your innocent past, of your beautiful future. Only trust me, Sybil, as I trust you! I ask no more. There can be no darkness, beloved, beneath the pure sunshine of love. It reaches, it gladdens, it beautifies all things."

"Aye, but the sun sets," she answered, dreamily—"the sun sets, and then the night must come. No, Mr. Clive, you have forgotten wisdom in speaking—I have forgotten prudence in listening to you. Let us treat this conversation as though it had never been. I will go away to-morrow, and you must forget me."

"Forget you?" he echoed, bitterly—"forget you, Sybil? Can one go out into darkness forever, and forget he has seen the light? Forget you?—forget these two brief weeks of paradise and go calmly into the frozen regions of utter despair? Oh, Sybil, Sybil! But why should I reproach you, my poor little darling? The fault was not yours. I was too blinded to see the folly of my own hopes, the madness of my own love. I was too hasty, too rash, in speaking to you. But I can wait, darling—I can wait! Only give me a word of cheer, of hope, to live on, then try my patience as you will!"

The sunset hues had faded from the western sky, and the roseate flush from Sybil's cheek. There was no music in the dry, hard voice that answered Herbert's ardent appeal.

"I can give you no word of cheer, no word of hope. The gulf between us is too wide, too deep, too dark, for any link, however slight, to cross. We must part to-morrow, Mr. Clive, and heaven grant we may never meet again!"

There was a thrill of pain in her last words that stirred the dying hope in Herbert's breast.

"Sybil, Sybil! you do pity me: Your heart is not all cold—it is too sweet, too womanly, not to feel both sorrow and sympathy for such great grief as mine!"

"I have no heart!" was her agitated reply. "I have no right to a woman's heart, to a woman's sympathies. I am, for I must be, all stone—all stone!"

"You?" he repeated, in sad surprise—"you, so young, so gentle, so beautiful, so gifted with all that can make woman happy and man blessed?"

"You are mistaken," she answered, coldly. "There is a curse that will follow me everywhere—that I will take to no man's hearthstone; there is a spell upon me that no happiness can dissolve. I must live, I must suffer, I must die alone! But," her voice grew softer, "you will believe me when I tell you, Mr. Clive, that I have felt your sister's kindness and your own far more deeply than the happier woman would have done. I did not seek it; I did not claim it; I did not deserve it; yet—yet"—she bowed her face in her hands, and a convulsive shudder seemed to pass through her frame—"I should have fled from it. My shadow should never have darkened your threshold—my hand should never have broken bread at your board. It was weakness—nay, it was folly, madness—that brought me to Clive Towers!"

"Say, rather, it was fate," replied Herbert, imprisoning in his strong hand the little fingers that were clasped so despairingly. "Darling, there's but one answer I will take as final. Look up into my face with those beautiful, true eyes, and say: 'Herbert, I do not love you.' All else is naught to me. Love like mine banishes all suspicion, defies all distrust. I will not grieve you with another sigh, another prayer, if you will look frankly into my face and say you do not love me."

But she only bowed her head still lower upon her breast.

"Spare me!" she murmured. "Life is hard enough without this—without this!"

"You cannot say it!" repeated the young man, triumphantly. "Sybil, Sybil! your own heart is my ally. You do love me a little—only a little; Sybil?"

"Love you! Love you! No, no! I cannot; I dare not!" she cried, desperately. "Love, love! The word is mockery between you and me. See!" she added, pointing with a wild gesture toward the west. "The light was but for a moment, the darkness, the chill, the shadow of night have come upon us already. It is our doom—our doom!"

"My darling!" cried Herbert, soothingly. "It is only the gathering twilight. There, there! be calm! I will say no more to you now, Sybil. Do not tremble so, darling—no danger is near us. Look up far above the shadow, darling. See the star of love trembling in the purple sky, the star of hope that lights the evening shadows and heralds the golden morn. It is the only omen I see, the only omen I will take! The vesper-star, Sybil, shines above us, and will light our pathway yet."

CHAPTER IV.

Nightfall.

The silvery gray of the twilight had deepened into violet when Herbert and Sybil returned to Clive Towers.

The housekeeper, Mrs. Wyllis, sat behind the handsome tea service that had been the late Mrs. Clive's especial pride, and the younger people were merrily discussing her fragrant bohea and wafer biscuits.

Mrs. Wyllis had so long held the domestic reins in her father's house that Fannie had neither the ambition nor inclination to dispute her sway, and contented herself with her own enviable position as pet, beauty, and spoiled darling of the household—a bright-winged butterfly, too gay and joyous to ever sink into a humble bee.

A general exclamation greeted their entrance into the oak-paneled dining room.

"Where in the world have you been?" said Fannie. "I thought Herbert had run off with you in good earnest. Why, child, you're as cold as ice, and every bit of stiffness is out of that lovely grenadine; and the dews are so heavy here, and men never have a bit of sense! The idea of that boy dragging you round to see views at this hour of the night, without even a scarf or a shawl! And—oh, dear, I forgot to tell you, Herbert! Papa will be home to-night. We got a letter by the evening mail, and the dear old darling is coming by the next train. And—good gracious! where did I put it?—there was a letter for you, too, Sybil. Such a queer hand-writing. What did I do with it? Oh, here it is, under your plate. Did any one ever see such a criss-cross 'Miss Sybil Wraye?' I do declare, the girl has a regular ague! Why, you're trembling like a leaf. Sybil, sit down, and swallow this cup of hot tea right away."

"I am a little cold," said Sybil, sinking into the nearest chair, and crushing the unread letter into her bosom. "There is such a sudden change when—when the sun goes down."

"Herbert ought to have known that, if you didn't," said Fan, mischievously, delighted at having an opportunity to retaliate upon her brother for his many fraternal lectures. "But men are so heedless, that they never take time to think. I wouldn't be at all surprised if you had contracted a chill to-night that would lead to something serious. These river mists are dreadfully dangerous. Take another cup of tea, dear; and Mrs. Wyllis, do have a fire lighted in Sybil's room. She must go right to bed."

Sybil gladly accepted any excuse that would lead to her retirement from that merry group, 'mid which she felt so sadly out of place.

Her room was in the west wing of the Towers, and, with its low ceiling and dark wainscoting, would have seemed gloomy but for the bright carpet and the handsome curtains that screened the deep-set windows and draped the high, old-fashioned bed.

A cheerful wood fire already blazed and crackled on the broad hearth, and there was a quaint air of comfort about the room that the more modern and stylish part of the Towers could not rival.

It was one of Sybil's preferences to sleep alone, and Fannie, affectionately mindful of this peculiarity, had not claimed her companionship.

But this evening the young mistress of Clive Towers had determined upon seeing her charge safely to bed; so she settled herself, meanwhile, for a social chat.

"Aren't you dreadfully lonely in here, Sybil?" she said, sinking into one of the huge cushioned chairs by the fire, while her friend brushed out her long hair before the old-fashioned mirror set in the wall. "Dear me, I wouldn't sleep alone in this room for a million dollars!"

"Why not?" asked Sybil, with her wan smile. "It seems to me exceedingly comfortable."

"Oh, yes, it's comfortable enough," answered Fan, with a shrug of her pretty shoulders; "but this part of the house is as old as the hills, and—they say its haunted. An old great-uncle of ours died here ages ago. That's his picture hanging over the mantle. I'm sure he looks cross and ugly enough to haunt any one. Papa can't bear to hear these nonsensical tales; but the old country people round will talk, and they say Uncle Basil perambulates the house yet. He was a regular bugaboo to Herbert and myself when we were children. Our nurse used to spin such dreadful yarns, of which he was always the hero, and Herbert got so desperate one day that he made an attack upon the picture, and had nearly poked out the old gentleman's left eye, when papa entered and angrily forbade any further ghost stories."

Sybil turned from the glass and cast a swift glance at the dark portrait over the mantle.

"That was your uncle Basil, then," she said, in a low voice. "He has a hard face—a hard, pitiless face."

"He was a hard old fellow," said Fannie, lightly. "He lived here in this old hall for years and years, hoarding up thousands upon thousands. Nurse used to tell us that people were actually afraid to come by the house at night. It was always so dark and gloomy. But papa soon changed all that."

"Your father was—his uncle's heir, then?" and the soft cloud of golden hair veiled Sybil's face as she spoke. "Then he had no children?"

"Oh, dear, goodness, gracious, no!" answered Fannie, emphatically. "He was a regular sour, surly old bachelor. He hated women, and wouldn't even have a housekeeper—only Mrs. Wyllis. Of course, I wouldn't have you mention it for the world, but she was a sort of charity-child then, and the people she was bound to used to send her up every day or two, to straighten Uncle Basil's room and run errands for him after he was unable to go about himself. That was how he came to know her first, and he was very kind to her when he came into the property and sent her to school; and then after her husband died, when I was a tiny baby, she came as housekeeper to the Towers. Dear mamma thought the world of her, and she is a nice old creature, though awfully still—"

"Miss Fannie"—a low, clear voice, at the door, startled the pretty gossip—"Miss Fannie, your papa has come, and is asking for you."

"Papa!" exclaimed Fannie, springing from her seat—"papa come? The dear, precious old darling! where is he? See the dear girl tucked up warm in bed, and give her this tea, Wyllis, for I'll have to fly. I haven't seen that darling father of mine for six whole months."

And, regardless of the long brown hair which she had loosened from the comb, and which now fell in beautiful profusion over her shoulders, this unspoiled darling of fortune bounded away, to meet the newcomer with a daughter's loving kiss.

Mrs. Wyllis entered the room, and stood for a moment silently before the fire. She was a slight, pale woman, with features which might once have been pleasing, but they were marred by a sleepy, stealthy expression, which had caused Herbert, in a fit of childish anger, to aptly, though irreverently, compare her to a dozing cat.

She always wore a cap with snowy, floating tabs, and a pair of black lace mittens. Her widows garb was, in all other respects, strictly neat and conventional. Her soft, clinging robes never rustled; her soft slippers never creaked. She moved about the house as gently, as noiselessly, and, it seemed, as harmlessly as a shadow.

But the servants knew full well the faintest whisper of that low voice must be obeyed. They had all felt the iron strength of will which controlled and directed every portion of the domestic machinery at Clive Towers, and they feared, hated, but respected, the slight, pale woman who was so surely mistress there.

Towards the son and daughter of the house she was always gentle and affectionate; to the master, respectful and submissive; to the guests, silent and reserved.

In short, she was a model housekeeper, and under her able management and wise supervision Clive Towers was a model house.

Yet, strange to say, Sybil had from the first felt an inexplicable dislike for this quiet woman. Some magnetic chord of her being seemed to thrill a warning at her approach, as if an enemy were near. More than once she had detected a watchful glance cast upon her by those sleepy blue eyes; more than once shuddered to find them suddenly and noiselessly, at her side.

To-night the girl's overwrought emotions were scarcely within control. She felt as if she could not bear the nameless oppression which the housekeeper's presence caused her. She had her letter to read—the letter still crushed in her bosom, resting on her throbbing heart. She must be alone.

"I trust, Miss Wraye, that you feel no serious inconvenience from your late walk this evening," said the low, clear voice, at last.

"I was a little chilled; that was all," answered Sybil, hastily. "Fannie, in her friendly anxiety, exaggerated a mere passing sensation into an ailment. There is really nothing the matter with me, Mrs. Wyllis, and I should be sorry to detain you from duties that are, no doubt, far more urgent than any slight attention Fannie imagines I require at your hands."

"My duties are so regulated that I never find them urgent," was the composed reply. "I always have sufficient time to attend to the wants and requirements of Mr. or Miss Clive's guests. If I might venture a suggestion, Miss Wraye, I think you will find a little valerian and ammonia serviceable; as a harmless nervine—one that will insure you a pleasant night's rest. The late Mrs. Clive, in her last illness, used it frequently."

"Thank you, no," answered Sybil, with an irrepressible shudder. "I require nothing, really nothing, but quiet and rest."

"You find your room perfectly comfortable," said the housekeeper, with a strange intonation on the closing word.

"Perfectly," replied Sybil; "comfortable in every respect."

"I am glad to hear it," answered Mrs. Wyllis, smoothing her mittens with a stealthy gesture peculiar to herself, "I feared it might be a little—little gloomy for a young person. I am glad you find it comfortable, Miss Wraye—very glad, indeed! And, since you will not accept any assistance from me, I will bid you good-night—a very good-night!"

And, with a little stiff bow, the housekeeper turned away, stopping on the threshold to cast one of her swift, furtive glances at the slight figure that, with its golden hair still falling around it like a veil, stood beneath the dark, frowning portrait of old Basil Clive.

As the door closed behind Mrs. Wyllis, Sybil drew the letter from her bosom and glanced hastily over its few cramped lines.

There was neither address nor signature. Only these hasty, authoritative words:

"I must see you to-night in the graveyard by the river. My time is short, and my path is perilous, as you know; so do not fail me. Be sure to come. I will be there!"

SOUTH AMERICANS AS BUYERS.

In Purchasing Quantities of Wearing Apparel They Insist on Tryin on Each Article.

We get a good deal of business from wealthy natives of South and Central America," said a clerk in a large clothing and furnishing store; "and there is one rather amusing feature in that class of trade. The average Latin-American gentleman will never make a purchase until he is absolutely certain he is getting what he wants. There may be a moral certainty, but that isn't enough. A few days ago, to illustrate what I mean, a planter from Sa nJuan, Costa Rica, came in and selected six dozen white linen shirts, a gross of collars, and another gross of cuffs to match the outfit. The shirts were of a standard make, and all of one pattern—as like as two peas—and the same was true of the collars and cuffs. When the planter finally made his selection he told me, in broken English, that he was ready to try the things on, and, showing him into a private room, I sent him a shirt and a set of collars and cuffs. Presently he stuck his head out of the doorway and said: 'These eez all right. Please sen' me ze remaindaire.' I told the porter to carry in the lot, and he proceeded to try on seventy-two shirts and 144 collars and cuffs. As you may well imagine, it took time, for he dressed himself fully when he put on each garment, to judge how it set with his clothes. He began at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and when we closed at 6 he had worked his way through fourteen shirts.

"Next day he bega nat 9 sharp, took an hour for lunch, and satisfied himself that he wasn't being buncoed on thirty more. That left twenty-eight, which he finished off the following evening. With each shirt he tried on two collars and two pairs of cuffs. Of course, he found all the different articles exact duplicates, just as I tried to explain to him in advance, but he was not taking any chances, and handed over the price with an easy mind. Nearly all our other customers from that part of the world do substantially the same thing. I once sold a Guatemala official a whole case of socks, and he insisted on trying on every pair and lacing up his shoes over them. It was a tedious operation, and caused him to miss a ship, but he stuck to it to the bitter end. Queer people, these Central Americans!"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

VICTIM OF THE PLAGUE.

The Tortures Endured by a Japanese Woman in Honolulu.

The death of a Japanese woman on Maunakea street last week was an event of more than passing notice. She was stricken with the malady at 11 o'clock in the morning, while performing her household duties, the first symptoms being a sudden rise of pulse with the accompanying fever. She called her husband and told him she must lie down, as she felt weak and exhausted. She reclined on a pallet, which was about the only article of furniture in the shanty where they were living, and attempted to go to sleep; but a sensation of strange pains dispelled all thoughts of rest and she asked her husband to come to her bedside. She could only murmur: "Don't call the doctor; ask Ito to come." Ito, who was her sister, living a few doors away was speedily brought, and she, having a suspicion of the nature of the illness, proceeded to act as nurse. The contact of the black plague is like that of a ravenous tiger—short and fierce. In a little while the poor woman was groaning with pain, and throwing herself from side to side in a vain endeavor to get relief. Ito procured ice and applied cooling lotions to her temples, but the fever had gained a headway that baffled nursing. The disease was a complete master of the patient, and the swellings that characterize the bubonic plague began to appear in just an hour after the first symptoms asserted themselves. It was noon when the miserable victim was suffering indescribable tortures. Shrieking and imploring her husband to kill her, she writhed on her bed of agony. Ito then prepared poultices over the little kerosene stove in the room and applied them to the nauseous protuberances that had appeared over the groins and under the arms, working with that constancy that only sisterly affection can impel. At 1 o'clock the woman gave up her life and added another unit to the list of Honolulu's plague-stricken victims.—Austin's Hawaiian Weekly.

"I am so afraid of that rocky road," thought the old shoe, "that I dare not say my sole is my own."

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Dairy Notes.

One of the hard things that the manager of a creamery or cheese factory has to contend with is dishonesty among those that supply milk. Where milk is purchased by the hundred pounds this condition is particularly acute, and it even exists in considerable measure where the milk is purchased by the test. One cheesemaker tells of the trouble he has with his patrons that bring poor milk. He says that one man continually brought milk so near the souring point that it was sometimes impossible to use it, and once or twice it was returned. But the man would always come back smiling the next day and assert that the manager was wrong in sending back the milk—that it kept perfectly for a long time afterward. One day the milk brought was so near sour that the manager thought it necessary to refuse it. He thought, however, that he would be sure that this milk soured, so he slyly slipped into the cans enough rennet to make the milk thick in a short time. The following morning the farmer was back with a new lot of milk, but declared that the milk of the preceding day kept over night, and that some of it was used for making custard the next day. Of course, it was not policy for the manager to give away the fact that he knew the man was lying, or that he had put rennet in the milk. It illustrates one of the biggest obstacles in the way of getting clean milk.

* * *

Do not feed musty hay to dairy cows, nor in fact any kind of fodder that is musty. Some believe that this mustiness will not pass through into the milk, and it may be so, but we are suspicious of the truth of the assertion. It is a fact that there is a difference in the flavor of butter made on June grass and the butter made in the winter when the cows are fed on dry hay. If this difference in feed makes any difference in flavor, why may it not make a good deal of difference if the feed be particularly bad. Moldy feed is a bad thing to have around in any case and should be thrown out. Using it as cow bedding is likely to make the matter worse, for the whole stable will be scented with it, and in the morning when the milk is drawn it will certainly be tainted and this taint will grow as the cream ripens. It is not advisable to use this for bedding and depend on airing the barn enough in the morning to get the smell out. This would be seldom done at all, and where done it would generally be done in a very imperfect manner. The presence of spoiled feed is very often the cause of poor butter.

* * *

Whether or not Americans will ever be able to build up a trade in London depends on whether they can so improve the great mass of butter produced that it will grade mainly as first quality. At present the amount of really good butter is said to be not more than 25 per cent of the whole, and this 25 per cent brings a premium in the American market. If all our product were of good quality, the best prices in this country would be much less than at the present time, but the rest of the butter would bring a very much higher price than at present. This, of course, is based on the supposition that conditions remain as at present. American butter might then enter the English market in competition with Danish.

* * *

Man wants frequent change of food, but not so our cows. They do best when fed the same ration constantly. The digestive system of the cow seems to adjust itself to a certain feed and to be unable to change readily. Thus, if silage be fed for a long time, a change to dry hay or corn fodder means a sudden falling off in the milk flow, and this flow cannot be restored by a return to the first ration. The plan, therefore, of putting half of the corn fodder into the silo and drying the other half has no advantage in it; and it is a positive detriment if the two kinds of feed are to be alternated. If the silo is large enough, it will pay better to ensilage the entire fodder crop than to dry half of it.

Hardiness in Poultry.

To The Farmers' Review: I desire to call the attention of farmers and farmers' wives to a few facts of considerable importance. It is without question true that, in all branches of stock industry, good blood is the key to success. In fact, in all business, whether mercantile or industrial, the best goods make permanent success. This is true also in poultry culture. Common hens, like cheap labor, are not to be depended on. The object of the poultry raiser is eggs and meat. To produce the former we have the Leghorns, Minorcas, Spanish, Hamburgs, and the like. For meat we have, if our aim be for roasting, superior qualities in the Plymouth Rocks, Brahmas, Cochins; and for broilers no better breed than the Wyandotte can be secured. Now, if we properly raise, house and feed these breeds, no cross-bred fowl can equal them. We have come to this conclusion after years of experimenting with both cross-bred birds and with pure-bred ones.

But some say, "when we use pure bloods, we have a great deal of sickness in our flocks, while our mongrels are always hardy." It is a pity that too often such is the case. What is the cause? I believe it to be due to inbreeding. In-breeding is injurious to the fowls the farmer wants to use. It may produce fancy specimens, but often they are physical wrecks. Why not keep our pure-bred fowls pure without breeding all the stamina out of them? Why not make each successive generation hardier than the preceding one? Can this be done and how? It can be done by out-crossing, or changing the males. This would be called detrimental to standard breeding, but it is good common sense in practical culture. Out-crossing can be resorted to with unprofitable poultry, if the next year males of the same breed be again used.

The farmer has reached the stage when, if he cannot secure strong, hardy thoroughbreds, he resorts to cross-breeding. When they once get to crossing they get careless and cross males of the cross on females of the same family. It does not take long for this process to convert really good fowls into mongrels. Mongrels, dunghill or barnyard fowls are the result of hap-hazard breeding for generations. At length it becomes a matter of indifference to the owner as to their ancestry. What we need most of all is to bring only thoroughbreds up to the highest type of hardiness and utility. Then the farmer should use only pure-bred fowls.

I wish to touch on another question: Does it pay farmers to buy eggs for setting at a cost of $1 to $1.50 per 15? Yes. We will suppose that out of the 15 the farmer gets but seven chicks, three males and four females. The males themselves are worth twice the cost of the eggs and the pullets will be extra.

EDWIN BURROUGHS.

Stable Hints.

Here are some "stable hints" that are good enough to be offered to horse owners generally:

Give your stable a thorough cleaning occasionally. It will more than repay you in way of appearance, and be beneficial in a sanitary way.

Give your stable plenty of air and light.

Always water your horse before feeding. You can teach him to drink then by not offering water after feeding, thereby avoiding possible colic.

Don't water or feed when hot.

Give your horse grain in a large surfaced feed box, or use an iron one with an irregular surface (half ball), molded in; he will not fill his mouth so full, chewing his food better.

Feed your horse as near the ground as possible; when eating low down more saliva becomes mixed with the food, aiding digestion.

Have your stable stalls as nearly on a level as possible.

Use a little lime occasionally in your stalls and barn yard. Lime is a great purifier.

Don't speak to your horse louder than you would to your sweetheart, and don't allow profanity used around him—a horse with brains don't like to be talked to like a prize fighter.

Have regular hours for feeding your horse, and give him sufficient time to eat.

Don't strike your horse with a fork handle, or strike him over the head; if he needs punishing use a small whip—everyday clubbing or striking does no good. Make him respect you and the whip, and have him fear nothing else.

Use your horse kindly, but do not pet him—it makes him too familiar. Pet horses are like pet people—no good.

Feed your horse clean food; if your oats are dusty clean them, and don't feed hay full of dust or dirt.

Don't tie your horse too low down or too long, just so he can have the use of his head to lie down.

Change your horse's feed occasionally; it will make him feel good. Give him bran, roots, etc. (small quantities of roots at first until accustomed to them). How would you like to be fed day in and day out on one kind of food?

Don't allow your horse to stand in manure or wet places. This is what causes thrush, and the ammonia arising in such places affects the eyes, etc., and coming in contact with the carriages and harness destroys varnish and weakens leather.

Keep your horse feeling good by proper food and care and he will more than repay you for the little extra time you give him.

Keep your horse well groomed, as a well-kept animal not only appears better but keeps easier and feels better (like a man after a bath) than one neglected.

Keep a little salt where your horse can get it at his pleasure, not throwing it in his feed. How do you like your food over salted?

Keep your horse's mane and tail well cleaned and wash his tail and dock occasionally in a pail of water. It will greatly stimulate it and grow a flowing tail.

Michigan Dairy Inspection.

Here are three characteristic reports of the Michigan dairy inspectors:

F. A. Johns—Condition of cows, fairly good, but not very clean; feed, corn stalks, oat straw, hay, bran and middlings; stables, neat and clean; partly whitewashed, uses lime on floor; yard, wet and dirty; drainage, fair; ventilation, good; water, well; milkroom, neat and clean; uses an aerator.

L. L. Whipple—Condition of cows, good and clean; feed, cut stalks, hay and bran; stables, neat and clean; whitewashed; drainage from stables, poor; yard, fairly dry and clean; manure deep in front of stable door; ventilation, good; water, well; milkroom, neat and clean; cement floor in milkroom; uses an aerator.

O. S. Bancroft—Condition of cows, good and clean; feed, corn stalks, mixed hay and ground corn and oats; stables, clean and neat, but some cob webs on ceiling; partly whitewashed; yard, fairly clean and dry; drainage fair; ventilation, good; water, well; milkroom, neat and clean.

The adoption of a similar system wherever cows are kept would do much to improve our dairy products.

The time is coming when Americans will appreciate the hen and give her the amount of attention due her. It is surprising that on some of our farms the flock of hens does not exceed 25. These are easy to take care of, it is true, but the flocks should be much larger and still be taken care of. There is no better investment on the farm than that in the poultry establishment. With the increase of population the demand for poultry products is bound to increase, and this increased demand must be largely met by the American farmer rather than by the specialist in poultry raising.

On every warm day in winter, when the dropping have thawed enough to be loose from the floor, the hen house should be cleaned out to make it possible to have a house free from gases. The tendency is in the winter to let the house alone too long. This results in lessened vitality to the fowls, and it is difficult to understand how some houses are habitable at all.

Wireless Telegraphy

Has had a new demonstration of usefulness by the captain of a lightship, who used it after ordinary signals had failed to notify the shore authorities of danger. In a like manner Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the famous indigestion and dyspepsia cure, acts when other medicines fail. It regulates the bowels and improves the appetite.

Spring Humors of the Blood

Come to a certain percentage of all the people. Probably 75 per cent. of these people are cured every year by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and we hope by this advertisement to get the other 25 per cent. to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. It has made more people well, effected more wonderful cures than any other medicine in the world. Its strength as a blood purifier is demonstrated by its marvelous cures of

Scrofula
Scald Head
All kinds of Humor
Blood Poisoning
Catarrh
Salt Rheum
Boils, Pimples
Psoriasis
Rheumatism
Malaria, Etc.

All of which are prevalent at this season. You need Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will do you wonderful good.

Born Sharp.

A grocer living in a small town in Surrey one morning put a card in his window to the effect that he wanted a sharp boy for the counter. A few hours afterward a smart lad walked into the shop and asked for the job.

"Yes," replied the grocer, "if you are a nice, sharp lad, I think you will suit me."

Boy—I am very sharp, sir. My friends tell me I was born sharp.

Grocer—Ah, how was that?

Boy—Well, sir, I was born the last month in the year, the last day in the month, the last hour in the day, the last minute in the hour, the last second in the minute, and father says if I hadn't been blooming sharp I shouldn't have been born at all.

Grocer—You will do nicely.

The lad was engaged at once.—Answers.

"Oh! How Happy I Am."

"HOW HAPPY I AM to be able to say that I am free from pain after five years of severe suffering from neuralgia," writes Mrs. Archie Young, 1317 Oaks avenue, West Superior, Wis. "I am so thankful to be able to say that your '5 Drops' is the best medicine I ever got in my life. When I received it from you last November, I used some of it right away. The first dose helped me. It is impossible to explain how I was suffering from neuralgia, I thought no one could get worse and that death would soon come. I was very weak, and I hardly thought I could live to see my husband come back from his daily labor. Now I can say that I am free from pain, my cheeks are red, my appetite is good and I sleep well all night. Many of my friends are surprised, and say they will send for some '5 Drops.'" Sample bottles of this wonderful remedy 25c, large bottles, containing 300 doses, $1.00. For information write Swanson Rheumatic Cure Co., 164 E. Lake street, Chicago.

An Educational Programme.

"Is your boy's education nearly complete?" asked a friend.

"Yes," answered the man who is nothing if not sarcastic. "He knows the classics and the higher mathematics and logic and philosophy pretty thoroughly. GOOD NIGHT!

Sweet Soothing Slumber Man's Greatest Blessing.

Nothing Kills so Quickly as Loss of Sleep — Rest Needed for Repairs. How to Obtain it Without Fail.

When you don't sleep well, look out for yourself.

Nothing breaks down a person so quickly as loss of sleep, that boon of mankind which gives the exhausted system rest for repairs.

No time for repairs means destruction of the machinery. It is so with the human body.

You are nervous, have a load on your chest, are troubled with unaccountable anxiety and forebodings of evil, and roll and toss all night.

Towards morning you have fitful naps from sheer exhaustion, awake in a cold sweat, unrefreshed, pallid, trembling, with a bad taste in your mouth and a feeling of great weakness.

It's your stomach, your liver, your bowels.

Keep your digestive organs all on the move properly and your sleep will be restful and refreshing and all repairs will be attended to.

The way to do it is to use a mild, positive, harmless, vegetable laxative and liver stimulant—Cascarets Candy Cathartic. They make the liver lively, prevent sour stomach, purify the blood, regulate the bowels perfectly, make all things right as they should be.

Go buy and try Cascarets to-day. It's what they do, not what we say they'll do, that will please you. All druggists, 10c, 25c, or 50c, or mailed for price. Send for booklet and free sample. Address, Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago; Montreal, Can.; or New York.

HE LIKES WESTERN CANADA.

Duhamel, Jan. 24, 1900.

Dear Sir and Friend—We had a lucky trip, made good connections and got to Wetaskiwin Monday afternoon; stayed there all night, bought a pony and saddle for the boy and hired a three-seated rig for the balance of us, and got home to dinner next day; caught the boys cleaning up and getting ready to come after us. Wednesday the snow was all gone and we had bare ground and bright sunshine for a month, and it has been pleasant weather ever since. The ground is frozen about two feet and about six inches of snow—just enough for good sleighing. We had one cold spell in December. The thermometer went down to 32 below zero, but we did not suffer with the cold at all. We have worked every day all winter, are all well and feeling well; have built a log house 18x18, two log stables 16x18, and are now busy on a well. We have 10 cows, three other cattle and six head of horses. The boys send their best respects to Mr. Huchison, and say they will talk to him enough to pay for not writing when he gets up here; will write you again next spring and tell you all about the winter. We all unite in sending you and family our best wishes and respects and hope this will find you all well.

Yours very respectfully,

(Signed) THOMAS TATE.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Letters from Two Who Now Have Children.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—It was my ardent desire to have a child. I had been married three years and was childless, so wrote to you to find out the reason. After following your kind advice and taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I became the mother of a beautiful baby boy, the joy of our home. He is a fat, healthy baby, thanks to your medicine."—MRS. MINDA FINKLE, Roscoe, N. Y.

From Grateful Mrs. Lane

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I wrote you a letter some time ago, stating my case to you.

"I had pains through my bowels, headache, and backache, felt tired and sleepy all the time, was troubled with the whites. I followed your advice, took your Vegetable Compound, and it did me lots of good. I now have a baby girl. I certainly believe I would have miscarried had it not been for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I had a very easy time; was sick only a short time. I think your medicine is a godsend to women in the condition in which I was. I recommend it to all as the best medicine for women."—MRS. MARY LANE, Coytee, Tenn.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS

NOT SO FREQUENT IN RECENT YEARS.

Travel on American Trains Safer Now Than Ever Before — Work of Guarding Against Accidents Is Being Diligently Followed Up.

There are 50,000 flagmen, switchmen and line watchmen employed on the railroads of the United States, and the duties which devolve upon them relate primarily to the security of passing trains. The use by them of lanterns at night and flags by day, while desirable in a small way as a measure of protection, especially at crossings, is by no means so important as the signal lights which are displayed from towers and which are regulated by telegraphic communication maintained along the line of track. Under the signal rules adopted by the American railroad association, the application of which is general not only throughout the United States, but in Mexico and Canada as well, a red light whenever displayed signifies danger and calls for a stop; a green light cautions and commands "go slowly;" white indicates safety and commands "Go ahead." A blue flag by day and a blue light by night displayed at one or both ends of an engine, car or train signifies that workmen are engaged on or about it. When thus protected it must not be disturbed. One effect of the more general use of uniform signals has been the steady reduction of the number of fatalities on American railroads, the total number of which is now considerably less than it was ten years ago, though in the meantime railroad travel has increased enormously. The total number of passengers carried on American railroads in a year is not far from 600,000,000, and the number of fatalities to passengers average less than 250, or less than one two-thousandth of 1 per cent. While the number of passengers carried is increasing, the number of accidents is diminishing in consequence of the fact that while some railroad accidents appear to be absolutely unavoidable, serious accidents entailing the wreckage of trains and wholesale disasters are very much less frequent than formerly. The adoption and maintenance of a complete system of railroad signals entails a considerable expense upon railroad companies, but it is much more than made up by the advantages attained, which include greater security in travel, a high rate of speed for passenger trains, a much diminished danger of track obstruction and a practical diminution in the number and success of suits brought for damages. The work of making travel safe on American railroads is going ahead even faster than is the work of railroad building, actively resumed since 1897.—New York Sun.

The First Coaches in London.

Riding was the only alternative to walking at the beginning of Elizabeth's reign; and a lady never rode without six or seven serving men to carry attire suitable to all contingencies, and the means to repair a toilet which might suffer on the journey. To diminish this cost coaches came into use. They were introduced in 1564 by a Dutch coachman of the Queen, but we are told "a coach was a strange monster in those days," and the sight of it put both man and horse into amazement; some said it [illegible] shell brought out of [illegible] imagined it to be one [illegible] ples in which the can[illegible] the devil. But at [illegible] ubts were cleared and [illegible] ecame a substantial trade. So rapid was the increase of coaches that in 1601 an act of parliament was passed "to restrain the excessive and superfluous use of coaches within this realm." In spite of this innovation, no method could be devised which made locomotion pleasant through streets which were alternately torrents of dirt finding their way to the Fleet ditch, and thick deposits of black mud, which furnished a ready weapon to any one who wished to express disapprobation. It is difficult for us to picture London without either cabs or omnibuses.—Cornhill Magazine.

No Smoking in Abyssinia.

Three travelers, one of whom is an American, were in Abyssinia recently. One afternoon after their midday coffee they lit cigars. Hardly had they done so when an official who was passing informed them through an interpreter that smoking was prohibited in that country, and that it would be well for them not to indulge in the practice in public. The travelers took the hint. The use of tobacco, they learned afterward had been prohibited in Abyssinia since the year 1642. At that time priests were in the habit of smoking in churches, and the main object of the law then passed was to stop this practice. After a few years, however, the law was made applicable to all classes of the people, and today strangers in Abyssinia are politely informed that if they want to smoke they must go where none of the natives can see them or can smell the seductive weed.

Printed the Wrong Portrait.

After Hon. Foster M. Voorhees was elected governor of New Jersey the usual portraits of him were published in the newspapers. They made an interesting variety. In one instance an enterprising journal drew upon its cabinet and used a cut of the president of a small western university, showing a young man with the hair carefully parted and curled, and with eye-glasses that stood prominently in the picture. He looked about 20 years of age and the face was smooth and smiling. The governor had a good laugh over this particular picture as well as over some of the other interesting variations of his countenance. He is not an old man by any means, being only 43, but he has the look of a serious student and man of affairs. His home is in Elizabeth, N. J.

ANIMALS AFRAID OF GHOSTS.

Many Members of the Brute Creation Fear the Supernatural.

There is a widespread belief in south Germany, in Ireland, in Scotland, and I know not how many countries, that horses and dogs have "an instinct" for uncanny realities. In Germany the popular notion is that no horse will pass by the place where the body of a suicide lies, or even by the spot where someone has committed suicide, or where an execution has taken place. This is something different from the repugnance that all horses have to the neighborhood of a slaughter-house. Only two days ago a Tyrolese horse of very docile disposition, driven carefully by his Italian owner, was greatly upset at having to pass two widely separated government shambles, used for supplying meats to the crews of Italian warships. He was also greatly disgusted at having to go near a scavenger's cart. His protests, however, were mild compared with the behavior of horses under "uncanny" influences. The Moro's owner said: "A horse has a keener nose than any dog," and he talked soothingly to him; "didn't know why that dirt cart was always in the same place," "well-welled" him and told him "the slaughter-house was fifty yards off his road," and so forth. In "haunted" quarters, on the other hand, the horse refuses with determination; he trembles, snorts, is covered from head to heels, in time, with a white foam, his eyes roll and shoot fire and the end is sometimes a bad accident, sometimes a hard-fought victory for the driver, sometimes his ignominious defeat. I could name Irish cross roads past which almost every horse in the county refused to go quietly after dark. The last purchase from, maybe, the other end of the island might be taken to the spot without any (possibly indoctrinated) equine companion to frighten him, but he unfailingly "turned rusty" as soon as he tried the unhallowed ground. The local explanations were various; that the land on one side was "cursed," that formerly criminals were executed and then buried at many cross roads, and possibly here, and that the fir trees and a castellated lodge in one angle of the intersecting ways made the spot terribly dark, and so on.—London News.

PROFITING BY A PEST.

Australia Sells For Food the Rabbits She Cannot Exterminate.

Everybody has heard of the extraordinary ravages of the European rabbits that were introduced into Australia years ago. The animals were imported so that the British subjects who had removed to the antipodes might enjoy the sport of rabit hunting. They had more sport than they bargained for and the whole country regrets the days the little animal was introduced to Australian scenes. There are many millions of them now and the little nibblers eat the grass, destroy fields, orchards and gardens and are the great nuisance of the country. The rewards offered by the various colonies for some sure way of destroying the pest would make the fortune of the man who should discover the process. Today, however, the Australians appear to be a little more resigned under the infliction. The idea occurred to them, a while ago, that they might utilize the animal on a large scale as a commercial commodity. So they set to work to kill rabbits by the thousands, can the meat and send it to Europe in cold storage. Australian canned rabbit sells at a cheap price in the British markets and is beginning to be largely consumed by those who cannot afford very often to indulge in prime beef. Australia has found a new industry and who knows but some day, the rabbit may come to be regarded as one of the great resources of the continent?—New York Sun.

Hard on the Doorkeeper.

On the opening day of the session of the fifty-sixth congress, a tall, gaunt man, shambling of gait, with "high-water" trousers, a slouched hat mashed in any old way, and overcoat that needed brushing, presented himself at the center door of the house of representatives. He started to walk right in, but was stopped by one of the doorkeepers, who said to him, testily: "Say, don't you know you can't go in here?" "No, I didn't know it, my friend; I thought I could," he said, mildly. "Nobody but members allowed in today." "Well, I'm a member; Congressman Cushman of Washington." "Oh! I beg your pardon; walk right in." As Mr. Cushman strode into the hall the astonished doorkeeper looked after him for a moment, and then, turning to his assistant on the door, said: "Say, Bill, did you see that? Well, after that I ain't got the nerve to stop anything."—Criterion.

Law-Abiding Border Town.

The town of McAlester, in the Indian territory, has a population of more than 7,000, all of them squatters who hope that eventually the federal government will ratify their title to the property of which they have taken possession. They have no mayor, no town marshal, no aldermen, no police. There never was a survey of the ground made for town purposes. Yet they have built up fine residences, for a frontier settlement; the fairly regular streets; the people lead moral lives and are law-abiding in spirit, though there are no particular laws for them to abide by.

A Poor Fireman.

Mrs. A. told her new man-servant—a colored youth from the country—to make a fire in the drawing room. Coming in soon after, she found him hopelessly contemplating the andirons, tongs, and so forth, while a pile of logs by his side large enough to warm a regiment. "Have you never made a fire before, William?" she asked, somewhat sharply. "Well, ma'am, I ain't never made what yo' call a refined fire—no ma'am," was the puzzled reply.—Harper's Bazar.

HOSPITABLE CANNIBALS.

Kind to White Strangers, Though They Occasionally Eat a Black Man.

Rev. Dr. R. H. Nassau expects to return in the spring to his field of missionary work in equatorial Africa. This is Dr. Nassau's fourth visit to the United States since, as a young man, he was sent to Africa as a missionary 39 years ago. During the last five years he has been stationed at Liberville, Gaboon province (French), engaged in translating 14 books of the Bible into the Fang language. These translations are being printed by the American Bible society. The Fangs are a tribe of cannibals, numbering about 1,000,000, and inhabiting the country lying far up the Ogove river. They are large of stature, warlike, and represent much the strongest tribe in that portion of the country. Dr. Nassau said before leaving Baltimore that he could not call the natives that he meets in Africa savages; they are cruel, he said, but not bloodthirsty; their desire to kill is more for superstitious reasons. There are cannibals, he said, among them. He has seen them boiling human arms for food and offering for sale with other meats human hands; "and one day," continued the doctor, "while floating down the river in a canoe, accompanied by my little girl and two natives to row the boat, we were called to from a group of naked men standing on the shore to know if we wished to buy any meat, and, holding up a human arm, they informed us in their language that they had just killed two men belonging to a hostile tribe not far from there. This was about thirty miles below my house." The only means of transportation through that portion of the country, Dr. Nassau said, is by boat. Trade is carried on without money, a cake of soap or a piece of calico or beads being all that is necessary. "The men there are polygamists, their importance in the community being estimated according to the number of wives," said the doctor. They are kind to their mothers, but abuse their wives. Our mission has succeeded in bringing about 1,800 of them into the Presbyterian church. If before coming Christians they had married more than one wife we require them to set all free (all their wives are slaves, bought and sold) but one—the one they might prefer. The African is very hospitable. No medicine ever gave me more benefit than the Christian kindness of these heathen friends of our little mission. They have a religion—they are more religious than you or I. They feel honored to receive us as their 'official' guests, and so we can depend upon their protection."

ANTI-TREATERS.

They Organize in Baltimore, Md., and Propose to Save Lots of Money.

The latest movement of the anti-treaters has its headquarters in Baltimore, Md., where an anti-treat circle, with a president, officers and twenty-eight members has been formed. Its object is, of course, to break up treating. The members meet at their hall once a week, but no one ever dares to say, "Have one on me," for if he should he would be penalized with a fine of 25 cents for each treat. Some of the reason which led to the formation of this circle may be gained from this lucid statement from one of the members, who draws a picture whose fidelity to truth will be recognized from Maine to Manila: "You and I go into a saloon with the intention of having one drink—perhaps two. We meet eight or ten friends who insist upon our joining them. We do so. Then you and I reciprocate. Finally every man in the crowd insists on everybody else having 'one with him.' The consequence is that each man takes eight or ten drinks of whisky or beer, and after the bout is over there is not one but who would have preferred a halt at the first drink. This custom, repeated several times a day, year in and year out, will ruin a man physically and financially."

Too Dead Turkeys.

A produce dealer who deals in both live and dressed poultry, says the Albany Argus, sent to the consignee of his dressed poultry a letter intended for the shipper of the live turkeys, as follows: "Dear Sir: We regret to advise you that four of the turkeys in your consignment of December — reached here dead. Please make deduction for same and return corrected account. Yours truly." The poultry man communed with himself and replied thusly: "Dear Sir: I am sorry to say that I find it impossible to make concession requested. I have established a rule requiring all customers who desire live dressed turkeys to notify us in advance, so we can send them in heated cars. Turkeys without their feathers and insides are liable to catch cold if shipped in the ordinary manner. The mortality among dressed turkeys was very large this year. Yours mournfully."

A Cautious Prophet.

Weather bureaus are seldom safe from public criticism, for mistakes are sure to occur; but we must give these modern prophets credit for an outspokenness which their forbears were too shrewd to risk. Mr. Samuel Clough, who edited the New England Almanac at the very beginning of the last century, was a good example of a prophet who intends to make no mistakes. "Perhaps," says he, predicting the weather from January 15th to the 23d, 1702, "it will be very cold weather, if it frese by the fireside or on the sunny side of a fence at noon." In April he hazards: "Perhaps wet weather, if it rains. Now, fair weather, if the sun shines. Windy or calm." And in July he ventures a small advertisement for the town of his residence:

"If now the weather do prove fair,
People to Cambridge do repair."

CONGRESS

RESUME OF THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Senate.

Washington, March 20.—Two measures of national importance and many of slightly lesser interest were passed by the senate yesterday. The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, carrying more than $25,000,000, was passed without debate. The measure providing for the appointment of a commission to adjudicate and settle claims of the people of the United States growing out of the war with Spain was also passed without opposition.

For a brief time the Porto Rican government and tariff measure was under consideration. Mr. Foraker, in charge of the bill, submitted some committee amendments. A few of them were agreed to, but the important ones are still pending. A free trade amendment to the bill was offered by Senator Beveridge.

The House.

The house to-day refused to concur in the senate amendments to the Porto Rican relief bill. The Democrats supported a motion to concur on the ground that it would avoid further delay in extending to the inhabitants of the island, but the Republicans stood firmly behind Chairman Cannon in his demand that the house should insist upon its original provisions to appropriate not only the money collected on Porto Rican goods up to Jan. 1, but all subsequent moneys collected or about to be collected.

The remainder of the day was devoted to the District of Columbia business.

The House.

Washington, March 21. — The house yesterday entered upon the consideration of the Loud bill to restrict the character of publications entitled to pound rates as second-class mail matter. The bill has been before congress for several years. Mr. Loud defended the bill in a long speech. The other speakers were H. C. Smith of Michigan, in favor of the bill, and Messrs. Little of Arkansas, Bell of Colorado, Henry of Mississippi, Stokes of South Carolina and Mr. Brown of Ohio, in opposition to it. Before the bill was taken up Mr. Sulzer of New York delivered a denunciation of the administration in connection with his resolution of inquiry calling upon the war department for information as to what fortifications Great Britain was erecting on the Canadian border. The committee on military affairs submitted a reply of Adjt. Gen. Corbin, saying such information was secret, but that Great Britain was erecting no works which threatened our rights. The committee recommended laying the resolution upon the table. The house sustained the committee's recommendation by a vote of 110 to 97.

The Senate.

Discussion of the Porto Rico government and tariff bill was resumed in the senate yesterday, Mr. Morgan of Alabama presenting a speech dealing with some of the constitutional phases of the matter. He maintained that as the treaty of Paris was the supreme law of the land, it was impossible for the United States to abandon either Porto Rico or the Philippines. He held also that the constitution extended to a certain extent at least over the acquired territory, and that the inhabitants of Porto Rico were citizens of the United States.

Washington, March 22. — During the debate in the house yesterday upon the Loud bill relating to second-class mail matter there was a sharp exchange between Mr. McPherson of Iowa and Mr. Lentz of Ohio over a charge made by the former that the latter was the attorney of the lobby which is fighting the bill, otherwise the debate was without incident. Both the friends and opponents of the measure express the belief that the vote will be close. Mr. Loud has agreed to accept two amendments, one to increase the number of sample copies which newspapers can send out at second-class rates from 500 to 2,000, and the other to limit the provision requiring newspapers to separate their mail in addition to those already in existence to over 5,000 circulation. These are all the concessions he will make. He says the debate has strengthened the bill and he believes it will pass. The speakers yesterday were Mr. Bromwell of Ohio, Griggs of Georgia, McPherson of Iowa, Burke of Texas, Bingham of Pennsylvania, Heatwole of Minnesota and Latimer of South Carolina, in favor of the bill, and Messrs. Moon of Tennessee, Lentz of Ohio, Vandiver of Missouri, Snodgrass of Tennessee, Cochren of Missouri and Neville of Nebraska, against the measure.

The Senate.

Upon the authority of the governor of Alaska Mr. Turner of Washington made the statement in the senate yesterday that concessions for gold mining in the bed of the sea near Cape Nome, Alaska, had been granted by the secretary of war, and upon that statement he based a resolution of inquiry. Senator Turner said if such a grant had been made it was "a shame, a reproach and a scandal." The resolution was agreed to. In a few minutes, and without discussion, the additional urgent deficiency bill was passed with one or two other measures of importance. Mr. Allison gave notice that he would call up to-day the conference report on the Porto Rican appropriation bill.

The Senate.

Washington, March 23.—Almost the entire session of the senate yesterday was spent in the discussion of the conference yeport upon the Porto Rico appropriato npropratlonshrd shrd cmmm propriation bill. The Democratic senators manifested a disposition to criticise the restoration of the house provision covering future collections of revenue, professing to find in this action the desire to continue the Dingley tariff.S e heepesew ley tariff. Speeches were made on these lines by Messrs. Bacon, Cockrell, Jones (Ark.), Berry and Allen. The Republicans met the taunt with a proposition to take a vote immediately upon the house Porto Rico tariff bill, and it looked at one time as if the unanimous consent would be secured for a vote on the tariff measure to-day. Senator Proctor objected, however, on behalf of the Republican free traders, and when he indicated a willingness to agree to a vote next week Senator Pettus put an end to the proceeding by calling for the regular order of business.

The House.

After a spirited debate lasting over three days the Loud bill relating to second-class mail matter was recommitted to the committee on postoffices. The majority in favor of the motion was so decisive that it is regarded as unlikely that the measure will appear again during the present congress. Mr. Loud said, after the vote was announced, that this was the third time and out, so far as he was concerned. The vote on the motion was 148 to 96, with sixteen present and not voting.

Washington, March 24.—The senate yesterday adopted the conference report on the Porto Rican relief bill by a vote of 35 to 15, practically a strict party expression. No Democrat voted for the report, but Mr. Stewart of Nevada voted with the Republicans. The time of discussion was consumed principally by Mr. Tillman of South Carolina, who made a fierce attack upon the measure agreed upon in conference and accused the Republican senators and the Republican party of hypocricy and dirty work. His speech was quite characteristic and was listened to with interest by his colleagues on the floor and the people in the galleries. Mr. Gallinger of New Hampshire followed with a temperate statement of those who not only favor the report but the passage of a Porto Rican tariff bill. Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin closed the debate with a forceful statement in opposition to Mr. Tillman's speech, in the course of which he took occasion to sharply criticise the South Carolina senator for dragging the measure into politics. His coloquial tilts with Mr. Tillman were immensely enjoyed by the auditors.

The House.

The house passed 142 private pension bills. Late in the day Mr. Talbert of South Carolina raised the point of no quorum. The attendance was small at the time but a quorum was finally secured, however, after a call of the house. The conference report on the Porto Rican relief bill was presented and 1 o'clock to-day was set as the time for voting on it.

Washington, March 26. — The Porto Rican appropriation bill was signed by the president at 4:20 Saturday afternoon. Controller Dawes was the only person present when the president attached his signature.

The House.

Washington, March 26. — After a spirited debate the house Saturday took the last congressional step in completing the Porto Rico relief bill, agreeing to the conference report by a vote of 135 to 87. The bill turns over to the president for the use of Porto Rico, about $2,000,000 of customs receipts collected on Porto Rico goods up to Jan. 1 last, and such amounts as may hereafter accrue unless otherwise provided by law. The debate lasted but an hour, but in this time the whole range of Porto Rico legislation was discussed.

An important bill, passed during the day, appropriates $10,000 for designs for a suitable memorial in Washington to Ulysses S. Grant, this being the first step in a movement to secure an arch similar to the arch of triumph in Paris commemorating the illustrious soldier-statesman.

A resolution was passed asking the secretary of state for information on the "open door" negotiations concerning China.

News of the Northwest

MANY CEDAR TIES SEIZED.

Forty Thousand Found by Agents of the State Auditor's Department.

Duluth, Minn., March 25.—The biggest haul ever made by the state against railroad tie cutting trespassers has just been made in Cook county. R. F. McClellan and S. F. Fullerton, of the state auditor's department, have just returned from that section, and it is learned that they have seized in the neighborhood of 40,000 cedar ties which were cut on school lands there. The state has seized a good many ties in the aggregate in other parts of the state, but they were mostly in small lots of a few hundred here and there. To get 40,000 ties in a single county is quite extraordinary. It is learned that in most cases in Cook county the tiecutters had completed their work and had abandoned the camps. The ties were traced from the lands in some cases by the roads, which were yet intact, and in other cases the ties were piled on the land where they were cut.

WANTED IN WINNIPEG.

Young Woman Accused of Illegal Financial Operations.

Minneapolis, March 24.—Miss Alice Kline, living with her mother at 110 First street north, was arrested yesterday by the Minneapolis police at the instance of W. J. Leach, a Winnipeg detective. It is charged that she has been operating in the Canadian city for some time and that she has passed a number of raised bills. The plan was to cut the figures "10" from a revenue stamp and paste them over the denomination mark of a one-dollar Canadian bill. The woman declined to make any statement and will resist extradition.

MAY COMPROMISE.

Roads Will Prepare a New Schedule of Rates.

St. Paul, March 24.—The railroads of Minnesota have agreed with the railroad commissioners to submit a new schedule of grain rates which will be more acceptable, and which will grant the concessions demanded by the commissioners. Conferences have been held during the past few days with this view, and the commission has agreed to postpone action until the new schedules can be received and revised. The investigation of rates promised to open up the whole rate situation in Minnesota, and would certainly have been followed by a long legal battle.

PENROSE AFTER THE N. P.

Introduces a Bill to Investigate Its Organization and Local Status.

Washington, March 25. — Senator Penrose has introduced a bill authorizing the committee on Pacific railroads to investigate the organization of the Northern Pacific Railway company. The purport of this is to determine whether the new company can dispose of the lands originally granted the old company and whether the sale of bonds is legal. The bill provides that the sale of lands by or to the Northern Pacific Railroad company be declared illegal.

Expects to Be Out of Hospital in About Two Weeks.

Duluth, Minn., March 25. — Charles A. Towne, chairman of the Silver Republican national committee, underwent a painful but not dangerous operation at St. Luke's hospital, in this city two days ago. He is now doing very well, and will be out in about two weeks.

TWO KILLED IN A RUNAWAY.

Farmer and His Daughter Killed at Dickinson, N. D.

Dickinson, N. D., March 25.—Michael Kessela, a thrifty German farmer, in attempting to stop his team, was trodden to death. The team dashed away with a thirteen-year-old daughter in the wagon, and she was also killed.

Chief of the Winnebagoes.

Black River Falls, Wis., March 25.—Tom Thunder, son of John Thunder, the big medicine man of the Winnebago tribe of Wisconsin, has proclaimed himself chief of the tribe. Thunder says "White Buffalo," a Chicago Irishman, who was made chief by the will of the former leader, is only a show chief, while he is the simon pure chief of the tribe. He further states that he is willing to settle the question in accordance with tribe customs, and an appeal to the tomahawk will be made.

Temple to Be Completed.

Deadwood, S. D., March 25.—It has now been settled that the Masons of this city will complete the temple in Deadwood, for which the foundations have already been laid. Architects have furnished plans and definite action will be taken at the regular meeting of the directors on March 31. The old foundation is 50x115, and the building is to be three stories high, made of stone.

Increased Gross Earnings.

St. Paul, March 24.—The complete returns of gross earnings of railroads in Minnesota show them to have been during the past year $49,807,805.01, an increase of $5,903,986.79 over the previous year. The taxes paid into the state treasury on the gross earnings amounts to $1,444,503.82, an increase of $183,232.05 over last year.

Sudden Fall in River.

Pierre, S. D., March 24. — The river here fell four feet in as many hours, leaving all the bars covered with cakes of ice and the Northwestern ferry boat, Jim Leighton, stranded. The sudden fall is supposed to indicate a gorge at some point up river.

DARING ACT OF CHIVALRY.

High School Boys Risk Their Lives to Please the Girls.

Sioux City, Iowa, March 27.—Three adventurous high school boys scaled the fire escape of the high school building, then crawled up the slippery slate roof and shinned up the iron flagpole, where, higher than the halyard pulleys, they wired fast the green and white flag of the Philomathian society—the girls' literary clubs, the Philomathian and Hesperian—which held their annual debate Saturday night. The green and white of the Philos and the pink and white of the Hesperians have been the cause of many a spirited contest, and the Philos are proudly triumphant. It was dare-devil work reaching the foot of the flagpole, but the climb still further toward the stars required iron nerves and iron muscles. The lads are heroes in the eyes of the Philomathians.

DEMOCRATS SPLIT IN ST. PAUL.

Opposing Factions Hold Two City Conventions at the Same Time.

St. Paul, Minn., March 27—The Democratic city convention met Saturday and two separate organizations were had, a chairman presiding at each end of the platform. Two tickets were placed in nomination, one headed by Postmaster Robert A. Smith and the other by ex-Judge John W. Willis. The differences are the result of a struggle to control the party organization.

Sentenced at Huron.

Huron, S. D., March 27. — The persons convicted at the recent term of circuit court here were on Friday given the following sentences: John Kelley and George Whiting, for grand larceny, received sentences of two years and one year in the penitentiary, respectively; P. McKay, for keeping a gambling house, goes to the county jail for sixty days; Merrill and Mary Cameron of Washington were fined $100 for selling intoxicating liquors without a license.

Students Judge Stock.

Fargo, N. D., March 27.—One of the interesting features of the close of the winter term of the North Dakota agricultural college was the stock judging contest between the students who had been in this department. There were three rings, milch cows, draft horses and beef cattle. John S. Cummings of Devils Lake won the gold medal for first honors and Thomas Henderson of Rolla the silver cup for second honors, with A. G. Dakin of Page, third.

Absorbed by the Trust.

Fond du Lac, Wis., March 27.—Representatives of the Northwestern Yeast Company of Chicago have closed a deal by which the largest independent yeast company of the United States, the Wafer company of this city, is absorbed by the trust, the purchase price representing a loss of 75 per cent to the stockholders. The Wafer company was capitalized for $50,000 and had been in existence for five years.

Set Fire to His Wife.

Cheyenne, Wyo., March 27.—Mr. and Mrs. Paul Flemrey, and aged couple residing at the corner of O'Nettle and Fifteenth streets, quarreled Saturday night and when the officers arrived Mrs. Flemrey's clothing was in flames and her husband was standing over her with a lighted candle. The woman had been horribly burned and is not expected to live. Flemrey was arrested.

Boy Injured by an Air Gun.

Winona, Minn., March 27. — By the accidental discharge of an air gun in the hands of John Hoffman the contents, a number of small shot, struck a companion named Kratz and passed entirely through his cheek, lodging in the jaw at the back of the mouth. Two teeth were knocked out and a cheek bone broken.

Pioneer Woman Dead.

Sturgis, S. D., March 27.—Mrs. C. L. Bradford, wife of a prominent business man of this city, died of consumption of the blood. She had been an invalid for about two years. She came to the Hills in an early day, and soon after married Mr. Bradford. She leaves a husband and one daughter.

Tid-Bits of News for Scandinavians.

GROWTH OF UNITY.

Scandinavians Urged to Foster the Spirit of Union.

A pleasing evidence of the growth of Scandinavian unity was shown at the dinner given by the Scandinavian Benevolent Society of London at the Cafe Monico. Hitherto there has been nothing sentimental about this organization, and it has only had a perfunctory organization in order to distribute aid with greater convenience and economy than with three separate organizations. This dinner was wholly different. The spirit of friendliness was much more cordial than in the past, and there was a noticeable absence of any trace of distrust or self-superiority.

One of the principal speakers was the Norwegian clergyman, Rev. Mr. Barman, who spoke for Scandinavian unity and urged the society to endeavor to make the organization a bond between the three nations and to foster the spirit of complete union in the mother countries.

About 150 Norwegians, Swedes and Danes were present, including Count Lewenhaupt, the Swedish-Norwegian minister, and Bille, the Danish minister, who presided at the dinner.

That much of the strife between Sweden and Norway in the past is now believed by the majority of the people to have been unnecessarily bitter, is very evident from a hundred indications, and the feeling of mutual respect and confidence appears to be growing rapidly. Some day the whole Scandinavian people will realize that strength lies in unity of purpose and action, and that their very existence depends on mutual co-operation.

CONSUL NELSON REPORTS.

Finds New Material for Lining All Kinds of Buildings.

Among the recent consular reports received by the state department is one from Victor E. Nelson, United States consul at Bergen, on new house lining materials in Norway. Consul Nelson writes as follows:

"There have been two recent inventions in Scandinavia of materials that are adaptable for various purposes, but more particularly for lining houses. The names of these materials are "Savareid Bygningspap" (Savareid building pasteboard) and "compo board." The first, a Norwegian invention, is made from a specially prepared paper, which, together with several layers of asphaltum, is compressed into a solid plate, thus forming a very serviceable and fine material suitable for covering walls, ceilings, etc. The material thus obtained is absolutely damp proof and does not conduct heat; therefore, it will keep any room lined with it warm and comfortable.

It serves to deaden noise and will keep away all kinds of vermin. Although a thick and solid substance, it is very pliable, and at the corners of a room can be either turned down or else bent to fit into the required angle without in any way destroying or injuring it. If used for paneling it makes a smooth, even surface, free from cracks or folds of any kind. It is odorless and will not rot, and, although just as strong as a wooden panel, it will be found to be cheaper even than thin boards.

Compo board is not new in America and needs no extended description.

Bjornson Receives Reinforcements.

Alexander Kjelland, who has written some of the cleverest books in the Norwegian language and whose talent is recognized by all, has written Bjornstjerne Bjornson a most grateful letter for his manly and vigorous defense of the recognized language of Norway. Ever since his boyhood he has been conscious-stricken because he could not heartily approve of the pleasant speech proposed by Ivar Aasen and his school as a substitute for the prevailing language of Norway, and he believed that his sympathies for the liberal party demanded that he should adopt the pleasant speech with enthusiasm. But he could not do it and it caused him much anxiety and doubt.

When, however, Bjornson threw himself into the fight with all his masterly energy to stem the tide of a revolution in the language, Kjelland realized that the movement which he in his heart abhorred, was impossible and unnecessary and it was no longer dangerous.

Fakirs at Work.

Skandinaven of Chicago believes that the negotiations for the sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States are all imaginary and scores the Danes who have been named in connection with the deal. It says:

"The enterprising people who proceeded to arrange a real estate deal between Denmark and Uncle Sam have quieted down of late. Their game has been exposed by the Danish press. The story that Denmark had sent certain fakirs as her secret agents to Washington to negotiate a sale of her possessions in the West Indies was so utterly absurd and ridiculous that no sane man would believe it. And yet this palpable hoax has been taken seriously by papers and people who ought to have known better."

The truth is now known in Denmark, and the matter is no longer regarded in a serious light. But the press is naturally indignant at this gang of unscrupulous fakirs who had the audacity to compromise the honor of the country by hawking its possessions about in the Washington market.

STARVING IN PORTO RICO.

Inhabitants Indignant at the Delay of Americans.

Ponce, Porto Rico, March 25.—The situation here is now more serious than it has been at any time since the terrible hurricane. In many places the poor are starving. The price of rice, beans and codfish has increased from 50 to 100 per cent. Demonstrations against the delay of the United States government in settling open questions have recently been held in Mayaguese, Yucao, Arecibo, Aguadilla, Fajardo, Juan Diaz, Guayama and many other towns. The people are unable to understand the delay and they condemn all Americans indiscriminately. Bad feeling is arising which it will take years to overcome. Even riots are threatened. Trouble is almost inevitable unless the tension is relieved. Even wealthy land owners cannot command ready cash, and many Americans are penniless, being glad to work for their board.

DEATH IN A WELL.

Child Drowned and the Mother Died From Exposure.

Rushville, Ill., March 25.—Mrs. Mark Sellers and her babe, fourteen months old, were found dead in a well near this city. The baby was drowned and the mother, who was but twenty years old, had died from exposure. They were in the well eight hours before recovered. The babe fell into the well and the mother went to the rescue. Once in the well she made a desperate struggle for life. The water was eighteen inches deep, and with the babe in her arms the mother attempted to scale the sides. Time and time again she was near the top when she fell back again. She removed her shoes and dress and tried again, only to fail. Bruised and bleeding. Her finger and toenails were worn away and her hands cut to the bone. Her husband was away from home all day and did not succeed in finding the bodies of his wife and child until late in the evening, when the neighbors went out to search for her.

DEFEATED BY MEXICANS.

Yaquis Put Up a Hard Fight but Are Compelled to Withdraw.

El Paso, Tex., March 25.—F. Saurez, a prominent ranchman of Sonoro, Mex., is in El Paso. He brought news of an engagement between the Indians and Mexican troops that occurred last Monday. The Indians have strong fortifications in the Bacatete mountains and the Mexican troops are encamped a few miles distant in the valley. Last Monday at daybreak the Indians made a sortie. They drove in the Mexican outposts and threatened to attack in force, but after a brisk firing that lasted for two hours the Indians withdrew. During the progress of the engagement the Mexicans swept the Yaqui position with their rapid-fire guns. The loss on either side was insignificant.

ERNE STILL CHAMPION.

He Wins From Joe Gans in the Twelfth Round.

New York, March 25.—Frank Erne of Buffalo successfully defended his title to the lightweight championship of the world against Joe Gans, colored, of Baltimore, before the Broadway Athletic club last night. Erne did most of the heavy fighting, displaying better judgment and more skill than his opponent. Gans received his punishment gamely until the twelfth round, when his left eye was started from the socket by a terrible blow from the Buffalo boy. Gans was helpless and there was no help for the referee but to award the decision to Erne.

TRAIN ROBBED BY ONE MAN.

Disguised by Paint, Goes Through Coach and Sleeper.

Kansas City, March 25.—The Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs passenger train was held up by a lone robber at Langdon station. The man, who was disguised by a thick coating of grease and black paint, boarded the train as it stood at Langdon station and went through the passenger coach and sleeper, securing about $500 and some valuables. He made no attempt to get into the express car, and left the train before it pulled out. The trainmen did not know that the robbery was in progress.

KILLED BY CANNIBALS.

Living Flesh Cut From Three Sailors and Roasted.

Vancouver, B. C., March 25. — The steamer Warimoo brings from Dutch Guinea the shocking account of the killing of its crew by cannibals who caught them while on shore taking photographs. Ernest Wigan, one of the party, was wounded by arrows, and while hiding, saw the barbarians tie his three companions to trees, cut off portions of their living flesh, and finally roast and devour them. The Dutch man of war Sumatra is reported as preparing to avenge the atrocities.

French Swells Arrested.

Paris, March 25.—The police raided an opium den frequented by fashionable society and Chinese. The place has been kept by a woman named Assim who, during the last exhibition sold Chinese goods. M. Rochefort, chief of the detective department, arrested eight ladies and gentlemen belonging to the best Paris society who he found there in a state of intoxication. Pipes, a quantity of opium and some Oriental furniture were seized.

Bank Robbers Confess.

El Paso, Tex., March 25. — Wilbur and Wilson, the two men who were arrested at San Antonio, charged with robbing the Las Cruces bank, have confessed their crime to the officers and implicated two well known citizens of that city who have been arrested and who are now under bond.

Bridge Swept Away.

St. Johns, N. F., March 25.—Ice floes in the Exploits river have swept away the railway bridge which cost $100,000. The express and mail trains on the way to this city have been unable to proceed. All have returned to Port Aux Basque.

Two-Year Strike Over.

Bridgeport, March 25.—The nail feeders gave up the strike at the Laughlin nail factory and the plant has resumed operations with 130 machines after an idleness of two years.

Statue of Maude Adams in Gold.

New York—The gold statue of "The American Girl," which is to be exhibited at the Paris exposition, was successfully cast. Miss Maude Adams, the actress, was the model, and Mrs. Bessie Potter Vonnah was the sculptor. The statue weighs 712 pounds, and the bullion used is valued at $187,000.

The Retail Grocers' Association of Duluth has taken action against Imperial flour, one of the products of the United States Flour Milling company. Imperial flour was formerly made in the Imperial mill at Duluth, but that mill, together with all other mills at the head of the lakes, has been closed by the combine. Of late, it is said, flour has been made in Minneapolis, branded Imperial, and sold in Duluth. The grocers held that it was prejudicial to the interests of Duluth workmen and decided not to handle any more of it until the Imperial mill is opened again.

EDUCATIONAL WORK

THE GREAT FACTOR IT WILL BE IN THE CAMPAIGN OF 1900.

Some Earnest Expressions on the Subject From Headquarters—Views of Chairman Johnson of the National Executive Committee—"Coin" Harvey's New Work of Great Power—The Good Work at Home. Other National Points—Encouragement From General Weaver—The Increasing Broad Spirit Among All the Allies—The State Round-Up—Twin City Political Harmony and Other Small Things—Political Note and Comment of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, April 2, 1900.

It is clear that aside from the help the Republicans are to give the reform forces by their blunders, inconsistencies and proven subserviency to monopoly, the great mainspring of action for this campaign is to be education. The people have but to have existing facts, touching the tendencies of the government in the backward direction from all that the fathers have taught us, added to their own experience of receiving no appreciable part in the enlarged trade and business of the country, (their less and less profits for toil and investment), to bring them to the side of right in November. The power of such education was found by the writer to be an uppermost topic with the working head of the national executive committee, Hon. J. G. Johnson, in a recent interview with that gentleman. He first spoke of the effect of the wide publicity of Mr. Bryan's great speeches, and the inestimable benefit the monopolistic press had conferred upon our cause, though with no intention of doing so. "The Republican metropolitan press outnumbers ours many times," said Mr. Johnson, "and not possessing that means, we must use books and pamphlets." In that connection Mr. Johnson commented upon and commended unstintingly, the new book of Hon. W. H. Harvey, which has been repeatedly referred to in these writings, and he especially requested that our press advise the people to buy and read Coin's new work, "Money, Trusts and Imperialism." Mr. Johnson explained that there was no money with which to purchase and circulate the book, but that the people must do this themselves. If they would do this, placing the book in the hands of the young especially, till its teachings are fastened on their minds, the republic would be saved. Failure to give attention to such instilling of principles, had lost the people political control in several states in the recent past.

Something further said by Mr. Johnson will be a great stimulus to many of our co-workers who have already gone ahead on their own hooks, at their own expense—that, of the people themselves—such as is being done by the Minneapolis anti-imperialists, by the Co-Operative Library schemes, and otherwise. That was this:

"The best policy in this fight for the people to save themselves from class laws is to encourage them to make their own fight. A self-relying people will make a strong fight, but people who wait for some one to give them literature are apt soon to fall under the influence of class legislation, fostering class laws, secured by those who buy the literature. The national committee's duty is to aid the people in the management of their campaign and to teach them to be self reliant."

Mr. Johnson reiterated again and again the great value of the Harvey book, and at the low price, 25 cents, it was within the reach of all. "Say to your readers," he said in conclusion, "that this is their cause, and that I want them to see to it that a thorough campaign of education is made. Things are tending our way now, but this should not breed overconfidence, but should rather give us new courage, cause us to be aggressive, and leave nothing undone that may aid in securing success."

"Money, Trusts and Imperialism," can be obtained of all book dealers, or direct from the publishers, Chicago. Any orders can also be entrusted to this bureau.

The following can be addressed for their respective kinds of literature, being sent out gratis:

For anti-imperialist publications, Fred G. Corser, Minneapolis; H. M. Mize, Chicago, or Hon. Erwin Winslow, Bostan, Mass.

For anti-trust documents, Hon. George S. Bowen, Chicago.

For Lincoln Republican documents, Hon. E. S. Corser, Minneapolis.

For congressional speeches and documents, under frank, Hon. R. F. Pettigrew or Hon. William Sulzer, Washington.

Requests for any of the foregoing, or any other inquiries, may be addressed to this Bureau.

The visit of General Weaver of Iowa to St. Paul during the week, was of more importance than was generally known. In the conference which took place with some of the General's Peoples party friends, he had a message of hope and confidence which rejoiced all in their inmost souls. General Weaver gave facts gathered since the recent Lincoln convention, showing the harmony existing among the Populists, and, as bearing on the presidential nomination, showing the broad spirit of patriotism that is spreading among all classes and all of the allies. Men in all parts of the country, the General reported, are working for the broadest action at the coming Sioux Falls convention, such as would avoid partisan bitterness among the Democrats. To this end General Weaver's idea is that the Sioux Falls convention, instead of making a formal nomination of Mr. Bryan, declare by resolution that he is already the candidate chosen of all the people, and as such they endorse him, and call upon all other allies in this great struggle to do likewise. This idea meets with a cordial response so far as canvassed in Minnesota, and was unanimously approved by those conferring with General Weaver.

In connection, General Weaver made a very encouraging report on Michigan, where he had just been. The broadest spirit is actuating the reform forces there, uniting all the allies, and independents, Populists and Democrats are expecting to unite for a victory against the Republicans, crushed and humbled as they are, with the recent exposure of rottenness. And there is a possibility that such united forces may support Pingree on an independent ticket.

A good specimen of the prevailing opinion that Bryan will be elected, is given by the Philadelphia Record, and New York Evening Post, neither of which papers are Bryan supporters but whose Washington correspondents agree that McKinley's fate is in doubt. "If the election should occur this week," says one, "Bryan would be the next president. "On the Porto Rico tariff issue," he continued, "the Republicans would lose Indiana and also Illinois; and McKinley on that platform, (as he is now destined to be), will find the chances against him in Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and Ohio would be very doubtful."

If it would not be a violation of confidence, the writer could give the name of a prominent Minnesota Republican, recently returned from a long business trip in the East, and who informed the writer in confidence that the impression grows in Wall street and other business quarters in the East, that Bryan is going to be elected. And this man added the reason why there was no regret expressed, much less fears, which was that the "prosperity" on the country is only that of the great concerns, where business and high prices have been forced, they taking all the profits, in a word the big fish only getting anything, and these eating up the little ones. "That's what's the matter with us," this man confessed.

The Populists have the first of the political innings this year, commencing April 27, throughout the state, when the primaries are to be held for delegates to the state convention. These choose delegates to the county conventions which are to be held next day, April 28. In this connection county chairmen, under action of the state committee, are urged to hold county conventions under proper call, but if none is called or held, then the people are to take action by mass conventions. These county delegates are for the state meeting May 2, when, the indications are, there will be a large and harmonious convention.

Speaking of the mid-roaders, the Sioux Falls Press announces that paid agents of Hanna are due to make their appearance in Minnesota, providing for mid-roaders to attend the Cincinnati convention. In which connection the Press remarks that it is hard to fathom the Hanna tactics which are exploiting Doc Fay, as mid-road vice presidential candidate, when Mr. Donnelly is already the candidate on the ticket with Parker.

Manager Calderwood of the Twin City Rapid Transit company is back at his post, just in time to attend to the Minneapolis proposal to reduce fares to six for 25 cents, regular, and eight for a quarter morning and evening, for workingmen. Also he can give some attention to that little delinquency of $10,000 of unpaid corporation taxes.

Speaking of reduced fares, a Twin City movement is on foot for a smaller coin than the penny, and petitions to Uncle Sam are in circulation for the half-penny to be coined. It is so "English, you gnaw," and so appropriate to the little things, including profits in business, under the English gold standard policy.

Speaking of continued shrinkages, under the gold standard, the Methodist bishopric residence at Minneapolis has gone into the mortgagees' maw, after the payment of $15,000 on the property. Another like item is the home purchased by the Associated Press in South Minneapolis, for one of the victims of the great Tribune fire. It has been sold for taxes. Also, Hennepin county subordinat officeholders have had their gold standard benefits emphasized by a slash of 10 per cent in salaries.

Lost, strayed or swallowed up in the imperialistic maw, one first-class presidential boom for C. K. Davis. Finder apply to Minneapolis Times for suitable reward.

And, speaking of Senator Davis, there is nothing but praise for his appeal in the senate for free trade and justice for Porto Rico. That he will fall by the wayside, crushed under Hanna's trust juggernaut, is poor reward for the distinguished service he has rendered, in giving us the imperialism of the Philippines. Puerto Rico is a wee small imperialist chick come home to roost.

While there has been more or less "music" in the St. Paul municipal contest, the cause of the Doc Ames party has marched on uninteruptedly. The nomination of Dr. Ames by the holy-water party is now conceded. In fact the G. O. P. endeavorers are devoted to endeavoring how to prevent that result, but see no hope. But why this humming and hawing about the genial doctor? Is not Doc Ames, with all that can be heaped upon him good, bad and indifferent, better, far better than the party he has returned to?

Waseca recently held a great pro-Boer meeting, and in the list of the eloquent Americans speakers we again fail to see the name of one S. R. Van Sant. Is the eloquent Van Sant never going to get back from Wisconsin!

TAKEN FROM BOERS

CLUSTER OF HILLS WON AFTER A STIFF FIGHT.

Now Occupied by the Head of Lord Roberts' Army—Boers Must Have Been in Considerable Force, as Lord Roberts Sent 8,000 Infantry and 3,000 Cavalry Against Them—Lord Roberts' Progress to Pretoria Will Probably Consist of a Series of Short Forward Movements.

London, April 1. — The head of the army of Lord Roberts is now about twenty-one miles north of Bloemfontein. It occupies a cluster of hills won from the Boers after a stiff fight, in which the British lost seven officers and 100 men. The Boers had been using these kops as a base for marauding bands that have been working on the country adjacent to Bloemfontein for supplies, driving off cattle and forcing non-resident Free Staters into their ranks again. The enemy must have been in considerable force, as Lord Roberts sent 8,000 infantry and 3,000 cavalry against them. Lord Roberts' progress to Pretoria will probably consist of a series of short forward movements in which Boer positions will be attacked by a portion of the army advancing rapidly without transport, the main army coming up as the railway is repaired. Lord Roberts is stripping the forces in the minor spheres of operations of their wagons and transport animals in order to hasten the advance. This is understood to be the reason he recalled Methuen from Barkly West to Kimberley. Lord Roberts had to have Lord Methuen's transport. The reason why a hot chase was not made after Commandant Olivier is that Lord Roberts did not wish to wear out the cavalry transport. Gen. French lost 3,000 horses in the relief of Kimberley and in the pursuit of Gen. Cronje. Lord Roberts lost 3,000 transport cattle at Waterval drift, and it is estimated that he has lost 4,000 other animals since the forward movement began on Feb. 13.

The advance beyond Bloemfontein is through a bare country, and supply officers foresee an increasing difficulty in providing for a great army moving along a single line of railroad, even when the latter is working smoothly and with ample rolling stock.

The Canadian mounted rifles were part of the force that occupied Kenhard yesterday. The rebellion throughout the northwest districts of Cape Colony is almost suppressed. The Goth will sail to-day with 600 men for St. Helena to guard Gen. Cronje and 4,000 prisoners.

Crushed by Kitchener.

London, April 1. — The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Morning Post says: "Lord Kitchener and his staff crossed the temporary bridge at Norval's Pont last night. He had 3,000 men under his command and he left 700 at Prieska. He considers the rebellion crushed, although the fire may smoulder for some time."

Clements Unopposed.

London, April 1. — A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Koffyfontein, dated Thursday, says: "Gen. Clements' flying column, after a forced march of thirty-seven miles yesterday, arrived here unopposed."

England and Portugal Friendly.

London, April 1. — The Madrid correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "From Lisbon I hear that with the full authorization of Portugal stores for the British forces in Rhodesia have been passed over the Biera Umteli railway. Very amicable relations exist between Portugal and Great Britain, and some political changes are expected to foucow the announcement of the Delagoa Bay award."

Warned by Kruger.

London, April 1. — The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, telegraphing Thursday, says: "President Kruger's latest proclamation warns the women and children to leave Bloemfontein within five days, as he intends to bombard and destroy the city and shoot the burghers whom he captures there. Vigorous measures have already been taken by the British to harrass marauding bands of Transvaalers. The latter are reported to be operating chiefly against Free Staters who refuse to join them."

Reported by Lord Roberts.

London, April 1. — The war office has issued the following from Lord Roberts, dated Bloemfontein, March 30, 2:25 p. m.:

"Owing to the activity of the enemy on our immediate front and their hostile action toward the burghers who surrendered under the terms of my proclamation, I found it necessary to drive them from some kopjes they had occupied near the Karee siding station, a few miles south of Brandfort. The operation was successfully carried out by the Seventh (Tucker's) division, assisted by the First and Third cavalry brigades, under French, and Le Gallais' regiment of mounted infantry. The enemy retreated to Bradfort and our troops now hold the kopjes."

Defeated by Joe Walcott.

New York, March 30.—Joe Walcott, the Barbadoes negro welter-weight pugilist, defeated Andy Walsh of Brooklyn, who is still in the middle-weight class, in a twenty-round bout at the Broadway Athletic club last night. Walsh, who had only been in training six days, was substituted in place of Mysterious Billy Smith, who was too ill to go on with Walcott. Walcott weighed 142 pounds and Walsh 154. Walcott was a favorite at 2 to 1.

Felt Like Thirty Cents.

Deadwood, S. D., April 1. — Al Warner, a workman at the Kildonan chlorination works, was held up by two men and robbed of 35 cents. He was struck a stunning blow in the face, which knocked him senseless. The robbers thought he had his monthly wages.

Killed by an Explosion.

Pullman, Ark., April 1. — The boiler of the Rutledge Lumber company's mill exploded yesterday. John Smith, an employe, was killed, four others wounded and the mill wrecked.

ENTERS LAST STAGE.

Court Will Now Try Alleged Assassins of Goebel.

Frankfort, Ky., April 3. — The convening of the April term of the Franklin circuit court to-day with Judge Cantrill sitting, marks the beginning of the final legal proceedings against the alleged assassins of the late Gov. Goebel, and on this account makes it the most important in the history of criminal trials in this state in many years. The session of the court will be taken up mainly to-day with preliminaries. The names of the grand jurors will be made public to-day. Judge Cantrell's charge to the grand jury, always vigorous and comprehensive, is looked forward to with more than ordinary interest. The grand jury will probably get in working order Tuesday, and the assassination case will be the first matter taken up. It is understood that Commonwealth's Attorney Franklin, who will conduct the prosecution, has had subpoenas issued for many important witnesses and others will be issued as soon as the court gets down to work. The names of the suspects who have already been arrested and whose cases have been referred to the grand jury for investigation, are Secretary of State Caleb Powers, Judge William Hazelip, Lakeland; Henry Youtzey, Frankfort; J. L. Sutton, Williamsburg; Harland Whittaker, Butler county; Silas Jones, Whitely county, and John Davis, Frankfort. Warrants are also out for ex-Secretary of State Charles Finley, Capt. John L. Powers of Knox county and "Tallow Dick" Coombs, colored, all of whom, except the last named, have not yet been arrested. It is not probable any indictments will be returned before the latter part of the week at the earliest, and if the prosecution makes good its claims the investigation will involve a large number of others against whom indictments will be returned. The general impression prevails, that none of the trials will come up at the present term, and it is understood that the defense, probably in every case, will move for a change of venue to some other county on account of the heated state of public feeling here. Republican Adjt. Gen. Collier, so far as known, is the only one of the Republican contestants who is in the city.

LOOTED BY ROBBERS.

Brewery Office Plundered By Masked Men.

St. Louis, April 3. — Three masked men looted the Star brewery office at Belleville, Ill., yesterday, after first capturing and confining the watchman and fireman of the plant in an empty refrigerator car near by. As the robbers were preparing to blow open the big safe in the office Hubert Hartman, secretary of the brewery, accompanied by his brother Hans, entered the room. They were promptly covered with revolvers and were marched to the same car, in which the fireman and watchman were confined. This gave the cracksmen undisputed possession of the plant. After drilling the safe they applied charges and the outer and inner doors were blown open. It is not known how much they secured, but the amount is thought to be about $1,000, besides some jewelry and valuable papers which were in the safe.

BOY KILLED BY AUTOMOBILE.

Seven-Year-Old New York Child Loses His Life and Driver Is Arrested.

New York, April 3.—"Don't let the blood get on my clothes, fellers," were the dying words of little Joe Muldoon, who was run over by an automobile on West Fifty-first street, between Eighth and Ninth avenues, while playing with some companions. He was only seven years old and his playmates were not much older, but they extricated him from the wheels and carried him to his home in their arms. He died before he reached the door, the first child in New York to be killed by an automobile. The driver, Arthur J. Henley, was placed under arrest.

CORN FOR THE STARVING.

Dr. Klopsch Concludes Negotiations for a Steamer for India.

New York, April 3. — Negotiations were concluded Saturday between Dr. Louis Klopsch, proprietor of the Christian Herald, New York, and the British government, by which Dr. Klopsch is authorized to charter a relief steamer for the purpose of sending a cargo of corn for the relief of famine sufferers in India. The cargo will consist of 3,000 tons or more of well seasoned corn, so as to withstand the climatic changes it must undergo on the voyage to Bombay. Promptly on arrival it will be dispatched to the various relief stations.

SLAIN AND CAST ADRIFT.

Body of a Man, With the Legs Tied, Found in River at Brooklyn.

New York, April 3.—The body of a man was found floating in the river at the foot of South Fourth street, Brooklyn, with the legs closely bound with a rope. The police believe that it was a murder committed for robbery, and this belief is sustained by the fact that nothing was found on the body but a bunch of keys. The man was about thirty-five or forty years of age, five feet five inches in height. His clothing was of good texture. There is no clue as to his identity.

GEN. PANA SURRENDERS.

Notorious Chinaman Who Has Been Assisting the Filipinos, Gives Up.

Manila, April 3.—The Chinese Gen. Pana, who has been terrorizing and devastating the province of Panay, has surrendered at Legaspi to Gen. Kobbe, who is bringing him to Manila.

Fire Causes $50,000 Loss.

Newburyport, Mass., April 3. — Fire starting almost simultaneously in three buildings owned by Cashman Bros., contractors and stevedoers, caused a loss of $50,000, distributed among a number of concerns. Cashman Bros.' loss is $25,000.

Son Born to Duchess of York.

London, April 3. — The Duchess of York gave birth to a son this morning. The child was born at York cottage, Sandringham. The duchess and infant are doing well.

CAPTURED BY BOERS

BRITISH DELIBERATELY WALK INTO AN AMBUSH.

Convoy With Guns Taken by Boers About Twenty Miles From Bloemfontein—Loss of Life Was Not Great, as Most of the British Walked Into the Trap Before a Shot Was Fired—Col. Broadwood's Force Obliged to Withdraw From Thaba Nchu, Owing to the Approach of Boers.

Bushman Kop, April 3.—The British force commanded by Col. Broadwood, consisting of the Tenth Hussars, Household cavalry, two horse batteries and a force of mounted infantry under Col. Pilcher which had been garrisoning Thaba Nchu, was obliged, in consequence of the near approach of a large force of Boers, to leave Friday night. Col. Broadwood marched marched to the Bloemfontein water works, south of the Modder, where he encamped at 4 Saturday morning. At early dawn the camp was shelled by the enemy from a near point. Col. Broadwood sent off a convoy with the batteries, while the rest of the force remained to act as a rear guard. The convoy arrived at a deep spruit, where the Boers were concealed and the entire body walked into ambush and were captured, together with six guns. The loss of life was not great since most of the British had walked into the trap before a shot was fired. Gen. Colville's division, which left Bloemfontein early Saturday morning, arrived here at noon Sunday and he is now shelling the Boers.

Retreated in Haste.

London, April 3.—Gen. Buller's anxious inquiry whether British officers will ever learn the value of scouting comes back with enforced emphasis to the British public to-day on receipt of tidings that a convoy with guns has walked deliberately into a Boer ambush within about twenty miles of Bloemfontein.

Lord Roberts' own report of the affair, if yet received by the war office, has not been published, and no account of the affair is available to the public except the dispatch from Bushman Kop. Nothing can be said, therefore, regarding the exact extent of the British misfortune. Evidently Col. Broadwood thought it necessary to retreat in haste from Thaba Nchu, as he marched all through Friday night, apparently followed by a considerable force of the enemy. The convoy and guns had to pass through a deep spruit, which the Boers had occupied. Six or ten guns, comprising two batteries, all the wagons, and, it is feared, many men, fell into the hands of the Boers, whose daring, displayed so near Bloemfontein, shows that they are rapidly recovering heart after the recent reverses. The hope is expressed here that Gen. Colville will recover the convoy and guns, but this is hardly likely in such a difficult country, and it is probable that the next news will be that

After a Stiff Fight

Gen. Colville has extricated Col. Broadwood from his difficult position, but failed to retrieve the disaster. Severe criticisms are heard regarding the renewal of the old mistakes of underrating the Boers and the absence of proper precaution. No doubt the affair will revive Boer hopes and inspire confidence among the enemy at a critical moment. Great things are expected by the Boers of the new commander-in-chief, Gen. Botha, who has made his reputation wholly during the present campaign. Foreign officers serving with the Boers have expressed surprise at his clever tactics.

The proof of continuing Boer activity in the Free State will compel greater circumspection on the part of the British, and will probably delay the march of Lord Roberts northward. Detailed accounts of the fight at Karee Siding estimate the Boer forces variously from 3,000 to 5,000 men. Brabant's horse occupied Wepener last Thursday unopposed. Lord Methuen has issued the following notification at Kimberley:

"I have received instructions that if any disturbances occur west of the Vaal river my force is to return and punish the rebels immediately."

British May Cross Portuguese Territory.

London, April 3. — The Lisbon correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "The Portuguese government has wired orders to Beira that British troops and ammunition be allowed to pass through freely to Rhodesia. The minister of foreign affairs, Velgo Beiro, has announced in the chamber of deputies that the government is in possession of railway bonds with which to pay the award of the Delagoa Bay railway arbitration tribunal.

Steyn to Stir Them Up.

Meseru, April 3.—President Steyn is reported to have gone to Ladybrand to stir up the burghers there to renewed resistence. The Boers have removed from the immediate vicinity of Platteberg and taken up a commanding position adjacent. The Dutch who surrendered their arms at Ladybrand are now suffering seizures of their live stock.

Roberts' Graceful Act.

Bloemfontein, April 3.—Lord Roberts has sent the following dispatch to President Kruger:

"Have just heard of the death of Gen. Joubert, and desire to offer my sincere condolences upon the sad event. Would ask you to convey to Gen. Joubert's family an expression of my most respectful sympathy with their sad bereavement, and to assure them also from me that all ranks of her majesty's forces share my feelings of deep regret at the sudden and untimely end of so distinguished a general, who devoted his life to the service of his country and whose personal gallantry was only surpassed by his humane conduct and chivalrous bearing under all circumstances."

Botha Joubert's Choice.

Pretoria, April 3.—President Kruger said in public that the last expressed desire of the late Gen. Joubert was that he should be succeeded as commandant general by Luis Botha.

St. Hilaire Spectator.

ST. HILAIRE, - MINNESOTA.

The Brooklyn surgeons have discovered a man with a folding vermiform. However, it is not as dangerous as the folding bed.

Is it possible for a jury to be too intelligent? One writer has recorded an answer in the affirmative. But if there may be over-intelligent men in the panel, are we not in peril also from an excessively impartial judge, unduly truthful witnesses, too much pure air in the court room breathed by litigants anxious that their opponents shall win the suit? It may all be when men and women are really "too good to live;" but not until then.

After the unfortunate war in South Africa is over, a scientific problem of much interest will be presented to the engineers of the Transvaal gold mines. Some of the shafts recently opened on the Rand are expected to go down 4,000 or 5,000 feet in search of gold-bearing veins, but in the future, Mr. John Yates says, it may be necessary to descend 12,000 feet. That, he thinks will be about the limit of depth at which men can work, because the temperature there will be at least 100 degrees Fahrenheit. Other engineers think the shafts could be sunk several thousand feet lower through the adoption of devices for cooling the air.

The meridian of Greenwich is generally accepted as the starting-line from which to reckon longitude and time all over the earth. But objections are, from time to time raised against the universal adoption of the Greenwich meridian for such purposes. Recently Italian savants have emphasized these objections by pointing out that on the meridian of Greenwich clouds and bad weather are frequent, interfering with astronomical observations. They suggest that the civilized world should agree to adopt the meridian of Jerusalem as a common reference line, because there the skies are clearer, and the possibility of making Palestine neutral territory would eliminate political objections.

Some of the problems of war which seem new are in reality old. For example, the South African Boers have been most successful in concealing the positions of their guns until the British battalions were exposed to destructive fire. They have adopted a device for defensive operations in the field, which is the chief motive of all the great coast and frontier fortifications. Visitors at Halifax, Dover or Gibraltar are only allowed to see the parade grounds and barracks. The secrets of the fortresses are not disclosed. There are guns of long range, which are concealed by terraces of grass or by obstructions of various kinds. In time of war these hidden guns would suddenly be brought to bear upon an enemy's fleet.

A bridge in the form of an aerial ferry has just been opened at Rouen on the river Seine. In order to avoid interference with shipping, it was determined to place no structure in the stream, or near its surface. Instead of a bridge in any of the ordinary forms, a horizontal flooring, sustained by steel towers and suspension cables, was stretched across the river at an elevation of 167 feet. On this flooring run electrically driven rollers, from which is suspended, by means of steel ropes, a car which moves at the level of the wharves on the river banks. The car is thirty-six feet wide and forty-two feet long, and is furnished, like a ferry boat, with accommodations for carriages and foot passengers. The ropes that carry the hanging car are interlaced diagonally in such a manner that the support is rigid, and a swinging motion is avoided.

A feature of parliamentary practice peculiar to this country, of which little is heard in comparison with its importance, is the conference committee. A bill before congress seldom passes the house and the senate in the same form; frequently the differences are important, and unless one house will accept as whole the doings of the other, which rarely happens, the measure must "go to conference," as the phrase is. Three members are appointed from each house, two of the majority party and one of the minority, usually the members who have had most to do with the passage of the bill, the details of which are still in dispute. When a conference committee begins its sessions to adjust differences upon a party measure, only the representatives of the majority party, which would now mean the four Republicans, ordinarily attend; as soon as they reach an agreement, the two Democrats are called in for formal assent, since they have no real power of resistance. The representatives of each house are expected to strive for the bill as it passed the body of which they are members, even though they personally may have favored the form in which it passed the other house.

Experiments made by French savants on Mont Blanc, last summer, showed that the ice of a great glacier will serve as a support for a telegraph wire without insulation. A naked galvanized iron wire laid upon the ice transmitted telegraphic signals more than a mile.

RUNNING AMUCK IN THE PHILIPPINES.

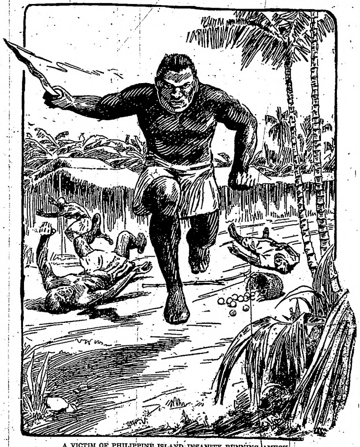
A Queer Form of Insanity to Which the Natives are Sometimes Subject.

Much attention has been called to the number of men in the army serving in the Philippines who have gone insane. The government has sent a special commission out there to investigate the matter, and there has been talk of a mysterious disease called the "Soudanese Fever." It is believed by some that this disease is peculiar to East Indian and African tropics; that it was this which caused Dr. Peters to get into trouble for killing Africans, and made the French officers in the interior of Africa recently slay other officers sent to their relief, is one theory. Everybody has heard of the Malay who runs amuck and, frenzied, kills right and left until he himself is killed. The word "amuck" is a corruption of the Javanese word "amoak," to kill. There seems to be no doubt that the Malay occasionally goes crazy through the overindulgence in opium or hasheesh and, springing from his "shack," runs through the streets of his village, killing all whom he may meet. When in a Malay village the cry "Amuck" is raised, it is like the cry of "Mad dog!" in an American village, and the populace turn out with long bamboo spears and kill the man as soon as they can. But the "Soudanese fever," if it exists, is another thing apparently. It may be that the disease which has afflicted white men in the Philippines and in equatorial Africa, is only a variation of apoplexy, brought on by indulgence in heating and stimulating foods.

Dr. Louis Livingston Seaman, who has visited the Philippines, and was with General Bates when the general made his treaty with the Sultan of Sulu, is inclined to doubt the existence of any such thing as the 'Soudanese Fever." He says: "I believe the army ration is the cause of the spread of insanity among our troops serving in the Philippines. The ration is perfectly unscientific. It might do well for temperate or arctic climates, but to feed men on so much heating food as is given to the soldiers out there is absurd.

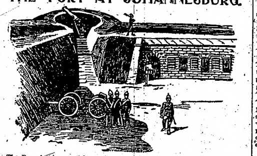
"We hear a great deal about natives of the Philippines running amuck, especially those who live on the Sulu islands. I do not believe that those wild outbreaks of murderous passion are brought about by any peculiar physical disease. It is religious frenzy, usually fostered for political reasons, which causes the natives to run amuck. I investigated the subject somewhat while I was in the Sulu islands, where the natives have been given most to this sort of thing, and found that in every case which I could come at the murderous insanity of the men had been produced deliberately. When a native official of the Mahometan tribes in the Philippines wishes to work woe to an enemy he gets together some religious enthusiasts and has a sort of revival meeting. With promises of seven wives in the seventh heaven and like inducements, and with most artful incitement of the religious feeling of the men he has selected, he gets his chosen ones into a state in which they freely offer themselves for the sacrifice—to kill until they themselves are killed. As soon as a man declares that he is ready a stout leather thong is tied about his person in such a manner that every step causes him excruciating agony. Then his crease, or crooked sword, is given to him, and he is turned loose. Driven frantic by the pain which his every movement causes, he rushes on, killing as he goes. There used to be a lot of this sort of thing in the Sulu islands when the Spaniards were there, but when the Americans took charge the sultan and his Datos were given to understand that such customs were not looked upon with favor by this government, and somebody might be held responsible. The result is that there has not been a case of running amuck in the Sulu islands since our troops took charge there.

"We hear once in a while of Malays on board ships running amuck. I believe that in such cases their frenzy is not due to any peculiar disease, but to the fact that they have been driven to extremes by abuse and cruelty. We hear of Scandinavians doing the same thing sometimes. No, I am not a believer in the 'Soudanese fever' nor in the army ration."



A VICTIM OF PHILIPPINE ISLAND INSANITY RUNNING AMUCK.

THE FORT AT JOHANNESBURG.



The Boer fortress at Johannesburg, one of the strongest armaments in the world, occupies a splendid position on top of Hospital hill, which commands the road to Pretoria. It stands out above the picturesque and comfortable residences which abound in the outskirts of Johannesburg. The fort is rectangular in shape, with two bastions at opposing corners. On each of these bastions is mounted a 23-centimeter quick-firing gun, with two flanking Maxims for enfilade fire. On the side looking toward Barnato park are four small quick-firing guns, while on the opposite side, which faces Johannesburg, is the entrance. This ingenious entrance traverses the ramparts at an angle of forty-five degrees. Within the court, right and left of the entrance, are stables, while under one of the bastions are barracks and a magazine. The other bastion covers officers' rooms and a somewhat smaller magazine. Long before the outbreak of the present South African war this fort at Johannesburg, like the rest of the Transvaal forts, was well provisioned and supplied with an immense amount of ammunition. So today it stands almost impregnable. The accompanying illustration shows one of the fort's bastions and gives a good idea of how the quick-firing gun has been mounted by the Boer artilleries.

THE ELEPHANT SNEEZED.

Unexpected Event Almost Created a Panic at the Zoo.

Jolly, the zoo elephant, sneezed the other morning and all the zoo attendants took a vacation to laugh. The elephant sneezes only about once in five years. When he sneezes it is an omen of prosperity, indicating abundant crops and great commercial activity. The phenomenon itself forms an interesting spectacle. Everything was quiet in the zoo, when somebody shouted to Lecturer Rollins: "Look out, the elephant's going to sneeze!" All the attendants deserted their posts and ran to look. Jolly had drawn up his sides until his back was humped. His tail was stiffly horizontal. His mouth was open and his eyes were shut, while great tears the size of peanuts rolled down his leathery face. There was a great drawing up of the sides, a long continued convulsion, a trembling of the floor and then an explosion like the report of the Boer cannon "Long Tom" at Ladysmith. Half a bucket of water shot out in a stream toward the monkeys' cage, while the elephant's legs trembled as he prepared for a second sneeze. There was a rumbling like that of an earthquake and a volcanic crack. All the animals set up a roar. Dewey's cat jumped down on the back of the goat and every monkey screamed shrilly. The quagga brayed and the kangaroo barked. The leopards snarled and Prince Tiny Mite nearly tumbled off his platform. Jolly had been known to sneeze only twice before since Director-General Botock had owned him.

A Present for Papa.

The children were making their plans for Christmas and their mother was helping them, while their father was deep in his evening paper. But he could hear, and this is what he heard: "What are you going to give papa?" asked the mother. "I think," said the eldest, thoughtfully, "that I will give him an alarm clock." "An alarm clock!" exclaimed the mother. "Why do you want to give him an alarm clock?" "Because," answered the child, with an earnestness that showed she had given the matter some thought, "if he has an alarm clock at the office maybe he will know when it is time to come home to dinner."

UNEXPECTED

Happened in Quite the Usual Way, as the Surgeon Explained.

"Some of the queerest experiences of a doctor are pretty certain to be connected with the administration of anesthetics," said a New Orleans physician, chatting the other day with a newspaper friend, "and appropos of the subject I recall a little story that I don't mind telling, as the incident occurred long since and in another city. A dozen years ago, when I was temporarily located in St. Louis, I was called one day to the old Lindell hotel to give chloroform to a young woman who was about to undergo a slight surgical operation to remove a morbid growth in the ear. The patient, as it developed on my arrival, had been married only a few days before, and was in the city with her husband on their bridal tour. Although quite handsome, she was no longer exactly in her first youth, and she was very much averse to having and she was very much averse to having her husband present at the operation. However, he insisted, and she finally agreed that he should stay, but I noticed that she seemed very nervous and preoccupied. The operation, as I said before, was trifling. She took the chloroform easily, and all went well until she was just regaining consciousness, when she opened her mouth and out fell a set of false teeth. She had said nothing about that detail, and the truth was that she had hoped, poor woman! to pass through the ordeal without the fact of her wearing such things being known to her husband. But the effect on that individual was unexpected. He gave one horrified glance, and then rushed at the old surgeon and seized him by the throat. 'You infamous scoundrel!' he yelled, 'you have broken my poor darling's jaw!' At that stage of affairs I beat a retreat. I never did learn exactly what the husband thought had happened or what sort of explanation was offered."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Cowboy Blacksmithing.

"Up at my camp near the Four Peaks," told Jim Bark, the well-known cattleman, "the boys are all handy with a rifle. We've got a lot of guns up there. The old-fashioned black-powder Winchester has been discarded, and nothing but the best goes. Most of the new guns were bought during the Spanish war, when we would experiment all day with tree trunks and rough trenches, learning the art of war at home. We found that a bullet from one of the new Winchesters driven by smokeless powder was good for four foot and more of pine timber, and for more than an inch of iron. I thought the boys had done about everything in the shooting line that could be done long ago, but I was mistaken. I sent them up a wagon. In hauling down some firewood they broke the bolsters all to flinders. The bolsters hold up the wagon bed, you know. Well, the boys figured out all right the rebuilding of the wood parts, but came near being stumped on the iron fixings. They got some old iron wagon tires and cut them in proper lengths, but hadn't a way that they could see to punch the necessary bolt holes. Finally the question was solved. One of the boys carefully marked the places for the bolts, stood the piece of tire against a tree and put a bullet, 30 caliber, through the tire at each place marked. It was a novel sort of blacksmithing, but it worked."—Arizona Graphic.

ANGORA GOATS IN AMERICA.

Profitable Industry Recently Inaugurated in Several Southern States.

The raising of Angora goats is an industry which may soon be established in the nearby state of North Carolina. A tract of land was recently purchased in Cumberland county by a northern man who proposes to breed and keep such animals for the fine yield of valuable fleece which they annually produce. In Texas Angora goats have been cultivated for some years, and Farm and Ranch, an agricultural paper published in the lone star state, says there are 75,000 of the animals within its borders, while nearly fifty tons of their fleece, commercially known as mohair, were shipped last year from Uvalde alone. It now sells at prices ranging from 25 to 35½ cents a pound for average grades, while some of the very finest quality not yet marketed is expected to command 40 cents. Not only is the fleece of considerable value, but the hides and flesh are also said to be in active demand. Apparently there is an excellent opportunity, for many American farmers in the raising of Angora goats. It is asserted that these animals can be kept at much less expense than sheep, while their fleece is of far greater value than wool. It requires a dry climate and short grass, while a country of broken and hilly nature, with scrubby tree growths, is well adapted to its requirements. The statement is also made that breeding the Angora with the common goat produces an animal of great size that the latter, while the fleece is soon graded up to a profit-yielding quality. Mohair, as is well known, is a long and silky product which is employed in the manufacture of many costly fabrics. There are at present nearly 250,000 of the pure Angoras in the United States, but if their value is hereafter generally appreciated by agriculturists there is no doubt that this number will be largely increased. Animals which are easier to raise than sheep and which at the same time yield greater returns are sure to become more numerous on our farms wherever climatic and other conditions are conducive to their culture.—Baltimore Herald.

English as She Is Pronounced.

Speaking of, the vulgar pronunciation," an English journal expresses a wonder whether the pronunciation of some of the ignorant classes or some of the cultivated classes is the worse. For instance, the groom says: "'Arry, old my 'oss." But the curate says: "He that hath yaws to yaw, let him yaw." And the doctors wife says: "Jawge, please go to Awthah and awdah the hawse, and don't forget to look at the flah." And the vicar says: "If owah gwacious sovering lady wur-ah to die!"

THE BOER WOMEN.

SHARE PERILS OF HUSBANDS, BROTHERS AND SONS

And Spur Them on to Resistance or Death—Their Heroic Work in the Ambulance and Hospital Service—The Great Trek of 1836.

None but the elderly women among the Transvaal Boers can remember the great trek of 1836, when their fathers and grandfathers abandoned the homes they had made in Natal and toiled up the passes to the lofty plateau where they founded their republic. Those days were more trying than any the Transvaal women ever saw until the present war began. They were still living in their tent wagons when the terrible wars with the Matabele branch of the Zulu tribe began, and no women could show more wonderful spirit and constancy than those wives and mothers of the Boer pioneers in the midst of appalling dangers and hardships which did not end until the Matabeles had been driven north of the Crocodile River. Not a few of these women and their children with them, perished by the assegais of savages, but not one of them would have dreamed of returning to the peaceful homes and gardens in Natal which they had left behind. The British had proclaimed that country their own, their colonists were pouring in and the Boers would die before they would come again under British rule.

The wives and mothers of the soldiers who now confront the British are the descendants of those stout-hearted women who loaded the guns of their husbands and boys, while savages rushed upon the brush heaps that were the sole protection around their laagers. Perhaps no women in the world have changed so little in two generations. The women of the Boer farmsteads are now just what their grandmothers were when the Matabeles sought their lives. The Bible is still their only book, they still prefer a quiet, sedentary life and the simple duties of their modest homes, and they have scarcely risen in any respect above the plane of intellectual cultivation which their grandmothers occupied; and they are like their grandmothers, too, in the courage, constancy and sublime devotion in which they are facing the awful trials of another crucial period in the history of their people. The women are doing everything they can to aid the soldiers in the field. Hundreds of them are in the field, and form the majority of the working force in the ambulance and hospital service. In their denunciation of the British they are far more bitter and outspoken than the men themselves, but in their mission of mercy they know no enemies. All the wounded British soldiers who have fallen into their hands have been treated as brothers and friends. The Boer nurses extend to them the same care that they give to their own stricken soldiers. The women throughout the two republics exerted a powerful influence in kindling enthusiastic support for the war when it became certain that the conflict could not be averted. They sent many of their sons into the commandos or militia organizations, even though the striplings had not quite reached the age of sixteen, when they are liable to military duty. One day a crowd at the railroad station in Pretoria was cheering a commando that was going to join Joubert's army around Ladysmith. A mother in the throng saw her young son with a gun over his shoulder and wearing a cartridge belt, just as he was entering a car. She followed him to his seat, and, laying her hand on his shoulder, said:

"My boy, why did you not tell me of this?"

"Mother," he answered, "perhaps I was wrong, but I could not bear to bid you good-by. You were to be told just as soon as we left. You see, mother, it was my duty to go sooner or later, and I thought the sooner the better. Forgive me if I have done wrong."

"You are right, my son," the mother replied. "It is your duty to go, and I am willing you should go, though I thought it might be better to wait a few months. Go, you have my blessing, but you should have told me." She kissed him farewell, and there was a smile on her face as she left the car, though tears stood in her eyes.

Heart the Only Vital Spot.

A prominent surgeon, discussing the character of the wounds received on the battlefields in South Africa, has pointed out that experience of the present campaign would seem to show that the only absolutely fatal region is the heart. Bullet wounds of the brain are not necessarily fatal, judging from the records of the last few weeks, and this is presumably due to the small size of the projectile, the velocity with which it travels, and the modern practice of scientific surgery, by which dangerous symptoms likely to arise from injuries may be warded off. It has therefore been suggested that, the heart being the only really vital part in the body, a steel covering should be provided so as to protect that part from bullets. A steel plate might be attached to the soldiers' tunics, and doubtless the small shield could be so fixed as neither to impede movement nor cause inconvenience.

Curious Wanderings of Smoke.

During the volcanic eruption in the Hawaiian islands last summer, the smoke rose to a height of between five and six miles, and then drifted away to the northeast. At a distance of 600 miles from Hawaii it settled upon the surface of the sea, and was then carried back by the northeast wind to its place of origin, where it arrived a fortnight after its original departure, and covered the entire group of islands with its heavy pall.

Perhaps No Other Chance.

Her father—You are too young to marry. Wait and you will get over this love. Herself—That is what I am afraid of.

The instinct that teaches the bird to come back to the same nest the next summer is probably the same that tells a woman exactly where to find the pin that is sticking into the baby.

AMERICAN HENS

After Becoming Naturalized in South Africa Change Their Natures.

"One of the greatest troubles experienced by people living in tropical countries," said L. T. Varden of Chicago, at the Gilsey house, "is to obtain meat of a quality fit to eat. Take the Philippines, for instance. The cattle there are magnificent to look at, but they cut up into mighty poor food, being fat and also stringy. Almost all the meat used by our men there comes from Australia, being brought in refrigerator ships, from which it is issued three times a week. The Australian is as good beef as a man would care to eat. There is, or rather, was—for it is nearly a year and a half since I was there—a lack of poultry also. No hens or chickens can be obtained, but only ducks, and, of course, your morning egg was that of a duck, which is an exceedingly poor substitute for a hen's egg, in my estimation. I understand that since then they have tried to remedy this and other deficiencies by importing hens and other things, but I doubt the success of the experiment, for the climate, different kind of food and the like, may change the flesh of the fowl and the quality of the egg. C. A. Williams, a friend of mine, who used to be United States consul at Johannesburg, and who now lives in the Transvaal, told me that when he first went to South Africa he endeavored to raise the character and quality of his table supplies by importation. The meat in South Africa was poor, but that could not be helped. American fowls, Williams thought would be a decided improvement over those of the Transvaal, and their eggs would enable him to begin each day with an easy stomach and a satisfied mind. So he brought out a flock of American-bred poultry. At first all went well; the breakfast egg was a godsend and the occasional chicken at dinner all that he had fondly anticipated, but then there came a change, at first so gradual, that Williams was inclined to attribute it to loss of appetite. The breakfast egg grew coarse and coarser in flavor until it became wholly uneatable, and the dinner chicken deteriorated in similar manner and with identical result. With the former, however, the outward appearance of the egg remained the same, but the poultry not only changed in quality and flavor of flesh, but also in external appearance, as well. Without increasing the size of the body, the necks grew longer and thinner and the legs lengthened out of all proportion, until at last the hens resembled nothing so much as diminutive ostriches. They were unfit to eat, and of no other domestic use, and so Williams gave them away to the Kaffirs, but for some time he thought of exhibiting them here at a poultry show, mainly to ascertain what names competent judges would apply to them, but the expense deterred him. He also had another scheme to get even, which was to enter the roosters in cocking mains. Williams said they could lick anything that wore feathers, short of an eagle or an ostrich, and that there was not a dog in the Transvaal that would come anywhere near his house while they remained his property, so utterly had the few dogs which had tried conclusions with them been routed."—New York Tribune.

NATURAL GAS

Has Passed Out of General Use in Pittsburg Homes.

A. V. Sterling of Pittsburg said at the Hotel Manhatten: "The day of natural gas with us is practically over, and our city is dirtier than ever. I went to Pittsburg to live in 1886, and stayed at first with a friend of mine at Roup, one of the suburbs. At that time natural gas was everywhere in use, and there were open fires in every room. My friend warned me to be careful in using it, and always to lay a lighted match on the bricks before turning on the natural gas. I was used to ordinary gas fires, and so when I had reason to use my fire, and the gas blew the first match out without igniting, I leisurely scratched another and touched her off. The next instant found me stretched out on the other side of the room in a stunned condition, amid the wreck of the washstand, against which I had been hurled. Luckily I escaped with a few bruises, but I ever afterward treated natural gas with profound respect. There are a lot of people in my town who would like to know what takes the place of the gas in the bowels of the earth when we extract it. The way it rushes out when once tapped shows that it is pent up in some place at enormous pressure, which grows gradually less and finally ends altogether. Now, what takes its place is what I want to know, and why there isn't danger that, this support having been withdrawn, cave-ins may occur? Billions and trillions of cubic feet of natural gas have been taken from the earth since its first discovery, and, I for one, would like to know what Mother Nature has put in its place."—New York Tribune.

The Most Awful Explosion.

What is said to have been the most terrific explosion ever known occurred Feb. 19, 1896, near Johannesburg, on the Netherlands South Africa railway. A train with some fifty-five tons of blasting gelatin and ninety cases of detonators was standing on a siding when it was inadvertently run into by another train. The fearful energy of the liberated gases tore a huge trench 300 feet long, 30 feet deep and 65 feet wide in the stiff clay soil; pieces of the engine were blown more than a mile away; upward of fifty people were known to have been killed, while the ghastly heap of mangled limbs, which filled upward of twenty sacks, probably accounted for many others who were passing strangers and could not, therefore, be identified at the time. Needless to say, perhaps, all the adjoining home property was reduced to matchwood and some 600 people were rendered homeless.

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

Pneumatic Rocking Chair — Spool on Wrist—Armor Plates—Forest and Prairie in Nebraska—Human Cancer and "Tree Canker."

Armor Plates.

In an article in Nature on "Armor Plates," Mr. Hatfield says it was owing to the enterprise of the American, Harvey, that it was found possible to take soft steel plates and carbonize them by the cementation process, so that steel plates were obtained with faces, containing considerable percentages of carbon, up to 70 or 80 per cent, whilst the rear still retained its original soft and tough condition. Such a plate, after being treated and quenched in water, either wholly or on the hard side, then possessed a hard surface, against which a shot broke into fragments. Further improvements were introduced at Krupp's Essen works, carbonizing the surfaces by means of gas cementation instead of charcoal. The latest type of hard-faced plates possess about twice the resistance of the older type of plates. This enables a great saving to be effected in the weight of armor to be used for the protection of the modern warship.

How to Fry

A cook should always have two frying pans, and a third not much bigger than a large plate, for omelets, fritters and the like. The pans should be kept very clean, and the butter dripping, lard or oil must be boiling hot before the meat or fish or vegetable is put in the pan. Mutton chops, plain, do not require any fat in the pan with them—they have enough in themselves—but they must be turned and moved about to prevent them from burning. Always season the chop with a little pepper before putting it in the pan. Lamb cutlets and lamb chops must be egged and bread-crumbed twice to look well. Steak should be cut three-quarters of an inch thick and should be peppered but not salted, as that makes it hard. Salt is reserved until after the cooking. Fish must be well dried before frying, in a cloth well sprinkled with flour. Then an egg should be brushed over it, with a sprinkling of finely grated bread or cracker crumbs. The fat should be boiling when the fish is put in and there should be enough of it to cover. In kitchens where strict economy is demanded, it is usual when liver and bacon are to be served to fry the bacon first, which will leave enough fat in the pan for the liver to be put in without other fat.

An Aerial Steamship.

Major B. Baden-Powell writes to the London Times, describing a visit he recently paid to Germany to the "dockyard" where an aerial steamship of vast size is in actual course of construction. We have all read so much about such contrivances in the pages of Jules Verne and his hundred of plagiarists that we are not too ready to believe in the realization of such a dream. But here we have the evidence of an eye-witness that the ship is actually on the stocks, and is to cost when finished about $350,000. It is made of aluminum, and has the appearance of an enormous birdcage. Upon this framework an outer skin is to be stretched, and in the inclosed space a number of balloons are to furnish the rising power. The total lifting capacity will be ten tons, and in a gallery beneath will be the engines to propel the monster through the air at an estimated speed of twenty-two miles per hour.

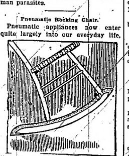
French Researches in Agriculture.

In a paper to the Academie des Sciences, Paris, MM. Deherain and Demoussy state that the white lupin, which flourishes above all in sandy soils, can be grown in chalky soils if provided bacteria form nodosities on its roots. M. Moisnas, the French chemist, says he can make ammonia, from the nitrogen in the atmosphere for the use of agriculturists. Heat unites calcium with nitrogen, forming calcium nitride, which in water yields ammonia and calcium hydrate. M. Richard of Avignon finds that a geranium watered with a solution of butylic alcohol becomes feeble, drowsy and apparently intoxicated.

Human Cancer and "Tree Canker."

M. Bra in the Comptes Rendus makes some remarkable observations on the analysis presented by the cultures of Nectria ditissima, the fungus which produces "canker" in trees, with those of the parasitic fungus which accompanies cancers in man and other animals. Inocultion of trees with cultures of the human parasite resulted in a "canker," in all respects resembling that produced by nectria, and conversely the ingestion by rabbits of cultures of nectria caused the production of round ulcers in the stomach, similar to those produced by the ingestion of cultures of the human parasites.

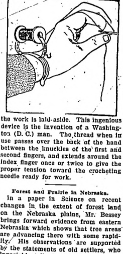
Pneumatic Rocking Chair.



Pneumatic appliances now enter quite largely into our everyday life, the pneumatic bicycle and automobile tire being almost indispensable, while air brakes and invalid cushions are essential to our physical safety and comfort. Quite the latest application of an air cushion, however, is for the rockers of the usual rocking chair. What resembles a section of a bicycle tire, with conical ends resting in sockets provided therefor in the wooden framework, is placed under each rocker, and upon these cushions or tires the weight of the person in the chair rests. The cushion may be inflated to any degree of hardness agreeable to the occupant of the chair, by the familiar hand or foot pump and valve. They have the advantage of being noiseless, of having a smooth, even motion, and have no appreciable wear and tear on the carpet or rugs. Even on a stained hardwood floor they can be used without so much as scratching it and without a particle of noise. It is asserted the restfulness of a pneumatic rocking chair as much greater than that of the ordinary form, and that the energy required to rock it is decidedly less.

Spool on Wrist.

A spool supporting bracelet, recently patented, is designed to prevent the cotton, silk, thread, yarn, etc., used for crocheting, embroidering, knitting and similar purposes from rolling away or becoming entangled while in use, which often happens, causing great inconvenience and annoyance to the knitter. As shown, it is made out of a single piece of metal, which has sufficient spring in it to hold it comfortably tight on the wrist. Part of this metal is cut out and bent upward to form the support for the spool, the ends being finished with two metallic or hard rubber balls, the better to permit the spool to revolve on them. The little hooks cut out of these supporting arms are provided for the express purpose of suspending the work, by placing the last loops on them, in crocheting work, thus preventing possible unraveling of any stitches when the work is laid aside. This ingenious device is the invention of a Washington (D. C.) man. The thread when in use passes over the back of the hand between the knuckles of the first and second fingers, and extends around the index finger once or twice to give the proper tension toward the crocheting needle ready for work.



Forest and Prairie in Nebraska.

In a paper in Science on recent changes in the extent of forest land on the Nebraska plains, Mr. Bessey brings forward evidence from eastern Nebraska which shows that tree areas are advancing there with some rapidity. His observations are supported by the statements of old settlers, who invariably tell of an advance of trees up the valleys, sometimes a mile or more, while the width of the timber belts on the streams has also greatly increased. The keeping out of fire seems to be the general cause of the spread of the trees. Two years ago the same author showed reasons for believing that the pines of western Nebraska are advancing eastward, where destruction by fire or cattle is prevented and where cutting does not proceed too rapidly.

Science and Esthetics.

In an article in the Archiv fuer Systematische Philosophiet, entitled "Beitrage zur Aesthetic," Max Desoir says there is a complex and ramifying interconnection of science and art. The historical sciences of life and mind contain a large admixture of art. Much that is properly scientific enters into poetic construction, especially of the romantic order. Logical motives and processes play a prominent part in the origin of the plastic arts. Even at the present day thought of a scientific character plays a larger part in works of art than is desirable from the purely artistic point of view.

The Eclipse of the Sun

Nature says the Spanish government proposes to make the best possible arrangements at the Madrid observatory for the reception of foreign astronomers who will observe the eclipse of the sun on May 28. Nevertheless other places are better adapted for the purpose, as, for example, Naval-Moral, 200 kilometers from Madrid on the Caceres line, because at that place the eclipse will be total for two minutes.

Rejuvenescence in Ferns.

In an article in the Botanische Centralblatt, Herr Heinricher says that in a species of fern (Cystopteris bulbifera) there are produced, in addition to the ordinary adventitious buds, certain "regenerating buds," which have a strong faculty of rejuvenescence. These do not, like the ordinary adventitious buds, give rise to fleshy scales, containing food reserves, but produce at once assimilating leaves.

'Tis Said That Absence Conquers Love.

(Old Favorite Series.)

[Frederick William Thomas, the author of this song, was born in Providence, R. I., in 1808. He moved to the South, where he was in turn lawyer, editor, professor, Methodist minister and lecturer. He was a prolific writer of verse. He died in 1861. The song we give was written about 1830.]

'Tis said that absence conquers love;
But, oh, believe it not!
I've tried, alas! its powers to prove—
But thou art not forgot!
Lady, though fate has bid us part;
Yet still thou art as dear,
As fixed in this devoted heart
As when I clasped thee here.

I plunge into the busy crowd,
And smile to hear thy name;
And yet, as if I thought aloud,
They know me still the same.
And when the wine-cup passes round,
I toast some other fair;
But when I ask my heart the sound,
Thy name is echoed there.

And when some other name I learn,
And try to whisper love,
Still will my heart to thee return,
Like the returning dove.
In vain; I never can forget,
And would not be forgot:
For I must bear the same regret
Whate'er may be my lot.

E'en as the wounded bird will seek
Its favorite bower to die,
So, lady, I would hear thee speak,
And yield my parting sigh.
'Tis said that absence conquers love;
But, oh! believe it not;
I've tried, alas! its power to prove
But thou art not forgot.

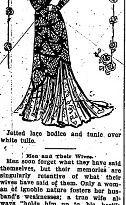
The Age of "Slatterns."

Did you ever stop to think, asks an English magazine, what a luxury good, pure complexion soap is? It is one of the blessings of modern advancement, and one of the privileges,, and, we may say, attainments of civilization. Even in the last century a great step has been taken in regard to cleanliness, and women have found out that pure soap and water, and the free employment of them, have proved the greatest aids to beauty. In the days when powdered hair and the accompaniment of patches and powder, it can only be imagined what strenuous efforts our great-great-grandmothers must have made in order to obtain absolute cleanliness in the face of fashion. A writer with whom we are all familiar once termed the beauties of his time "slatterns." This we believe to be libel, and we are inclined to pronounce that gentleman unworthy the name of gentleman, since probably out of spite because he was not held up to adoration by those very "slatterns," who were, of course, the belles, as he thought he deserved. But truth to tell, the athletic, well-groomed, wholesome-looking woman of today is far and away ahead of her great-great-grandmother because of her healthful exercise, her out-of-door life, and—her free use of, not cosmetics, but good complexion soap and water.

Worth Remembering.

A good rule to remember when one has costly rings and the habit of taking them off when the hands are washed, which, by the way, should always be done if one wishes to take the proper care of the stones, is always to place them between the lips, says a writer in the Criterion. If the habit is once formed it becomes second nature, and prevents adding another item to the column of loss, relating to rings left in hotels, strange dressing rooms and other places. Said a woman who has a magnificent collection of rings, and who has wisely exercised this habit since its inception: "I have never lost one or mislaid it, and, what is just as important, I have never been through all the worrying anxiety of believing I had lost some one or all of them." The woman whose fingers are clothed with flashy brilliants up to the joint may remonstrate that she had no room between her ruby lips, in which case there are two remedies, one, to enlarge the mouth, the other, to reduce the number of rings to that proportion which marks the woman of taste.

Dinner Gown.



Jetted lace bodice and tunic over white tulle.

Men and Their Wives.

Men soon forget what they have said themselves, but their memories are singularly retentive of what their wives have said of them. Only a woman of ignoble nature fosters her husband's weaknesses; a true wife always "holds him up to his best"; without flatter she makes him feel that she is his fondest admirer. Men are grateful for forbearance in their wives, for often, while asserting most loudly that they are right, they are frequently conscious that they are wrong. Given a little time and a little silence they will often show in actions—rarely in words—that they have been mistaken. A man expects his wife to be better than he. No matter how little religion a man may have himself, his ideal wife is always a woman with the purity of soul that only a Christian can have; and to a good man it is usually part of his religion to believe that his wife is morally higher and nobler than himself. Altogether, too few wives realize that novelty and variety is as attractive to a man after marriage as before. The same gown evening after evening, perhaps the same coiffure year in and year out, may not exactly pall upon the taste of a devoted husband, but he soon ceases to look at his wife with the same interest as heretofore. After a while she will miss the fond little compliments that are so pleasant to receive, and one of the most potent of her womanly weapons grows rusty from disuse. A wife's position in the estimation of her husband is always what she is, not what she claims to be.

For the Complexion.

One hears of so many girls who complain of thick or spotty complexions, and in nine cases out of ten the trouble is quite easily removed. The very latest cure, and quite the simplest one to follow, is to wash the face with parsley water, says a recent authority. It is done in this way: Take half a pint of rain water and soak in it a large bunch of parsley, letting it remain in the water all night. In the morning rub the face well with dry towel, then dip your sponge in the parsley water, and pass it over your face, allowing it to dry on. Do this three times daily, and at the end of two weeks if you have persevered in the simple treatment, you will be rewarded to see that there are no more spots or roughness on your face. Many of the high-priced complexion nostrums contain this simple remedy, which is as inexpensive as it is effectual.

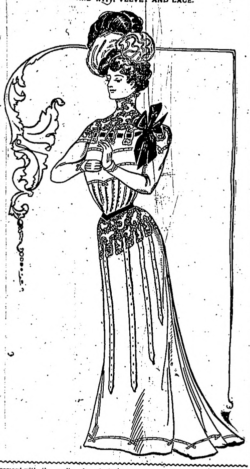
The Toilet of Greatness.

It is often said that Mme. Patti does not use water to wash her face. This is entirely a mistake. The day never passes that the diva does not use water liberally. Both she and Mme. Albini have a firm belief in rose cold cream. After washing they always rub their faces well with this cream; also before making up for the stage. The Princess of Wales, whose complexion is still exquisite, believes in massage for the face, and has distilled water sent every day for her toilet. The Empress Frederick puts faith in eau-de-cologne, of which a bottle is poured every morning into her bath. Another woman has another recipe for a good complexion that is the simplest of all: "Wash your face with hot water and a very mild soap just before going to bed, and wash it with cold rain water and no soap when you rise."

Let There Be Light.

Light and sunshine are good medicines. They not only help to cure, but they assist in preventing. It is strange, therefore, that so many in the world should be content to do without either. We have windows and doors in our houses, but there are many of us who keep both closed as much as possible. The sunshine fades the carpets and the open windows let in dust which spoils the furniture. That is what some careful housewives say. There may be something in this, but not much. A faded carpet is much more desirable than a faded cheek, and dust is not the worst thing that comes to us. Why, the preachers tell us we are made of dust, and to that condition we are sure to return. So why be afraid of it? It can be swept out and brushed out. But there is only one way to get air into the house and that is by not being afraid of the dust or of the sun. We pity with all our hearts the tenement house dwelling whose rooms open into sunless shafts. And yet there are many of us who make our homes as nearly like those ill-ventilated tenements as possible. We have open spaces on each side. The sun can touch our windows in the morning and in the evening, but we shut it out so as to look fresh and keep clean. No greater mistake in domestic economy was ever made.

FOULARD WITH VELVET AND LACE.



An Essential of Health.

Of all forms of exercise, walking is the best, because it acts on the whole body, and acts evenly. It is the best of doctors, for its sanitary influence is moral; as well as physical, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Everybody should be in the open air at least two hours daily, and if in ordinary health, should walk at least two miles daily—not a dull, rigid, constitutional walk, but a brisk, joyous, exhilarating walk, and if possible, a walk with an object. Be it understood that "shopping" is not walking, nor is "sauntering." You must use activity enough to send the blood faster through the veins, to bring a glow to the cheek, but you must stop short of actual fatigue. To realize the best results from walking, do not carry parcels, as crooking the arm impedes perfect circulation. If you must bear something divide your burdens equally, and hold half in each hand, allowing the hands to fall at the sides, rather than be bent. This aids the beauty of the arm—of which we shall have more anon.

Grace Culture.

A woman who has improved a naturally ungraceful figure says that it has been accomplished by remembering every time she is required to stand to lift herself upon her toes and let herself down gently, leaving her weight upon the balls of her feet, instead of upon the heels. "When this is done," she says, "it is not necessary to think of chin or shoulders." She has learned to walk in this way, and says that he feet grow less tired than formerly, because the portion of her foot which was intended to bear the weight is in proper use. A glance at the position of the arch of the instep will prove that the body's weight was never intended to rest upon the heels, and the habit of throwing it there accounts for weak backs and kindred ills.

Cheer, Boys, Cheer.

(Old Favorite Series.)

[This was one of Charles Mackay's most popular songs. The well known air to which it is sung was written by Henry Russell.]

Cheer, boys, cheer! no more of idle sorrow;
Courage, true hearts shall bear us on our way,
Hope points before, and shows the bright to-morrow;
Let us forget the darkness of to-day.
So, farewell, England, much as we may love thee,
We'll dry the tears that we have shed before,
Why should we weep to sail in search of fortune?
So, farewell, England, farewell for evermore.

Cheer, boys, cheer! for country, mother country;
Cheer, boys, cheer! The willing, strong right hand;
Cheer, boys, cheer! There's wealth for honest labor;
Cheer, boys, cheer! for the new and happy land.

Cheer, boys, cheer! the steady breeze is blowing,
Floating us freely o'er the ocean's breast,
The world shall follow in the track we're going,
For the star of empire glitters in the west.
Here we had toil and little to reward us,
But there shall plenty smile upon our pain;
And ours shall be the prairie and the forest,
And boundless meadows ripe with golden grain.

Cheer, boys, cheer, for country, mother country;
Cheer, boys, cheer! United heart and hand;
Cheer, boys, cheer! There's wealth for honest labor;
Cheer, boys, cheer! for the new and happy land.

The Monkey and the Monkey Dolls.

A True Story.

"Miss Angeline," called Therese, "there's an organ-man at the gate with a real, live monkey!" Angeline jumped up so quick that she nearly upset her doll-house, and ran out upon the veranda. She loves animals dearly, and when she saw the odd little creature at the end of a long string come bowing and bobbing up the gravel walk toward her, she laughed aloud in delight. "Mamma, mamma!" she cried. "Come and see the funny monkey!" Angeline's mamma came to the door, and when she saw the monkey she could not help laughing, too. He was dressed in a long, scarlet gown, belted around his waist, and a little black velvet cap with a gilt band, which he took off when he made his odd little bow. The organ-man played "Dixie" and the monkey began dancing to the music very prettily. When he had done dancing he turned a half-dozen somersaults in the grass, rolling over and over like a ball. Then he sprang up, made a very low bow to Angeline and her mamma, and held out his cap for a penny. When Angeline had dropped the penny into the cap, he took it out quickly with his little black fingers and stuffed it into a tiny pocket in the skirt of his gown. Then he climbed on Angeline's lap and looked in her face with round, black, solemn eyes.

"How much he looks to know, ma'am!" said Therese. "Too much," answered Angeline's mamma, but neither Therese nor Angeline quite knew what she meant. "Mamma," cried Angeline, suddenly, "I wonder if he would like to see my monkey-doll! Would you show it to him?" Therese ran to fetch the doll. It was almost as large as the live monkey, and looked as like him as one pea to another. And when the monkey saw it, what do you suppose he did? First he caught it in his queer little arms, stared into its black face, felt its bead eyes and its small, wrinkled cheeks, and hugged it with all his might to the breast of his scarlet gown. Then he held it at arm's length, looked it quite over again, and kissed it twice on its odd, puckered mouth. When his master called the monkey he tried to carry the doll with him, tripping over his gown as he dragged it along. "Lay it down!" said the organ-man, sharply. The poor little fellow dropped the doll, but as he rode away on the top of the organ he looked back so wistfully that Angeline was ready to cry. "Therese," said she, "do you suppose the monkey thought the doll was his brother?" "How should I know, Miss Angeline?" said Therese, laughing. And, for that matter, how should anybody know?—Mary A. P. Stansbury.

Too Hasty.

Hasty judgment is dangerous, even when one relies upon the evidence of one's own senses. The Cornhill Magazine says that a school inspector was reading a piece of dictation to a class under examination, when he noticed a boy behaving in a manner that suggested underhand work. His head was bent low, and his slate, instead of resting on the desk, was underneath it. Feeling sure that the passage was being copied from a book hidden on the seat, the inspector pounced upon the boy with all the severity that he deemed such a piece of cheating to merit. The next moment he wished he had been less hasty. To his astonishment and sorrow, he found that the little fellow upon whom he had come down so sharply had lost both hands, and was working with might and main to get the passage down with the toes of his right foot. Perhaps the master of a certain English school did not feel much happier than that inspector when on one occasion he sought to preserve discipline. He had been annoyed by the boys eating in school, and to stop the practice had threatened severe punishment. For a time he was troubled no further, but one day he saw a boy right in front of him moving his jaws. "You are eating," said the master. "Bring me what you have in your pocket." The boy hesitated, and then took from his pocket an old dry piece of cocoanut ice. He neither denied nor admitted the offense, but he took the punishment bravely. After school the boy came up to the master and said, apologetically, "I wasn't eating, sir." "I saw you," said the master. "No, sir," replied the boy; "I was getting my false teeth right. I have false teeth, and I was getting them straight." He had borne unmerited punishment rather than let the boys know the truth. Their ridicule was more to be feared than the teacher's anger.

Origin of Blind Man's Buff.

Blind man's buff is of French origin, and of very great antiquity, having been introduced in England in the train of the Norman conquerors. Its French name, "Colin Maillard," was that of a brave warrior, the memory of whose exploits still lives in the chronicles of the middle ages. In the year 999 Liege reckoned among its vallent chiefs one Jean Colin. He acquired the name of Maillard from his chosen weapon, being a mallet, wherewith in battle he used literally to crush his opponents. In one of the feuds, which were of perpetual occurrence in those times, he encountered the Count de Tourain in a pitched battle, and, so runs the story, in the first onset Colin Maillard lost both his eyes. He ordered his squire to take him in the thickest of the fight, and, furiously brandishing his mallet, did such fearful execution that victory soon declared itself for him. When Robert of France heard of these feats of arms he lavished favor and honors upon Colin, and so great was the fame of the exploit that it was commemorated in the pantomimic representation that formed part of the rude dramatic performances of the age. By degrees the children learned it for themselves, and it took the form of a family sport. The blindfolded pursuer, as, with bandaged eyes and extended hands, he gropes for a victim to pounce upon, in some degree repeats the action of Colin Maillard, the tradition of which is also traceable in the name of blind man's buff.

The Vain Canary.

"Do you know," said the observant gentleman, "that, with the exception of a peacock, I believe a canary bird is the vainest of all creatures? Both my wife and myself are very fond of pets, and we keep several of these little songsters always in the house. One of the cages was very old, having been in the family for years, and was used as much for tradition's as for economy's sake. I had frequently remarked to my wife that I believed the occupant of this cage was ashamed of his shabby dwelling place, and observed with envious eyes the fact that the other songsters were more artistically lodged. Eventually the old cage collapsed, and it became necessary to purchase a new one. In order to test my belief in the intelligence of my feathered friend I made it a point to get him the prettiest little brass house that I could find. The effect was magical. No sooner was he turned into his new house than he began to sing as he had never sung before, completely drowning out the music of the other birds, and behaving otherwise in a manner altogether becoming his sudden rise in life."—New York World.

Don'ts for the Table.

Certain books of manners printed in England more than two centuries ago, enjoined various rules upon young children, and we may be sure that the youthful American colonist also read and digested such sapient hints. One little manual of etiquette widely circulated among our forbears shows some things which the child was trained not to do: Never sit down at the table till asked, and after the blessing. Ask for nothing; tarry, till it be offered thee; speak not. Bite not thy bread, but break it. Take salt only with a clean knife. Dip not the meat in the same. Hold not thy knife upright, but sloping, and lay it down at right hand of plate, with blade on plate. Look not earnestly at any other that is eating. When moderately satisfied leave the table. Sing not, hum not, wriggle not.

Fishes Can Be Drowned.

Fishes, like other animals, need air. If they could not get it they would be suffocated just as you would if you were locked up in an air-tight trunk. When the sea is frozen for miles, as in the Arctic ocean, the fishes find it very hard to come to the surface, and must then "breathe" the air which is dissolved in the water. You have often seen the tiny bubbles which collect on the inside of a glass which has been standing full of water over night. Well, that is the air which has been dissolved in the water, and after the glass has been tapped, so that all these bubbles come to the top, fishes could not live in that water. In other words they would drown.

The Irish in War.

The prominence of the Irish troops in both the British and Boer sides in the South African conflict is in line with the prominence Irishmen have taken in fighting the world over for centuries. Both Kitchener and Roberts are Irishmen, and many of the greatest names in Europe are born descendants of Irishmen who fought and distinguished themselves upon the continent in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Lecky estimates that no less than 400,000 Irishmen laid down their lives on European battlefields in the course of a hundred years, and the Count Dillon, who commanded the French army in the reign of Louis XV., was an Irishman pure and simple. With an enthusiastic love for fighting for fighting's sake, the Irish combine a readiness of witty repartee unexcelled in the natives of any other country.

Automobile Arch in Paris.

An arch surmounted by a reproduction of the latest type of automobile is soon to be erected at the extremity of the Avenue de la Grand Armee in Paris, to the memory of Lavassor. Lavassor did much to promote the interests of the automobile. This is doubtless the first instance of the reproduction of the motor vehicle into sculpture.

Utilitarianism and Altruism.

In his article, "Intorno all' Utilitarismo dello Stuart Mill," in the Rivista Italiana di Filosofia, M. Tuccante states that Mill advanced upon Bentham in being more psychological, and thereby "transforming the formula of utilitarianism," so that altruism ceased to be a mere fiction or comedy.

Balzac a Terror to Printers.

With no inborn literary facility, with an inborn artistic conscience that drove him on in untiring pursuit of perfection, Balzac filled the vast chasm between his thought and its expression with countless pen strokes and by methods of composition all his own, the exact reverse of those of Dumas, writing at white heat, never rewriting, or of Hugo, who said, "I know not the art of soldering a beauty in the place of a defect, and I correct myself in another work."

Balzac began with a short and sketchy and slipshod skeleton, making no attempt toward sequence or style, and sent it, with all its errors, to the printer. Proofs were returned to him in small sections pasted in the center of huge sheets, around whose wide borders soon shot from the central text rockets and squibs of the author's additions and corrections fired by his infuriated fist. The new proofs came back on similar sheets, to be returned to the printer again like the web and tracks of a tipsy spider. This was repeated a dozen or, it is said, a score of times, always with amplifications, until his typesetters became palsied lunatics. He overheard one of them as he entered the office one day say: "I've done my hour of Balzac. Who takes him next?" Typesetter, publisher, author, were put out of misery only when the last proof came in, at its foot the magic "Bon a tirer."—Scribner's.

General Grant Owns Up.

When General Grant came to Liverpool and was entertained at the town hall, a quite unknown Liverpool man wrote to the mayor with many apologies, but asking if he might take the liberty of asking for a few minutes' conversation with the great soldier. The mayor hesitated, but found a way of mentioning the matter to the great man, who, without hesitation, said, "Certainly; let the gentleman come." He came. He said to the general: "Now, sir, utter amateur as I am, I have followed every step of the war, and I think I understand every movement except one. On such a day you were there and the southerners were there," pointing to plans on a map that he had brought. "Now, it seems to me that you ought certainly to have gone there, whereas you went there," pointing again. General Grant, the usually taciturn and when not taciturn phenomenally terse, just took the cigar from his mouth and said: "You're right, sir! Infernal blunder!" And in a moment the amateur strategist, beaming now, was courteously dismissed.—"That Reminds Me," by Sir Edward Russell.

A Natural Mistake.

A few years before his death Allen G. Thurman of Ohio was engaged as counsel in a lawsuit which was tried before a country judge in one of the small towns in the central part of the state. Opposing Judge Thurman was a young lawyer named Cassidy, who wore his hair pompadour, assumed an air of great dignity and was apparently greatly impressed with his own importance. Upon several occasions during the progress of the trial Thurman referred to his legal opponent as "Mr. Necessity." The young man arose whenever this occurred and with great gravity reminded the court that his name was Cassidy. Finally, after the offense had been repeated about a dozen times, the pompous attorney exclaimed:

"I must again remind counsel upon the other side that my name is Cassidy. I can't understand why he persists in maintaining that it is Necessity."

"I beg the gentleman's pardon," said Thurman. "The reason I keep getting him confused with Necessity is, I presume, due to the fact that the latter knows no law."—Chicago Times-Herald.

The First Telescopic Comet.

"On the evening of Oct. 1, 1847, the Mitchells were entertaining a party of invited guests," writes Amelia H. Botsford of "The Mother of the Stars" in The Ladies' Home Journal. "But Maria Mitchell was not to be deterred by 'company' from following her custom of sweeping the heavens with the telescope every clear night. She slipped away and ran up to the observatory. Soon afterward she returned and told her father that she thought she had seen a comet. He hurried up to the observatory to look himself and declared that it was indeed a comet. This discovery entitled Miss Mitchell to the gold medal that had been offered some years before by the king of Denmark to the first discoverer of a telescopic comet, and it was struck off and forwarded to her."

An Unspoken Hint.

"Most insulting man I ever knew," exclaimed the man with the breezy personality. "I'm never going to have anything to do with him."

"What has he been saying to you?"

"Nothing."

"What has he been saying behind your back?"

"Nothing. Every time I start to tell him a funny story he looks up at the clock."—Washington Star.

THE QUEER CRUSTACEAN.

Interesting Characteristics of Lobsters and Turtles.

Lobsters, when young and frivolous, change their shells several times a year, but as they grow older and, presumably, more sedate they are content with a new suit every summer. The lobster is his own tailor, and persons who have watched the process say that the difficulty seems to lie in getting rid of the old garb and not in fitting the new. First he is attacked by a series of convulsions lasting for several days. During these a faint line of breakage appears down the middle of the back, which gradually grows broader with every spasm. The headpiece is the first to break entirely, and suddenly a violent effort enables the lobster to withdraw his head, leaving the larger part of his eyes in the shell. After a rest of a few hours the struggle begins again, and the shoulders, or large claws, emerge, with effort so exhausting that nearly a day is required for recuperation.

During this time he presents a curious spectacle, with head and body completely out of the shell and only the tail inclosed. Then the convulsive movements are resumed, and shell by shell the tail covering is loosened, until, with violent struggles, the tail is free, and the lobster, looking as if he had been boiled, lies down for a sleep of two or three days.

The new suit grows with great rapidity and fits in perfect tailor made style, literally molded to the form.

Like the crab, which is most esteemed when "soft shelled," that is, at precisely this period, which is similar in both, the lobster is regarded by epicures as especially delicious when thus denuded of his shell covering, but as he hides carefully among the rocks he is seldom procurable.—New York Tribune.

AN EXAMPLE OF NERVE.

Warden McClaughry's Experience With an Almost Escaped Prisoner.

"Speaking of nerve," said one of the detectives at headquarters, "reminds me of Chief McClaughry of Chicago. He used to be warden at the state penitentiary down in Joliet, and he had the reputation of being the coolest man in Illinois. He was as shifty as any of the men he had to handle and as quick and calm about it as a regular Sherlock Holmes. Nothing could feaze him.

"One day McClaughry was sitting in his office at just about the time the men were being marched back to their cells from work. He was alone. There was a sound behind him, and, whirling round, he saw a convict who had passed the guard in some way creeping toward him with an ugly looking iron bar in his hand.

"'Don't you stir!' the man whispered. 'I'm going to get out of this if I have to kill you to do it.'

"'Oh,' McClaughry said, 'I thought you were going tomorrow!' The man stared at McClaughry and grunted, 'Wot?' McClaughry simply looked at him as though he didn't care much and said: 'They sent up your dismissal papers this afternoon, that's all. You've been such a model prisoner all the time that they decided to commute your sentence. You can go all right enough if you want to. You're not my prisoner any more. If you want to see your papers—why, I think—they're here in—in the drawer'— And before the poor fool could lift the bar to strike McClaughry had snapped a revolver out of the desk and leveled it at his head."—New York Sun.

Neither Saved Nor Earned.

Railroad people have an arrangement by which they can register the speed of a train. It looks like a steam gauge and is connected with the axle, so that the pointer registers the number of revolutions every minute. There are so many revolutions to the mile, and by an ingenious arrangement the number of miles an hour is shown upon the dial. The apparatus is expensive as well as delicate.

The late Jay Gould was one of the first to adopt it, and shortly after a register was placed in his private car Russell Sage was making a journey with him and inquired what it was. Mr. Gould explained the mechanism and the usefulness of the machine with great care. Mr. Sage was silent for a moment and then, looking up, inquired:

"Does it earn anything?"

"No; I think not," said Mr. Gould, with a smile.

"Does it save anything?"

"No."

"Then I would not have it in my car."—Chicago Record.

The Road to Success.

There is a mistaken notion that success in life is achieved only by hard effort. An "education" is not necessary to become successful in life, beyond thorough familiarity with the rudiments. An education comes to an industrious man as naturally as age. Ability to deliver orations is not necessary. Industry and honesty, which are easier than idleness and dishonesty, will achieve success for any man of ordinary ability. Success is easier than failure. Success seldom comes at once; it is a matter of years of good conduct and intelligent work.—Atchison Globe.

Fear In High Places.

A famous steeple climber was asked if he ever felt fear in his business.

"Of course I feel fear at times," he answered. "Fear is common to all mankind. Not to feel fear is not courage. To overcome fear is the true quality of courage. I divide the nerve force of a man into two parts—the impelling force and the restraining force—the same impelling force that causes a body of recruits at first to run under fire and the restraining force that causes them to overcome for various reasons the first natural fear. So, in climbing, one unused to it is by the natural impelling force of his nervous system afraid, afraid that his legs, his arms, his support, will give way and plunge him down. Shakespeare, who touched on all human emotions, touched on this feeling of fear in high places when in 'King Lear' he pictured Edward at the cliffs of Dover.

"The one way to get over the natural fear is by some restraining force from either within or without. I remember once when a new boy at sea was ordered aloft by the mate he trembled with fear and begged to be let out of it. 'Upon my soul, sir, I can't go up there.' This was his first impelling impulse. But, when the mate touched him up with a rope's end he was at the top of the mast so quick that the mate could not follow him. The pain on his outer nerves brought him to his senses and made him exert his restraining force. So if you happen to be with any one who shows signs of fear in a high place a few smart slaps on the face will bring him to himself. The right medicine for unconquerable fear in a high place is immediate pain on the outside nerves."—Boston Transcript.

An Iron Czar.

In the "Memoirs of a Revolutionist," by Prince Kropotkin, the author says that Alexander II himself, for all he was willing to emancipate the serfs, was a man capable of singular harshness and even brutality. When Kropotkin was promoted and was called with other officers to the side of the czar, the latter congratulated them quietly, speaking about military duty and loyalty. "But if any of you," he went on, distinctly shouting out every word, his face suddenly contorted with anger—"but if any of you—which God preserve you from—should under any circumstances prove disloyal to the czar, the throne and the fatherland, take heed of what I say, he will be treated with all the se-veri-ty of the laws, without the slightest com-mise-ra-tion."

"His voice failed," says the author. "His face was peevish, full of that rage which I saw in my childhood on the faces of landlords when they threatened to skin their serfs 'under the rods.' He violently spurred his horse and rode out of our circle. Next morning, the 14th of June, by his orders, three officers were shot at Modlin, in Poland, and one soldier, Szur by name, was killed under the rods."

Cosmopolitan, New York World and The Spectator.

You wish to keep in touch with metropolitan life, through the medium of a great daily. The Thrice-a-Week World of New York is the equivalent of a daily and is a marvellous fund of knowledge concerning the happenings of the day. Each issue contains six to eight pages of eight columns each or over eight thousand columns of reading matter a year. In former days this would have cost you probably as much as $6.00 a year, by itself. Now you can have it, if you wish, in connection with your home paper and The Cosmopolitan Magazine. Three together one year for only $2.50.

Surprise Party.

A merry party assembled on Saturday evening at the home of Henry Jackson on Water street, the event being a surprise party on the head of the household—Mr. H. O. Jackson, and the success of the party can be charged up to Mesdames Blomburgh and Kruso, for they were the prime movers who engineered the party from beginning to end. The party reached the house at an early hour and everything was so well arranged that in a few minutes games of all kinds were being played and dancing and visiting was the order of the evening. At eleven o'clock supper, fit for a king, was served at the Kruso residence—next door neighbor, and the table fairly groaned with the weight of all the good things thereon to eat. After ample justice had been done to the excellent array of edibles the young folks finding the room too small to satisfy all the dancers, adjourned to Brink's hall where dancing was resumed and they danced to their hearts content. All present are unit in pronouncing it the "best thing of the kind ever attended." As a slight reminder of the occasion Mr. Jackson was presented with a beautiful combination book case and writing desk, which he values very highly, coming as it did from a party of friends.

Church vs. Lodge.

Anoka Union: There's a family in Anoka, husband, wife and child, who are suffering for the necessities of life. Time and again have they been hungry. The man and woman belonging to a church, a little way from Anoka, however, inquire around and you can find out which church, and yet the membership of that church have failed to help them, not from ignorance of their condition, mind you, for the pastor and some of the members know. The husband is a helpless invalid and the wife pretty near it.

Had the head of the family been a member of any one of the secret orders having an organization in the city, I'll bet all I'm worth that their wants would have been supplied as soon as the matter was brought to their attention. It's the business of the lodges to take care of those in need and they are never backward in doing charitable acts. But it would seem it was not of churches. No wonder the lodges are gaining fast in membership and no wonder men join them in preference to a church.

Physicians do not always know it all. A gentleman tells this experience: "Up to the age of 24 I never drank a cup of coffee. I had an attack of dyspepsia and consulted an eminent specialist. After examining me he said, 'Young man, coffee drinking has ruined your stomach; if you will give up coffee you will be well.' I paid him his fee of $25 and from that day began drinking coffee, and my dyspepsia passed off."

Library Entertainment.

The entertainment given by the school children of St. Hilaire Friday evening at Brink's hall was a grand success socially and financially. The hall was crowded to its utmost capacity fully 250 people having gathered to hear the program. The curtain was raised at 8 o'clock and the audience was held spell-bound during the entire performance until after the singing of the last selection.

The following is the program as rendered:

Song, Red, White and Blue by the school. A Little Boy's Thoughts by Eddie Whaley. Convict Joe by Anna Kortgaard. The Dead Dolly by Maud Dainard. Little Jim by Ester Olson. Hoop Drill by sixteen little girls. Grandma Allues Does by Bennie Hoff. The September Gale by Oscar Gunstad. Song—Sweet Memory Bells by six girls. Be True by Harold Peterson. Where Do You Live by Nellie Palmgren. The Owl and the Pussy Cat by seven boys. The First Snow Fall by Olga Swenson. Dialogue by Gorden Taylor, Archie Whaley, Albert Hall and Mamie Weagant. Song—Under The Old Umbrella by Emma Brummond and Andy Dahl. Fan Drill by twelve girls. Tale of a Bonnet by Elmer Kruso. Violet song by six girls. Bingen on The Rhine by Edna Dainard. For Basswood Chips by Egill Peterson. The Dead Kitten by Lulu Dainard. Song—The Kentucky Babe by Lillie Taylor. Dialogue The Gossips by Olga Hoff, Edith Dahl, Hulda Gigstad and Caroline Skele. Popping Corn by Alice Sorsoleil. The Polish Boy by Mabel Hannay. The Courting by Mildred Stranahan. The Trials of a teacher by Alice Sorsoliel and Oscar Gunstad. Play in two acts—Hiring a servant by Anton Hall, Eva Johnson, Myrtle Knowles, Hulda Gigstad, Anna Hall and Harry Carlson. Song—The Star Spangled Banner.

The sale of tickets amounted to $46.05 and after deducting the expenses will leave a neat sum for the purchase of books for the library.

The Imperial Drug Co., will in a few days receive a large consignment of the latest and most magnificent patterns and artistic designs in wall paper at 5 cents double roll up.

Sow Clean Seed.

Our Northwestern farmers are nearly all alive to the great advantage of sowing good seed—that is proven by the quality of wheat they market—very few of them, however, are careful enough to have the seed thoroughly cleaned.

Well natured and thoroughly clean seed, is, as a rule, to be had so easily that there seems no excuse for sowing weed seed or poor wheat.

SELECTION OF SEED WHEAT

1. Light, shrunken or weak seed of any kind should never be sown, if a full yield is desired. It makes no difference how the injury to the seed is brought about, whether by hot winds, wet weather, frost, animal or vegetable parasites, "burning" in the stack or bin or any other causes. If inferior seed be sown, a good crop cannot reasonably be expected.

2. The best and only safe varieties for the practical farmer to sow for his main crop in any given locality, are those that have already proved themselves adapted to that locality, or to some other locality having like conditions of soil and climate. This seed should have been produced under conditions of soil and climate as near as possible like that of locality where the seed is to be sown.

3. Continuous growth of wheat on the same kind of soil or under like climatic conditions, does not cause degeneration, but on the contrary, if proper care is taken in culture and seed collection and the seed be kept pure, wheat grown for a long term of years in any given locality should become, with each added year, better adapted to the conditions peculiar to that locality. A change of seed from one locality to another often results in serious losses, as it sometimes takes several years to overcome a seemingly slight change in environment. Importation of seed from a distance should be resorted to only when it is impossible to obtain suitable seed near home or when some new variety is to be tested, which latter should always be done on a small scale at first.

The Best in the World.

We believe Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best in the world. A few weeks ago we suffered with a severe cold and a troublesome cough, and having read their advertisements in our own and other papers we purchased a bottle to see if it would effect us. It cured us before the bottle was more than half used. It is the best medicine out for colds and coughs.—The Herald, Andersonville, Ind. For sale by The Imperial Drug Store.

HER HEART'S SECRET;

Or, UNDER A SPELL.

BY JEAN WARNER.

CHAPTER IV. (Continued.)

Twice the young girl read the letter, and then, flinging it upon the blazing hearth, she fell upon her knees with a low, pitiful moan.

CHAPTER V.

Father and Daughter.

Mr. Clive, senior, sat in his handsome library, with his pretty daughter on his knee. A walnut table stood beside his, on which, with the magic deftness that characterized all the household arrangements at Clive Towers, an elegant collation had appeared, immediately upon the master's arrival.

But neither the fragrant Mocha, steaming in the silver urn, nor the delicate slices of ham and chicken, had tempted the traveler's appetite. And even thoughtless Fannie noticed the shadow on her father's brow, the grave preoccupation of his manner, that all her childish prattle and loving caresses could not remove.

For, reserved and dignified, almost to sternness, with all the rest of the world, Robert Clive always unbent to his idolized daughter, whose bright beauty and bewitching grace recalled to him so forcibly the only love of his life—the wife whom he had worshiped with the strong, silent, passionate devotion that only such natures know.

For ten years Robert Clive had been a widower, and until the fair, sweet face of Agnes Clive smiled down upon him from the carved oaken frame above his fireside, still her gentle image remained enthroned within his heart—that heart whose dark secrets she had never sought to read, whose love she accepted gladly and unquestioningly, whose life she had brightened, even as the summer sunbeam brightens and warms the surface of the waters, whose cold, silent depths it can never hope to reach.

"And so you have turned out a full-fledged young lady, puss?" said the father, tenderly, smoothing the long brown hair that rippled over Fannie's shoulders—her mother's own dark, silken hair. "School books thrown aside forever, eh? Nothing more to be learned by this wise little head? That diploma is alarming—chemistry, botany, meteorology. Why, you must be a regular epitome of science, my pet. I wonder if you can say the multiplication table through?"

"Now, papa," pouted Fan, "the idea of your talking that way to me. Though I was a little stupid about fractions; I always got them wrong side up, until Sybil showed me which number went on top. She took the first prize in mathematics, you know. She is awfully clever. The masters used to say she had a head like a man's.

"Ah, indeed. I doubt if this is a recommendation," said Mr. Clive, absently. "A woman with a man's head must be something of a monstrosity."

"Now, papa, I don't mean that, of course," said Fannie, in an injured tone. "I only mean that her head is so clear, and steady, and thoughtful—not full of dressing, and dancing, and flirting, like all other girls."

"Like all other girls, eh?" said Mr. Clive, laughingly pinching the pretty cheek. "And who is this young lady who seems such an alarming exception to the rule of her sex?"

"Why, Sybil. Papa, don't you remember I wrote you all about my dearest friend, Sybil Wraye?"

"Sybil!" repeated her father, the shadow deepening upon his face, as if the name were musical to him—"Sybil Wraye! And pray, my pet, who is this wonderful Sybil Wraye, who can make such deep emotions in my little girl's light heart?"

"Oh, dear! Papa, don't you remember I wrote you all about her—a great, long letter, all criss-crossed?"

"I remember the letter, I think," answered Mr. Clive, with a half-smile; "but as for the contents, my dear, the criss-crossing you spoke of made them so much Chaldee to me."

"And you couldn't read it?" exclaimed Fannie, in dismay. "Well, well. I suppose it don't make much difference, as you can see her to-morrow for yourself."

"What!" exclaimed the father with a start. "Is the young lady here?"

"Oh, yes, papa. Don't you know, I told you I was going to bring her home with me? But, oh, dear! I forgot, you couldn't read the letter. She is the dearest, sweetest, loveliest creature; and between you and me, papa"—Fannie nodded her head sagely—"Bertie is more than half in love with her already. It's the most delightful thing that could have happened to me next," and the rosy lips parted in an arch smile—"next to falling in love myself."

"Nonsense, my dear!" said her father, sharply. "Don't let me hear you mention such a ridiculous thing again. you and Herbert are both too young for too young, to think of such serious subjects as matrimony. He has his way to make in the world, his own way to make—he must be hampered by no ties as yet."

"Oh, now, dear papa!" said Fannie, coaxingly, "there's that ugly line I hate to see come across your forehead. Let me kiss it away. It makes you look just like the picture of Uncle Basil, hanging up stairs."

"Uncle Basil! like your Uncle Basil?" was the hoarse reply. "What do you know of him, child?"

"Nothing, except that he must have been very cross and ugly," laughed Fannie, twining her arm about her father's neck, "and I don't like my precious papa to look like him. You haven't touched your supper, papa, and Mrs. Wyllis fixed it so nicely for you. Let me help you to some of these nice berries; you don't know how delicious they are."

"Nothing to-night, my child—nothing more to-night!" he answered, shortly. "Ring the bell and have these things cleared away and then—then you had better go to bed, my dear. It is late, and I am very tired—very tired!" he repeated, wearily.

"Poor papa!" said Fannie, with affectionate anxiety, "you look very tired. Let me get my cologne and bathe your head, as dear mamma used to do—that always rested you."

"Not to-night!" was the quick answer that came almost painfully from the stern, set lips—"not to-night, my child. I am better alone—far better alone. Kiss me good-night, my dear, and—and"—Fannie was clasped to her father's breast in a sudden, close embrace—"may your mother's God bless you, my Agnes' child!"

"I wonder what makes papa so solemn?" soliloquized Fannie, as she prepared for her peaceful slumber. There is something wrong, surely. I haven't seen him this way before since the evening Herbert had that quarrel with a strange man in the woods. He don't like to hear Uncle Basil's name mentioned, and this unlucky tongue of mine is always letting it slip; and yet I know Uncle Basil was very good to papa. He brought him up like his own son, and started him in business, and left him heaps and piles of money. I should think it couldn't be a very great crime to speak of him; and I did think it would be a delightful thing for Herbert and Sybil to get married. I'm sure, if I looked all over the world, I could not pick out a sweeter sister. But, dear, dear! people do go so crooked, and when it seems just as easy to walk along smooth and straight."

And with this conclusion, which was an unusually cynical one for our pretty philosopher, Fannie turned her rosy cheek to the pillow and peacefully slept

For a quarter of an hour after his daughter had left him, Robert Clive paced up and down his spacious library, with clouded brow and stern, set lips.

Then, as if coming to a sudden determination, he pulled the bell cord, and told the answering servant that he wished to see Mrs. Wyllis.

The housekeeper entered the room ere he was conscious of her approach, and stood, with folded hands, beside the marble hearth, on which, despite the advanced season, a few logs were burning with welcome heat.

She cast one of her quick, stealthy glances from beneath the white eyelashes, at the dark, moody countenance of her master, and the faintest shadow of a smile rested for an instant around her thin lips; then, in a quiet, respectful voice, she asked "Mr. Clive's pleasure?"

"Ah! you are here," he said, pausing in his restless walk. "Be seated, my good Wyllis, if you please. I have something to say to you."

She obeyed him silently, folding her mittened hands one over the other, and letting her gray eyes fall demurely beneath their veiling lids.

"I merely wished to ask," said the master of Clive Towers, coming to a standstill before the hearth, "if you have been annoyed by any intruders here during my absence? I have reason to believe that that ruffian, who calls himself Basil Clive, has returned to this part of the country, and I fear may be bent on further acts of violence."

"Indeed, sir, I am sorry to hear it," was Mrs. Wyllis' meaning reply. "No, we have not been annoyed in any way as yet; though, really, sir, as far as my humble judgment goes, you were too lenient before—far too lenient. You should not have suffered so dangerous a character to escape so easily."

"I hoped and believed that I was done with him forever," Mr. Clive went on, in an excited tone; but the fellow seems to haunt my path like an evil fate. Only this morning I received another threatening letter, couched in the most ambiguous terms. He dares to menace me through my children."

"Ah! empty words, sir!" answered the housekeeper, scornfully. "How can such a wretched being harm you or yours? Have you not prospered, in spite of his threats and curses, in the past? How can they affect your children in the future?"

"I have prospered—yes," answered Mr. Clive, thoughtfully. "I have never feared aught for myself; yet, as we grow old, Wyllis, and look back upon the path we have trodden, the bravest of us sometimes tremble for the young feet that must come along the unknown ways; and the shadows we have passed through unharmed seem dark and terrible when they hang over the tender beings whom we would shield from even a passing cloud. If I could buy off this vindictive being with half my fortune, I would give it gladly for for peace and rest."

"Have you offered to—to compromise with him, sir?"

"Aye; but he will accept no compromise," was the bitter reply; "nothing but what he calls justice—full and complete justice."

"He is mad," said Mrs. Wyllis, composedly.

"Aye, he is mad!" repeated Robert Clive, fiercely. "Let him dog my pathway as he will, he shall never wrest from me my children's birthright! Let him do his best to poison the cup of life whose fullness and sparkle he has always envied; let him plead as he will for his child! His child! What is his child to me? What is his child's future, compared to the future of mine? some low-born, low-bred, nameless outcast, unfit to breathe the same air, to tread the same ground, with child of mine!"

Who was the white-robed figure that gliding, noiselessly, by the half-closed door, caught these words? What cruel bard did they conceal that gave wings to her flight?

CHAPTER VI.

A Companion Picture.

Over the velvety lawn, where fountains flung their silvery spray—over beds of sleeping flowers, and graceful nymphs and roguish fawns hid their marble forms amid clumps of shrubbery—down the steep river path, artistically shielded by dwarf trees and tangled vines, that seemed flung together in one of nature's most frolicksome moods—over the stone wall that here marked the boundary of the Clive estate, Sybil fled like a hunted doe.

The white wrapper she wore was wet with dew; the Shetland shawl she had thrown over her head and shoulders was heavy and damp. But she did not feel the chill touch of the night air that crept up, laden with mists, from the river. Her cheeks were burning, her head throbbing with a fever heat, that no breeze, no moisture could allay.

She had no right, no place, in that princely home, whose stately shadow loomed up so darkly behind her. Nay, perhaps—perhaps she had the truest, best right; but it could never be asserted, never be acknowledged, never be obtained!

It was a right that had been a curse of her past—and she pressed her hand to her wildly-beating heart—and would be a more dark and bitter curse to her future.

Fannie and Herbert, those two bright, joyous beings who had striven to fling their own glad sunshine over her shadowed life—who would not see, would not recognize, the barrier that separated them—had taken her by the hand, and, despite her own will, led her into the flowery paths in which they trod.

Oh, heaven! what cruel, evil fate was it that made her their enemy—their enemy by birth, their enemy by blood, their enemy by a dark and awful vow a dreadful vow, to which the dead had borne witness, and that echoed still, in all its first fierce passion, through the storms and changes of five-and-twenty years?

A shudder convulsed the young girl's frame, as she paused for a moment in her rapid flight to take breath and look around her.

She was at the foot of the hill on which Clive Towers was situated, and the broad river rolled in silvery waves almost at her feet—that same river whose tossing waters she and Herbert had watched on the first night of their acquaintance, a brief three weeks ago.

He had said then that some intuition told him that they would be warm friends yet; and were they not friends? Aye, that pale, agonized face, that quivering lip, added more than friends.

Had she been mad, or dreaming, for the past three weeks? What feeling was it she had allowed to creep into her heart? What Lethe-draught had she tasted, that she had dared, even for one brief instant, to think of happiness—she, Sybil Wraye, the nameless outcast, unfit to breathe the air, to break the bread, to tread the ground, with the happier ones of earth?

How those stern, haughty words had stung her! What a poisoned dart they had left in her already tortured heart!

But it was no time to brood over them now. The imperative summons she had received that evening must be obeyed. In the graveyard by the river, someone awaited her who must not wait in vain.

She had a dim recollection of the place. She had been taken there once before, years and years ago, when a nameless grave had been opened, and, in the solemn stillness of a summer midnight, her mother had been laid away to rest.

She could not be far from the spot now. Aye, those dark old yews, stretching out their heavy branches just beyond her, shaded the moss-grown gate that led to the family burial place of the Clives.

It had long ago been abandoned by the family at the Towers. Old Basil Clive was the last of them buried there, and his grave was green with the sunshine and showers of five-and-twenty years.

The dark old gravestones were crumbling away, and the grass grew long and rank; only the stout fence, whose timbers defied the attacks of time, and a certain terror that surrounded the spot, prevented the grave yard of the haughty Clives from being turned into a pasture or picnic ground.

The present Mr. Clive did not even recognize the bit of wildwood as a portion of his property, and took no heed of its neglect or desolation, though his own parents lay buried therein.

Sybil's mind was too clear and strong to be influenced by superstitious fear, but she could not repress the feeling of natural awe that crept over her as she crossed over the moss-grown threshold of the gate that led into this abode of the dead.

High above all the other tottering monuments rose the granite shaft. "Sacred to the Memory of Basil Clive," and beneath it stood a man whose tall, athletic form seemed as strong and enduring as the granite itself—a man whose bronzed face and dark, fierce eyes brightened and softened into wondrous tenderness as Sybil, with a low cry, half joy, half pain, sprang into his arms and called him "Father!"

"My brave girl!" he answered, in a voice whose deep tones quivered with emotion. "I knew you would not fear to come, though we have to choose strange and lonely meetings, my Sybil. It will not always be thus, my darling—'twill not always be thus."

"You are in danger here," she said, clinging to his bosom, and lifting her pale, anxious face to his. "Oh, father dear father!—why did you come here to seek me? Let us fly—let us both fly far, far away, where we can find safety and peace!"

"Safety and peace!" he repeated, bitterly. "These are not words for me, or for you, either, Sybil. Justice and right is our motto, child, and right—justice and right, at any cost—at any cost!"

"Has not the cost been to great already?" she whispered. "And the gain, where is it? Oh, papa, papa! think of your homeless wanderings, your lawless life! Think of me, friendless, lonely, forsaken, haunted by day and by night by fears I dare not shape into words! Think of your cheerless age, my blighted youth! Has not the cost been already far, far too great?"

"Let him who must pay the reckoning look to it!" was the fierce reply. "We must not stop to count the cost, Sybil. Not a pain, not a sorrow, not a fear of yours, but shall be repaid a thousand-fold! Only trust me, my darling. Listen to me, obey me. It is only of your future I think—for your future I plan. My own is darkened, hopelessly; you are the only gleam of hope and sunshine left to gladden my troubled way."

"Then take me with you, papa!" she cried, eagerly. "Oh, if I can brighten your life, soothe your sorrows, take me with you; and, far away from here, in some happier land, we can live unknown and unnoticed, blessed in each other's love, satisfied in each other's company, seeking nothing else, papa—nothing, nothing else. Life is too short to waste in endless warfare, in endless struggles. Dear papa, let us choose at last, safety and peace!"

"Is it my child who speaks?" was the stern rejoinder—"my Sybil, whose heart and soul I have striven to mould into a counterpart of my own? Or has the soft wind of luxury made a changeling of the only being I have left to love? It would be my fate—my dark, evil fate—to lose even my child! Go from me, then, if you will; choose your own way; separate your cause from mine; live in safety and peace with the pampered children of fortune; but be child of mine no more! My ways are ways of struggle, and darkness, and peril, but I have followed them only to lead you into the light. I can travel them alone, for the past will have its stern duties even though the future may have lost its hopes. Go! Leave me, Sybil; you shall want for nothing. Lawless and homeless though your father be, he can provide for you amply and generously. Take your own way. There!"—he pointed up the steep hill, on whose summit rose the stately crest of Clive Towers—"there, through peril, privation, death if need be, lies mine!"

"Oh, father, father!" she cried, in tones of quivering pain, "what cruel words are these? You are the only being on earth who I dare—dare to love—you; whose wrongs have been my wrongs, whose sorrows have been my sorrows, whose life has been my life! Take me to your heart, father! Oh, let no shadow or suspicion cast me out of that one sure resting place! Take me to your heart, for, in sorrow or in gladness, I am your child—your Sybil—yours, only yours!"

"Mine—only mine!" he repeated, clasping her in his strong arms. "Mine—only mine! Remember that, Sybil! Mine, until honorably and proudly, in your own name and from your own fireside, I can give you to another, noble and worthy enough to claim the daughter of Basil Clive. Until our work is done, our purpose gained, you are mine—only mine! And now to business, dear; for my own time is short. I must be far from here before the dawn. Tell me all you have learned while in my enemys house. You have done well and wisely, so far. You have gained entrance into the foeman's camp. You have not a woman's wit unless all the weak spots in the fortifications are known to you. Tell me all—all! Surely my dead father's curse falls in some way upon the sunlit pathway of Robert Clive? Surely the shadow is not all—all mine?"

And the dark eyes flashed with a vindictive fire, as Basil Clive drew his daughter to a seat on the base of the monument beside him, and listened eagerly for her words.

For more than an hour they conversed together in low, agitated tones, and when at length they arose, Sybil's face wore a white, wan expression of despair that would have touched any heart not scathed by the smouldering fires of a long-cherished hate.

"Go back to them, child," said Basil Clive, as his tall form towered up in the shadow of the granite monument. "You must go back to them! It is not the time to falter and shrink now. Go back to Robert Clive's threshold, and curse the bread he eats, the air he breathes, with the presence of the innocent being he has so cruelly wronged! If you have kept your eyes shut and your ears closed, hitherto, let them be alert and vigilant now. I have striven, fairly, openly, to gain justice at his hands. I have tried by threats and violence to wrest it from him. Now we must meet him with his own weapons—falsehood and fraud. We must steal our rights, since we may not win them. Here, above my father's ashes, I renew the oath taken five-and-twenty years ago! Hate, undying hate, against the man that has wronged me and mine! Hate that shall live in my blood as long as a drop of it flows in living veins! Hate that shall burn forever and forever, until quenched by ample and unstinted Justice!"

(To be Continued.)

ORIGIN OF LEAP YEAR.

Scotch Queen Margaret Started It and Urged Woman's Rights.

There is quite an interesting and little known history connected with the introduction of leap year. In 1288, when Queen Margaret reigned over Scotland, this gracious lady decreed that during her reign every maiden in her realm, whether of high or low degree, should propose to the man that she loved, and that if the man were not betrothed already he must either wed the maid or pay a heavy fine.

On the death of Queen Margaret the women were urgent in their demands that their new privileges should be continued. To appease them an act of parliament was passed which made it lawful for maidens to do the proposing every leap year.

Not all the romantic ideas of our ancestors have been thus perpetuated, and comparatively few were transferred by our pilgrim fathers across the Atlantic. For instance, in the good old days it was the custom in many towns, and even villages, in England to own a house where poor couples, after they had been wedded in church, could entertain their friends at small cost, the only outlay, indeed, being entailed by the purchase of such provisions as they chose to bring with them.

In Hertfordshire there was such a house, which had a large kitchen with a caldron, large spits and a dripping pan; also a large room for merriment and a furnished boudoir. Dishes, table linen and bed linen were among its possessions.

In Essex there was a house very much like this, which was used by the poorer folks for dining in after they had returned from church.

In some of the old English histories one may read that in 1456 Roger Thornton granted to the mayor and community of Newcastle upon Tyne the use of the hall and kitchen belonging to Thornton's hospital for the use of young couples "when they were married to make their wedding dinner in and receive the offerings and gifts of their friends."

At Hamelin there still exists a large building which is known as the wedding house. It was erected during the second decade of the seventeenth century.—Boston Globe.

THE LAST RESORT.

A Grim Tragedy Which Followed Close of New-found Happiness.

"Helen!" called a man in a muffled voice, as he pushed open the door to the squalid apartment at the top of the tenement.

"What? You, George?"

"Yes, dear. Get up; rub your eyes! Look what I have brought!"

The man lit a candle and pushed a small table to the side of a bed. Then he threw upon it one roll of bills after another and handfuls of gold until the top was literally covered.

"Look, my poor girl! It's money—real money! Touch it! Take some of it in your hands! Rub your eyes and count it! Ten thousand dollars! Think! All ours! What happiness! Starvation, ruin, the street, the morgue, were before us this morning. Now we're saved; we shall—"

The woman stared at the money and then into her husband's face.

"Where did you get it?"

"Oh, that's all right. I got it easily enough—I mean, I won it. Yes, dear, won it. Of course, you don't understand. At play, my little girl. At the gaming table. Last chance. Just like a novel, my pet. I risked everything on the turn of a card; no, I mean the cast of a die. No, hell; I mean on the fall of a ball. And there's the money. It will buy food and fire. Take it—listen! Somebody's on the stairs! Hide the money! Put out the light! Good-by, Helen. I'll never be taken alive!"

When the police burst open the door a moment later to arrest the murderer they found much money on the table and a pale-faced, girlish woman dead upon the pillow.

In the yard back of the tenement, five stories below, they found the body of a man.—Philadelphia Times.

The March of Invention.

"I've no doubt a good many people will listen in vain for Gabriel's trumpet when he finally comes."

"How so?"

"Because he's pretty sure to use a megaphone."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Horticultural Observations.

Every family in the country should have a supply of celery for home use, and this supply should become available in the early summer. It is none too early now to plant celery seed for the early garden crop. A 10-cent package of the seed will give all the plants that can be used by a good-sized family. They should be sown at once in a box in the house and be kept covered with a paper for a few days. If the air of the room is fairly warm and the ground moist, in the course of eight or ten days they will have sprouted. The paper should be removed in five or six days from time of planting the seeds. Of course the soil for the seed must be good loam, fairly rich.

* * *

Care must be taken to secure the right degree of moisture for the little plants, as their rootlets are at first very near the top of the soil, and will quickly dry up under the double influence of air and heat. Enough water should be applied to render the ground moist, but not enough to keep it wet. When the plants begin to develop new leaves is when they should be "pricked out"—that is, transplanted into other and larger boxes or a hot bed. As few have hot beds, boxes will be the natural receptacles. It may take a number of boxes to accommodate the two or three hundred plants that the family will require. In setting them out anew do not give each plant too much room, for they have yet to be transplanted into the open ground, and the tall-growing, deep-rooting plants are preferable to the stocky, wide-rooting ones.

* * *

The transplanting into the open ground comes at a time when some of the early crops, such as radishes, lettuce and peas, are near the end of their usefulness, and the celery plants may be set out between rows of these. The ground should, however, be rich, so that the development of the celery plant may be rapid, which has much to do with its crispness. The old trench system need not be followed, but the bleaching can be accomplished by means of boards placed against the growing plants. This is now the practice of some of the largest commercial growers. Others heap up dirt around the plants as they grow. If the seed be sown now and both transplantings be early, the plants should be large enough to bleach by the middle of July, and by the middle of August should be suitable to go onto the table of the grower. Celery is not hard to grow, and there is no good reason why every farm home should not have an abundant supply.

Pruning Fruit Trees.

Charles Black says: Many trees have every care but pruning, and this is a great mistake. Trim while the tree is young, as if left till late the limbs become large and it is a great check to the tree. The growth and habit of each variety must be considered when pruning. March and April are the best months. If trimmed in winter, cut with long stubs, and cut them close in May or June, and they will heal over quickly. Pruning while the tree is dormant induces wood growth, but in summer induces fruit growth. In pruning Kieffer pears, trim the first year to 10 or 12 inches, second year cut out all surplus branches and head in all limbs a foot if they have made much growth; in this way the fruit will set in center of tree and not break the limbs. Other slow growing trees will not need such severe pruning as the Kieffer. The quince needs severe annual pruning, leaving the young wood on the main branches. The apple should not be so severely pruned as the pear and quince, but should be trimmed annually, commencing with the young tree. There is no fruit that needs more thinning-out in the head than the apple, giving the light an opportunity to get in and color the fruit. The inside wood of the peach that is not needed should be cut out in June, and in some cases thin the fruit in this way. The plum needs little if any pruning after it gets to bearing, as it makes little if any wood after that time. In small fruits cut out the old and dead bearing wood in winter, but do not cut back the bearing canes till the growing season.

Worn-Out Grass Fields.

It does not pay to keep fields in grass long after they have ceased to be profitable. One has but to ride through almost any part of our country in June, even in the good years for grass to see some meadows that utterly fail to produce the crops they should. If the meadows could make themselves understood they would tell us that they have been run down by constant cropping without putting anything back, and have been also further sinned against by being trodden hard by horses, sheep and cattle. With halfway proper care and treatment from year to year such lands would still be giving good results.

As soon as a meadow begins to run out it begins to get weedy. It is then of little use to try to recover the former conditions by manuring. It is far easier to plow the ground and put it into some crop that will require working of the ground. In some localities such meadows are turned over and reseeded at once with grass seed, but this requires a good deal of work with the plows, cultivators and harrows. The soil that has not been turned over for some years has a strong tendency to remain in lumps and clods, especially if the sod is still quite thick.

The most simple way to renew the land is to put it into some crop other than grass and keep it so for a number of years. If it can be put into some crop that is to be heavily manured so much the better for the subsequent grass crops. Rotation, however, is not a necessity to the meadow. In Europe meadows are kept permanently in grass and it is said that the oldest ones are the best. This result, however, is obtained by systematic manuring, and the keeping off of all animals. No attempt is made to make the meadow produce both a hay crop and serve as a pasture.

Sowing Grass Seed with Grain.

The sowing of grass seed with grain is an old practice that still survives. It has some things in its favor and some things against it. It used to be thought that the grain helped the grass seed to "catch," and that the young grass was helped by the protection it received from the grain. This, however, is not regarded as a reason to be given consideration in the growing of a grass crop. So far as best growth is concerned there is little doubt that the grass that is given the entire field will do the best. It will get the sunlight and moisture from the first and will make a far better growth than when dwarfed and shaded by grain.

The only point to receive attention should be that of economy. Which is most profitable, to grow the grass alone or with grain? If the grass is grown alone there is the expense of plowing, harrowing, seeding and the rent of the land for a year. If it is sown with grain the grain crop must bear the expense of the tillage and sowing. When the grain is cut off the grass is still growing and will make a good sod before winter sets in. There has been something lost in the grass crop for the first year, but there is a saying in the expense. This is the course still being followed by a good many of our farmers and it is yet to be demonstrated that it is not as good a course as the other. It is true that the grass being shaded is not as strong as if it had grown in the open sun and air from the first. But when the grain is cut, if it be spring-sown grain, the heat of the summer will be past and the cool days of autumn at hand. The grass will receive the autumn rains and will cover the ground with its leaves and fill the ground with its interlacing roots before snow falls. In the spring there is a meadow ready at hand. If the farmer can only resist the temptation to keep his stock off the grass in the fall he will be doing well.

The New-Born Calf.

It is shameful to let a young calf flounder on a slippery floor for hours, trying to stand up and get its supper. Throw so nothing, no nothing, on the calf; keep it clean, that's what the mother would request if she could talk. Start the milk without delay from every teat. An obstruction will milk out now that won't tomorrow morning. Bring on that "mess" thinned to a gruel—made fully blood-warm—and milk three or four quarts of milk from her into it, and see her suck it down. It helps to fill the great vacuum and keeps away the chills. See that the calf has found the ration. Give the cow some nice hay now, and it may be best to put a blanket on her, and then, if you need sleep, go to bed and sleep like a Christian, says a contributor to Home, Field and Forum.

I may have some credit marks at the day of judgment for more than 500 cows that I have lost sleep over to make sure they did not suffer needlessly when bearing young. If in good health, and fed and cared for right, not one cow in 100 will fail to clean within six hours. If one does fail, remove it without delay. My dairyman's father had all of his boys do the job before they were 21 years. With his fifty cows, the case of a retention of the afterbirth did not happen more than two or three times a year. I well remember my first attempt. It seemed that I would kill the cow, but I did not, and I never have even injured one since. I don't do it for my neighbors any more. I just order them to roll up their sleeves and go to business.

Don't increase the feed of a cow for, say, nine days after she calves. Treat her a great deal as though she was human. A cow can be petted and brushed and rubbed at that time.

Hauling Sheep or Corn.

A movement is on foot to stop the custom of hauling sheep to the corn, obviating the shrinkage of the stock in transit, says the Denver Post. Wyoming stockmen with large interests have made application to the Union Pacific for a special 30-cent rate on corn from Nebraska to all Wyoming points. Under the present custom, which is decidedly unsatisfactory, sheep are taken to the feeding grounds where corn is procurable at a cheap figure. The sheep shrink several pounds in weight while in transit, the cost of moving is considerable, and the sheep do not do as well as on their native grass. A year ago a firm at Fort Steele, Wyo., experimented upon feeding corn to sheep on the open range. The flocks were gazed as usual, but corn was fed through the agency of teams that hauled it at regular intervals during the day. Corn scattered broadcast on the ground on the snow will be picked up clean by sheep, and the time taken in picking it up, grain by grain, causes them to masticate and digest it thoroughly. The results attained were so satisfactory that it will probably become common on the ranges.

About Peach Growing.

Fertilize well. Do not use lime on young trees. Crimson clover has been very successful in giving the trees a strong, vigorous growth and its effects have been visible for several years. After the trees are in bearing, fertilize liberally. You cannot afford not to do so, as you will lose your crop and in some case your trees also if neglected—250 lbs. bone and 250 lbs. potash per acre each year. To ask an orchard to produce 6 tons per acre without food is folly. The speaker's orchard gave this yield the past year and the price of one ton paid all the cost of fertilizer and labor, but remember to do this the trees must be fed, besides when the trees are in such a healthy condition they will resist the cold of spring and winter much better. Pack your fruit honestly, putting just as good fruit on top of the basket as the bottom, but no better. The speaker marketed the past year 7,070 baskets which sold for $5,600, and in the past 9 years 46,445 baskets, which sold for $25,190. The average cost of picking, marketing, etc., has been 25 cents per basket, leaving 29 cents per basket net. —S. S. Voorhees.

How a Little Boy Was Saved.

Washington, D. C.—"When our boy was about 16 months old he broke out with a rash which was thought to be measles. In a few days he had a swelling on the left side of his neck and it was decided to be mumps. He was given medical attendance for about three weeks when the doctor said it was scrofula and ordered a salve. He wanted to lance the sore, but I would not let him and continued giving him medicine for about four months when the bunch broke in two places and became a running sore. Three doctors said it was scrofula and each ordered a blood medicine. A neighbor told me of a case somewhat like our baby's which was cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I decided to give it to my boy and in a short while his health improved and his neck healed so nicely that I stopped giving him the medicine. The sore broke out again, however, whereupon I again gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla and its persistent use has accomplished a complete cure." MRS. NETTIE CHASE, 47 K St., N. E.

ALABASTINE is a durable and natural coating for walls and ceilings, made ready for use by mixing with cold water. It is a cement that goes through a process of setting, hardens with age, can be coated and recoated without washing off its old coats before renewing. Alabastine is made in white and fourteen beautiful tints. It is put up in five-pound packages in dry form, with complete directions on every package.

ALABASTINE Should not be confounded with kalsomine, as it is entirely different from all the various kalsomines on the market, being durable and not stuck on the wall with glue. Alabastine customers should avoid getting cheap kalsomines under different names, by insisting on having the goods in packages properly labeled. They should reject all imitations. There is nothing "just as good."

ALABASTINE

Prevents much sickness, particularly throat and lung difficulties, attributable to unsanitary coatings on walls. It has been recommended in a paper published by the Michigan State Board of Health on account of its sanitary features; which paper strongly condemned kalsomines. Alabastine can be used on either plastered walls, wood ceilings, brick or canvas, and any one can brush it on. It admits of radical changes from wall paper decorations, thus securing at reasonable expense the latest and best effects. Alabastine is for sale by paint dealers everywhere.

SOME SHORT STORIES FOR THE VETERANS.

A Forgotten Hero—Major George Croghan and His Defense of Fort Stephenson —Great Generals Who Acted as Spies —Home-Made Tactics.

Burial of Sir John Moore.

(Old Favorite Series.)

Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note,
As his corse to the rampart we hurried;
Not a soldier discharged his farewell shot
O'er the grave where our hero we buried.

We buried him darkly at dead of night,
The sod with our bayonets turning;
By the struggling moonbeam's misty light
And the lantern dimly burning.

No useless coffin inclosed his breast
Not in sheet or in shroud we wound him;
But he lay like a warrior taking a rest,
With his martial cloak around him!

Few and short were the prayers we said,
And we spoke not a word of sorrow;
But we steadfastly gazed on the face that was dead,
And we bitterly thought of the morrow.

We thought as we hollowed his narrow bed,
And smoothed down his lonely pillow,
That the foe and the stranger would tread o'er his head,
And we far away on the billow!

Lightly they'll talk of the spirit that's gone,
And o'er his cold ashes upbraid him,—
But little he'll reck, if they let him sleep on
In the grave where the Briton has laid him.

But half our heavy task was done,
When the clock struck the hour for retiring
And we heard the distant and random gun
That the foe was sullenly firing.

Slowly and sadly we laid him down,
From the field of his fame fresh and gory;
We carved not a line, and we raised not a stone—
But we left him alone with his glory.
—Charles Wolfe.

A Forgotten Hero.

It is noteworthy that the reputation of our great soldiers was in every case built up of long as well as brilliant service. In no case has it been the result of any single deed, however heroic. In fact, others have performed single deeds of heroism surpassing in brilliancy, perhaps, any single deed of any of these great soldiers. In such cases, as a rule, these heroes are known only to the reader of abstruse history. A single instance will serve to illustrate: Just where the town in Ohio perpetuating the name of the first republican candidate for the presidency and the home of a more successful subsequent candidate for that high office, is now situated, was a wretched stockade called Fort Stephenson. Its armament consisted of one gun and a garrison of 160 men, commanded by Major-Gen. George Croghan, a young officer of 22. He was born not far from Louisville, Ky., in 1791, and came of fighting stock, for his father had been an officer in the continental army, and his mother was a sister of George Rogers Clark. Graduating from William and Mary college in 1810, he entered the army, was in the battle of Tippecanoe in 1811, and a year later was made captain in the Seventeenth infantry. With this rank he served under Harrison in 1812 and 1813, and so distinguished himself in a sortie from Fort Meigs that he was appointed an aid-de-camp with the rank of major, and assigned to the defense of Fort Stephenson. Lest Tecumseh and the Indians who were coming across country from Fort Meigs should make a flank attack, Harrison had authorized Croghan to burn the fort and retreat. This he did not do. "We are determined to maintain this place," he said, "and by heaven we will!" Harrison thereupon dispatched an officer to relieve him. But Croghan went to headquarters, carried his point, and when, on Aug. 1, the English commander summoned him to surrender, sent back a stout defiance. The next day the bombardment began, and toward afternoon an assault was ordered. The English soldiers, in three columns of 120 men each, were to attack three sides. The Indians were to storm the fourth; but as they came out of the woods into the open a steady and well-directed fire from the fort drove them back. The British troops, thus left to fight alone, came on bravely to the very gates, made every possible effort to get into the fort for two hours, and then retreated with all the officers and one-fifth of the men killed, wounded or missing. The wave of enthusiasm which rolled over the country as the result of this victory equaled anything of the kind seen in our day; but who today knows anything of the personality of Maj. Croghan?—Frank Leslie.

Great Generals Who Acted as Spies.

It is not difficult to gather how much importance military men attach to proper scouting or spying, from the fact that many of the most successful generals who have ever lived have even taken upon themselves the great and manifold dangers of doing the difficult work personally on the eve of momentous engagements. Foremost of these daring generals was the great Duke of Wellington, who is said to have spent a considerable portion of the night preceding the battle of Waterloo spying upon the enemy's position; he confessed to this on more than one occasion. It has been said, and the story was generally credited in the French army, that Wellington, eluding the outposts and sentries, actually went through the French lines, and heard the coming battle discussed by many prominent officers. But, while it is possibly true, this story lacks the stamp of probability, and was never, so far as known, confirmed by the hero himself or anyone who should have known. There is little or no doubt, however, that the duke took his life into his hands by spying upon the French position from perilously close quarters, and that he went absolutely alone and on foot a great part of the way, and thus he possessed himself of information that proved of very material value to him. The duke himself admitted that he spent the better part of an hour that night hiding in a dark ditch, spying upon the enemy, when he was supposed by the majority of his staff to be studying his plans for the battle. More than once before that, during the Peninsular war, Wellington had taken up the work of spies, rather than leave anything to anyone whose eyes he trusted less than his own. Nor was Wellington's great antagonist, Napoleon, less appreciative of the importance of spying, for it was quite a usual thing for him, when face to face with an opposing army, as the two forces were drawn up ready to do battle, to make his way into the enemy's camp as far as his discretion would let him, and study the position of his foe, at the risk of being shot or captured. And it is pretty well known that when Napoleon was contemplating the invasion of England he stole over the sea on many a dark night and landed at some spot on the south coast to discover the exact place which offered most facilities for the speedy landing of an army of invasion. How completely he formed his plans, and how nearly England was in his grasp at that time, are matters of history. Few generals have, however, dared to carry their work of spying so far into the enemy's camp as Lord Kitchener during his work in the reconquest of the Soudan. His extensive knowledge of the native habits and ability to converse in almost every dialect spoken north of the White Nile have been of the utmost service during his exploits.

Home-Made Tactics.

An inexperienced military officer is sure to encounter grave difficulties in the practical management of soldiers in the field. An English journal represents a scene at a general inspection of a volunteer battalion, in which Lieut. Tompkins—an excellent fellow, but a poor soldier—is called out to show the general and the British public what he knows. Says the general: "Now, sir, you have the battalion in quarter-column, facing south. How would you get it into line, in the quickest possible way, facing northeast?" "Well, sir," says Lieut. Tompkins, after fruitless consideration, "do you know, that's what I've always wondered?". The officer's ingenuity was not equal to that of Abraham Lincoln, when he was a captain of Illinois volunteers in the Black Hawk war. Mr. Norman Hapgood, in his "Life of Lincoln," relates that during this campaign Lincoln once had his company marching in a column twenty men wide, when he was suddenly confronted with a high fence with an open gate, through which only one man could pass at a time. He had no idea of the proper way to get his men into single file, so he halted the company and said: "This company is dismissed. But it will come together immediately after getting through that gate!"

Idle Soldiers.

Modern war is such a complex business, and so many things besides fighting have to be done, that a very large part of an army never fires a shot. Even of the soldiers actually opposed to the enemy, only a portion come into conflict in any battle. For instance, Gen. Buller must have had some 24,000 men at the battle of the Tugela river, yet we are told that only 10,000 troops went into action. The explanation of this apparently curious fact is that armies don't fight now in dense masses like long ago. The terrible hail of bullets from magazine rifles and Maxims, as well as the destructive power of shells charged with "high explosives," would annihilate an army in dense formation. Hence the fighting troops have to scatter themselves over a line 15, 20 and even 30 miles long. Of course, the chances of battle bring it about that, while the fighting becomes very hot and fierce in certain spots, the troops in other parts of the line don't come into contact with the enemy at all. This is why certain battalions lose an appalling number of men, while others come off with a few casualties. In the great battle of Koeniggratz—the biggest battle of this century—it is said that 92,000 Prussians and 80,000 Austrians did not fire a single shot.

War a Personal Matter.

Elliott Hook was cooking a beefsteak at Caloocan when a Mauser bullet hit the pan in which the steak was sizzling, knocked it about a rod and sprinkled Hook with hot grease. The disappointed soldier immediately loaded his rifle, and watched all day long to get a shot at the rebels, saying to his comrades: "I went into this war at the call of my country, but since that fellow spilled my meat it has become a 'personal matter.'" And he so regarded it until he sailed away from Manila.—San Francisco Wave.

Russia's Modern Naval Station.

Vladivostock, Russia's Pacific naval station, has developed remarkably within the last twenty years. Stone and brick have replaced everywhere the old wooden buildings. Full advantage has been taken of the great natural possibilities. The wharves, the railway station and the landing facilities are superior to those of any port in China.—Indianapolis News.

The Superfluous Stomach.

Dr. Carl Schlatter of Vienna, who not long ago showed that the stomach was a superfluous organ by removing that of a woman, who lived and got along perfectly well without one, has cast further doubts on the use of our internal machinery. He recently removed six feet of the small intestine from an Italian who had been stabbed in a brawl. That intestine is believed to play an important part in absorbing food into the system. The Italian, however, gained in weight after the operation and eight months after leaving the hospital reported that he had lost a few pounds; could not digest the solid food he had been accustomed to and didn't feel like working, though he was in pretty good health. The Lancet admits that Dr. Schlatter's operation shows that a third of the intestine may be dispensed with, but is astonished at the wonderful powers of adaptation of the human body.

BUTTER BY THE YARD.

Peculiar Way of Selling It to Students at Cambridge, England.

Probably Cambridge, England, is the only place in the world where one would be likely to find butter sold by lineal measure; but here, in accordance with the old custom, it is literally sold by the yard. For generations it has been the practice of Cambridgeshire dairy folk to roll their butter into lengths, each length measuring a yard and weighing a pound. Deftly wrapped in strips of clean, white cloth, the cylindrical rolls are packed into long and narrow baskets made for the purpose and thus conveyed to market. The butter women who, in white linen aprons and sleeves, preside over the stalls in the mart have no need of weights or scales for dispensing their wares; constant practice and an experienced eye enable them with a stroke of the knife to divide a yard of butter with almost mathematical exactness.

The university people are the chief buyers of this curiously shaped article. In addition to being famed for its purity and sweetness, Cambridge "yard butter" is eminently adapted for serving out to the university students in the daily commons. Cut into conveniently sized pieces, and accompanied by a loaf of the best wheaten bread, a stated portion is sent round every morning to the rooms of the undergraduates for use at the daily breakfast and tea.

A SUCCESSFUL FARMER.

Begun with Small Farm—Now Does Extensive Mixed Farming.

Within three miles of the town, going eastward, is the farm of Mr. W. Creamer, one of the municipality's largest and most prosperous mixed farmers. Mr. Creamer came to this country in 1880 and settled on a portion of the land which comprises his present enormous farm of 1,280 acres. In common with many others of a similar period, he experienced all the hardships and difficulties common to the absence of railway and market facilities. In no wise daunted, by energy, industry and indomitable will he was able to surmount all obstacles and has achieved an unparalleled success, and is known throughout the district as one of its pre-eminent farmers. His operations extend over 1,280 acres, two sections (the thought alone of so much land makes the eastern farmer dizzy); 800 acres of this is broken and the remainder is excellent pasture land and wood. This harvest he took off a crop of 500 acres of wheat and 200 of other grains. Four hundred acres are plowed and ready for wheat next spring. Mr. Creamer is, as has been stated, a mixed farmer of no mean proportions, having at the present time forty horses, sixty head of cattle and fifty pigs. The most modern farm buildings are found on this premises, the main building being a barn fifty-five feet square on a stone foundation, containing stabling for sixteen horses and a large number of cattle. The loft is stored with twenty-nine loads of sheaf oats for feed, and tons of hay; there is also a cutting-box. Another building of large dimensions is the granary, in which, after teaming large quantities to market, he still has stored 3,000 bushels of wheat. A crushing machine is in the building. There are a number of lesser buildings containing chicken house, pig pens and cattle sheds. The farm residence is a handsome frame structure of ample proportions; in connection with it is a woodshed. The water supply is unexcelled; besides house supply there is a well in the stables and a never-failing spring situate in a bluff, which never freezes. Surrounded by a thick bluff of poplars, extending in a semi-circle to the west, north and east, the winter storms are broken and accumulation of snow unknown. Added to his farming operations, Mr. Creamer conducts a threshing outfit for the season. His success is only one instance of what can be accomplished in western Canada.—Baldur (Man.) Gazette, Nov. 16, 1899.

There will be thousands remove to western Canada this year to engage in the pursuit of farming.

The Janitor Excused.

A few Sundays ago the preacher of one of the colored churches in this city complained about the church being so cold, and made inquiry about the janitor. While he was still taking one of the members walked up to the pulpit and whispered in the preacher's ear these words:

"The janitor was arrested last night while stealing coal."

Not another word was said on the subject.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

American in the London Hospital.

In no other hospital in London is the religion of any sect especially considered; but here are men's and women's wards reserved for the Jews, where their religious observances are carefully respected and carried out. They have their own kitchen, where food is prepared according to their belief, and from which every Jew in the hospital is served. A rabbi conducts service every Saturday, and I saw on the frames of the doors the places where the commandments are fastened. There are accomodations for eighteen men and fourteen women, but the Jewish wards are not large enough to accommodate all the Jews who seek admittance. There is but one Jewish nurse in the institution, and she is not among her own people, but is in one of the children's wards. Ward after I passed through, everywhere despair and agony and hopelessness catching after hope and comfort and rest; everywhere sunshine and flowers, yet the dark shadow of Azrael's wing was on the faces of scores of sunny-haired children and time-wrinkled men and women.—The National Magazine.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and, by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. O, How Happy I am to BE FREE from NEURALGIA

Is what Mrs. Archie Young of 1817 Oaks Ave., West Superior, Wis., writes us on Jan. 25th, 1900. "I am so thankful to be able to say that your SWANSON'S '5 DROPS' is the best medicine I have ever used in my life. I sent for some last November and commenced using it right away and it helped me from the first dose. Oh, I cannot explain to you how I was suffering from neuralgia! It seemed that death was near at hand. I thought no one could be worse. I was so very weak that I hardly expected to live to see my husband come back from his daily labor: But now I am free from pain, my cheeks are red, and I sleep well the whole night through. Many of my friends are so surprised to see me looking so well that they will send for some of your '5 DROPS.'"

RHEUMATISM "I have been afflicted with rheumatism for 2 years. I was in bed with it when I saw your advertisement in a paper, recommending SWANSON'S '5 DROPS' very highly. I thought I would try it. It has completely cured me, but I like it so well that I want two more bottles for fear I will get into the same fix I was before I sent for '5 DROPS,'" writes Mr. Alexander Futrell of Vanndale, Ark., Feb. 6th, 1900.

THEATER IN RUINS

POPULAR CHICAGO PLAYHOUSE DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Flames Spread With Such Rapidity That Many of the Occupants Escaped With Much Difficulty—Gallant Rescues of Laundry Girls by Firemen—Fire Started in the Laundry of the Iroquois Club—Fire Interrupted a Rehearsal—Loss Estimated at $190,000.

Chicago, April 1. — The Columbia theater, one of the oldest and most popular play houses in the city, was destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon, entailing a total loss of $190,000.

The fire was discovered in the laundry of the Iroquois club, which occupied apartments on the sixth floor of the building. It is supposed that some hot coals dropped from the stove to the floor. The flames spread with great rapidity and within ten minutes after the discovery of the fire the theater was beyond saving. Before the fire was extinguished four persons were injured.

A company owned by Klaw & Erlanger, and headed by Rogers brothers, presenting "Rogers Brothers in Wall Street," was playing an engagement at the theater. The fire interrupted the progress of a rehearsal and twenty men and women in costume were driven to the street in haste.

The early part of the fire was marked with gallant rescues of girls employed in the laundry of the Iroquois club, where the flames started. Two firemen climbed the fire escape to the sixth floor and carried the women, who had grown hysterical, to a place of safety. The rescuers were urged on by the cheers of thousands massed in the street below. A few minutes after the discovery of the fire the roof of the building fell with a crash, and to many it sounded like a great explosion. The collapse cause a general stampede among the spectators, and in the rush several were slightly bruised. Later when the cornice of the front of the building fell several firemen had narrow escapes.

DEED OF A MADMAN.

Shoots Three Men and Then Commits Suicide.

Cincinnati, Ohio, April 1. — In a fit of temporary insanity William Gard, aged twenty-three years and single, yesterday shot three men and then killed himself.

Gard was a varnisher at the Victor Safe and Lock works at Ninth and Broadway, a brother-in-law of Harry Stump, superintendent of the plant, and a man without any bad habits. He was known as a sober, industrious man, who supported his widowed mother. While the employes of the Victor works were taking their noon lunch Gard, without provocation or warning, commenced firing promiscuously at them and caused such consternation that a riot alarm was turned in and patrol wagons hastened to the plant. It was found that E. Miller of Madisonville was shot in the head and fatally injured. Thomas Waldron was shot through the nose and John Guthjahr was shot through the shoulder. Other shots went astray. All the victims are at the hospital and doing well, except Miller. The injuries of Waldron and Cuthjahr were serious, but not dangerous.

Gard fled like a madman, but afterward took an electric car for the home of his mother and shot himself as soon as he reached home, dying instantly.

New York, April 1. — Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles reviewed the troops at the tournament at Madison Square garden last night in the presence of the largest number of spectators of the week. Each detachment was cheered repeatedly by the spectators, the sailors from the Indiana with their goat mascot receiving the greatest portion, when Gen. Miles raised his cap as they passed the reviewing stand.

Two Men Killed.

San Antonio, Tex., April 1. — News has reached here of a collision on the Mexican National railway between the City of Mexico and Toluca on Tuesday. The local passenger train and four coaches was run into by a freight engine. Two men were killed, a telegraph lineman and a third-class passenger. Fifteen of the passengers were more or less cut or bruised, but none seriously hurt.

IN A DIME MUSEUM.

Wife and Children of the Lake City Colored Postmaster Who Was Lynched.

Charleston, S. C., April 1. — It has been announced that the Lake City lynching trial will not be called again at the April term of the United States circuit court. Thirteen white citizens, all prominent business men of Lake City, have been tried for the murder of the colored postmaster, Baker. The result was a mistrial. Since the trial Baker's crippled wife and crippled children, who were sleeping in the postoffice at Lake City with him when it was set on fire, have gone to Boston in a dime museum venture. Attorney General Griggs has instructed the district attorney to ask a continuance of the case when it is called.

WOMEN LOSE $580,000.

Chicago Syndicate, Managed by Women, Nearing an Inglorious End.

Chicago, April 1. — The Women's Land syndicate is nearing an inglorious end. One of the last acts of this concern which, in the zenith of its career in 1893, sold 1,725 lots in South Waukegon, Ill., to 1,089 women in all parts of the country, will be a judicial decree entered in the circuit court of Cook county for the sale, under fore closure, of the property. There was a blanket mortgage on the whole property of which the purchasers had no knowledge. They lose $580,000. The affair was managed by women.

MURDERED HIS UNCLE.

W. Townsend, Choctaw Indian, Kills Relative Because He Would Not Work.

Antlers, Ind. T., April 1. — Winchester Townsend, a full-blood Choctaw Indian, is lodged in jail on the charge of murdering Willis Welton, his uncle. He is said to have enticed Welton into the woods and shot him with a rifle, giving as a reason that his uncle was of no account and would not work and make a living. He also said he had been offered $50 to kill him and had been paid $10.

Vienna Storm-Bound.

Vienna, April 1. — The severest snow storm known here in many years began Thursday. Yesterday the streets were impassable and the tramways suspended traffic. Provisions ran short, and not until late in the afternoon were the street cleaners, thousands of whom were called out, able to clear the principal thoroughfares sufficient to allow even a slight resumption of traffic. In many parts of Hungary railway service ceased entirely. Many trains are long overdue and quite a number have had to be dug out.

"Fighting Bob" Is Better.

Washington, April 1. — Capt. Robley D. Evans, of the light house board, has returned to the city from a visit to Cuba. He recently had a severe attack of rheumatism, and though still suffering from that malady, is very much improved in health. He has been notified that the Creve Coeur Club of Peoria, Ill., has forwarded him a confectioner's model of the battleship Iowa, which vessel he commanded during the famous battle of Santiago in the Spanish war.

Loggers Want Open Water.

Winona, Minn., April 1. — The river opened up in front of the city yesterday and for several miles above, but still holds at the lower railway bridge. The Frontenac in this city and the Musser at Wabasha are prepared to get out after logs as soon as the river is navigable, and it is expected that some of the Winona mills will start up next week and all be running the week after.

Guilty of Murder.

Kansas City, Mo., April 1. — John Hayslip, a horse trainer, was found guilty of murder in the second degree yesterday and sentenced to ninety years in the penitentiary. Hayslip murdered his wife and Maud Mitchell and tried to kill Charles Barrer, an ice wagon driver. Mrs. Hayslip had left her husband for Barrer. The Mitchell woman had persuaded her to take the step.

Philippine Secretaryship.

New York, April 1. — A special to the Herald from Washington says: Charles M. Pepper, a well known newspaper correspondent, has been offered the office of secretary of the Philippine commission. A dispatch tendering him the place was sent to him at Ponce, Porto Rico. Mr. Pepper is acquainted with most of the members of the commission.

Indicted for Assault.

Lexington, Ky., April 1. — The grand jury has indicted Policeman W. E. Looney for assault and battery. It is alleged that he struck Secretary of State Powers on the head on Saturday night, March 10, when the latter and Capt. Davis were arrested here while trying to escape in the disguise of soldiers' uniforms.

Blown to Atoms.

Martinsville, W. Va., April 1. — William Smith and son Frank were blown to atoms while bringing a cargo of nitro-glycerine down Fishing creek in a skiff to Oil Well. No parts of the bodies were found.

CONGRESS

Resume of the Week's Proceedings.

The Senate.

Washington, March 27. — Senator Foraker, in charge of the Porto Rican bill, announced at yesterday's session of the senate that beginning with today's session he would press the measure to a vote as soon as possible. Senator Hanna, chairman of the Republican national committee, speaking to a question of personal privilege, vigorously denied an interview with a Republican member of the house of representatives, whose name was not given, published in a Washington newspaper alleging that the passage of the Porto Rican tariff bill would be in pursuance of a "deal" by which the Republican national committee was to get a big contribution. Mr. Hanna denounced the statement as a "malicious lie," and hoped it would be investigated. The Alaskan civil code bill was under consideration during the greater part of the session. An amendment was agreed to fixing a license upon almost every kind of trade and commerce in the district of Alaska, the license ranging from $10 to $500 per annum. The measure had not been disposed of at the conclusion of the session.

The House.

The house entered upon the consideration of the army appropriation bill but the debate was without exciting incident, being confined to the discussion of army matters. Chairman Hull, in charge of the bill, explained its provisions, Mr. Jett of Illinois, criticised the policy of rushing officers through the higher grades of the army just prior to retirement. Mr. Cox of Tennessee and Mr. Ridgley of Kansas opposed generally a permanent increase of the army as prejudical to the best interests of the country, and Mr. Meyer of Louisiana discussed the Philippine policy, opposing the retention of the islands.

The House.

Washington, March 28.—There was some lively debate in the house yesterday during the consideration of the army appropriation bill. Little of it was pertinent to the measure. It covered a wide range of topics, Porto Rican tariff, the Boer war and the Philippines. The charge that the Porto Rican tariff bill was the result of a deal for raising a Republican campaign fund was again referred to yesterday by Mr. Pierce of Tennessee, but Mr. Hull declared that the anonymous author of the charge would never dare avow himself and be branded a falsifier. Mr. Sulzer of New York made an appeal for the extension of official sympathy to the Boers in their struggle for independence, and Mr. Lentz of Ohio delivered a scathing denunciation of militarism and the war in the Philippines. His attack aroused the sentiment and indignation of Mr. Marsh of Illinois, who, in a bitter excoriation of the Ohio member declared that the latter's speech was disgrace to the American congress. He declared that he was responsible for what he had said before on and off the floor of the house. His heated language did not draw a rejoinder from Mr. Lentz.

The Senate.

Little progress was made by the senate with the Porto Rican tariff and government bill. It was under discussion for nearly three hours, but the greater part of the time was consumed in the consideration of a free coinage amendment offered by Mr. Morgan. The amendment is still pending. The Alaskan civil code bill was considered during the morning hour. An amendment offered by Mr. Carter setting aside power hitherto granted to the secretary of war for the mining of gold under the sea on the Alaskan coast precipitated a lively debate.

The Senate.

Washington, March 29.—The senate yesterday agreed to vote on the Porto Rico government and tariff bill Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. An important utterance was made in the debate on the bill by Mr. Davis of Minnesota, who advocated free trade between the United States and Porto Rico. His speech was comparatively brief, but his reasoning was so close and cogent that he crowded into small space an immense amount of well digested information and careful thought. His principal proposition was that the necessary money to be raised by taxation should not be raised by a duty levied upon Porto Rican products, but by an internal revenue tax levied on rum and tobacco produced in the island. This system, in his opinion, would better suit the people of the United States and those of Porto Rico than the proposed tariff, and would be just, equitable and constitutional.

The amendment offered by Mr. Carter to the Alaskan civil code bill relating to the mining for gold under the waters of Cape Nome was agreed to, but no further progress was made with the matter.

Mr. Nelson of Minnesota resigned from the committee on Indian affairs and was succeeded by Mr. Bard of California.

The House.

The house yesterday devoted practically the whole day to the consideration of the army appropriation bill. Several minor amendments were adopted and about half the bill was considered. There was a deal of extemporaneous debate during the day, little of which was applicable to the bill. Mr. Griggs created a division by charging reckless extravagance in the fitting up of the transport Sumner and precipitated a lively debate upon the subject. He gave notice that later he would ask the house to investigate the subject.

Washington, March 30. — A direct vote was taken by the senate yesterday on the motion to strike from the Porto Rico bill the provision levying 15 per cent of the Dingley law on Porto Rican products. The proposition was defeated by a vote of 16 to 33. While the vote is regarded as presaging the passage of the pending measure, it is not regarded as indicating the final vote on the bill. The feature of the debate yesterday was the speech of Mr. Beveridge (Ind.). While he advocated reciprocity between the United States and Porto Rico, he announced that if all efforts to secure free trade should fail, he would support the pending bill. The bill was under discussion throughout the session, several important amendments being agreed to.

The House.

After four days of stormy debate the house yesterday passed the army appropriation bill. As passed the bill is only slightly modified from the form in which it came from the committee. One of the aendments adopted opens the soldiers' homes to officers and men of the volunteer and regular armies incapacitated by service during or since the Spanish war. The chief incident of the day was a defense of the war department against the charge of reckless extravagance in the fitting up of the transport Sumner made by Mr. Driggs of New York. Mr. Parker of New Jersey produced the itemized expenses furnished by the war department, to show that there had been no extravagance. Without opposition the house confirmed Mr. Boreing's title to his seat. His seat was contested by Mr. White, another Republican, and the report of the committee that investigated the case was unanimously in favor of the sitting member.

Washington, March 31. — Merriment swept away the traditional dignity of the senate yesterday. Staid sticklers for senatorial decorum literally held their sides and shouted with laughter, while the crowded galleries joined in the laughing tumult, which not the faintest effort was made to restrain. Mr. Pettus of Alabama, the oldest member of the body in years, and only a few months short of fore-score years, delivered the funniest speech heard in the senate chamber in many years. It sprinkled with wit and bubbled over with humor. Its sarcasm was keen, but not bitter, and even those who were the victims of it could not but enjoy its perfect good humor and joined in the fun. Throughout it all Mr. Pettus was as solemn as if he were delivering a funeral oration. Not a smile softened the deep lines of his strong and rugged countenance, and, as he stopped occasionally to mop the perspiration from his face and head with a big silk bandana, he glanced about the senate as if in surprise at the laughter of his colleagues. Indeed, he apologized once for the lightness of the vein in which he was addressing the senate on so important a question as the Porto Rican bill.

The Senate.

Mr. Proctor of Vermont had delivered a forceful argument in support of free trade with the island of Porto Rico. His speech was listened to attentively by senators on both sides of the chamber, and at its conclusion he was congratulated even by some senators who did not agree with him. He was followed by Mr. Pettus, who devoted the first part of his remarks to the constitutional phases of the subject. Then quite unexpectedly came the fun as he sharpened his wit at the expense of Mr. Gallinger of New Hampshire and Mr. Beveridge of Indiana. "It was a gem," said a senator, commenting upon Mr. Pettus' speech, "and will long stand as one of the best examples of senatorial funmaking."

Senator Depew of New York was the first to congratulate Mr. Pettus, and the New Yorker's hearty hand-clasp was followed by such an ovation as a man seldom receives in the senate. Former Senator Pugh, Mr. Pettus' immediate predecessor from Alabama, was one of those who particularly enjoyed the speech. During the entire session Mr. Pettus received the congratulations of his colleagues.

Considerable progress was made with the Porto Rican measure during the day, most of the committee amendments so far offered being disposed of.

The House.

The house devoted the day to war claims. The bill to remunerate the British Cable company for expenses incurred in repairing the Manila cable which was under consideration several weeks ago, was consigned to oblivion, as was the bill to refer to the court of claims the claims of citizens of certain border counties of Pennsylvania who suffered loss during the various incursions of rebel forces into that state during the Civil war. This bill has been before congress for many years and involves about $3,450,000. The following bills were passed: To refer the claims of George W. Lawrence, involving $17,000, in connection with the construction of the monitor Wassuc to the court of claims; to refer the claim of Hiram Johnson and others for cotton burned in East Tennessee by the Confederate forces, to the court of claims, and to pay Mathias Pederson of Spring Valley, Wis., $300. By a curious coincidence, Mr. Cox of Tennessee, who commanded the Confederate forces which destroyed the cotton in East Tennessee, for which the government is now asked to pay, occupied a seat on the floor while the bill was passed.

South Polar Expedition.

Wellington, N. Z., April 3.—The exploring steamer Southern Cross, bearing Mr. C. Borchgrevink and the survivors of the South Polar expedition fitted out in 1898 by Sir George Newns of London, arrived here yesterday. Mr. Borchgrevink reports that the magnetic pole has been located. Mr. N. Hansen, one of the zoologists who started with the expedition, died on the voyage.

Settles Russia's Demands.

Constantinople, April 3.—The Ottoman government has addressed a note to the Russian embassy declaring that in the event of the porte not constructing the railway lines in the Black sea districts bounded by railways already conceded to others, then concessions will be granted to Russia. It is considered that the porte in this way settles the russian demands in the premises.

More Power From Niagara.

New York, April 3.—A special from Toronto says: A contract has been signed between the Ontario government and J. Pierpont Morgan of New York, under which millions of dollars are to be spent in developing power from Niagara falls on the Canadian side. Mr. Morgan represents a British syndicate, the principals of which are the owners of the London Daily Telegraph.

Armed Drill for Vatican Guard.

Rome—The Vatican has ordered the Papal Guards to take one month's drill with muskets, pistols and sabers. The order is widely commented upon because there has been no such drilling during the last thirty years.

News of the Northwest

SAWYER IS NO MORE.

Wisconsin's Distinguished Ex-Senator Expires at Oshkosh.

Oshkosh, Wis., March 31. — Former United States Senator Philetus Sawyer died yesterday morning at 9:15 o'clock at the residence of his son, E. P. Sawyer, in this city. The illness that resulted in his death became serious at 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. The attack at first affected the stomach, but later the bowels and kidneys became involved, and death ensued as a result of the aggravated disorders. Mr. Sawyer had been confined to his bed only a day, and as he was subject to similar attacks no particular alarm was felt. He rested fairly well last night and seemed to be feeling a little better yesterday morning. Members of the family were all absent, except Mrs. Phil Sawyer, Jr., wife of his grandson. Asking her to remove his shoes and stockings, although he had none on, he settled back with a long sigh and was dead before she realized it. The funeral will probably be held Sunday, provided relatives of the family reach here in time.

DEEP SNOW.

Ten Inches Reported at Lac qui Parle.

Montevideo, Minn., March 31.—Snow has constantly been falling for the past twenty-four hours until it is over ten inches deep. Owing to none of the engines being equipped with snow plows the trains have been somewhat delayed. Seeding, which had been commenced in some places, will be suspended for some time, but the soil will be in excellent condition.

-o-

Atwater, Minn—Ten inches of snow has fallen. This will considerably delay seeding, which was just about to begin.

-o-

Lac qui Parle, Minn.—It has snowed for twenty-four hours and is still at it. About ten inches has fallen.

FLOCKING TO CAPE NOME.

Fourteen Thousand People Have Engaged Passage.

Portland, Or., March 31.—Fourteen thousand people have engaged passage from Pacific coast ports for Cape Nome, Alaska, on the first fleet of steamers, which sails about May 1. It is stated that forty-two steamers will leave for Nome from San Francisco, Puget sound ports and Portland, practically at the same time. Many of these steamers will make two trips, and it is estimated that upward of 20,000 people will leave Pacific ports for the new gold fields during the season.

DEATH TO FIVE.

Great Northern Workmen at Spokane Buried Under a Fall of Brick.

Spokane, Wash., March 31. — Five men were killed and several severely injured by a cave-in on the Great Northern right of way and track on Washington street. A mass of brick weighing hundreds of tons, keeled over, without any warning, burying the whole gang of workmen. A dozen city physicians are now lending surgical assistance to the wounded.

FIRE AT FORMAN.

Depot Burned and the Agent and His Family Barely Escape.

Forman, N. D., March 31.—The Soo depot burned last night at 12:30, and is a total loss. A defective flue caused the fire. The agent and family lived in the depot and had a narrow escape. He was carried out just before the building fell in. They lost all their household goods.

READY FOR BUSINESS.

Opening Session of the New Legislature of Manitoba.

Winnipeg, March 31.—The first session of the Manitoba legislature, with Hugh John Macdonald as premier, opened yesterday. Nearly 3,000 invitations had been issued, and the opening ceremonies were made the occasion of a brilliant society event. Gov. Patterson, in his inaugural speech, referred to the part Manitoba's soldiers were playing in the Transvaal war.

New Signal Tower Ordered.

Bayfield, Wis., March 31.—The signal service bureau has announced that an iron signal tower will be placed at Bayfield for storm and weather signals, to be equipped with electricity for night signals. This tower will be of the new 1900 model which the government has adopted, and will be of vast benefit in giving warning to lake vessels and for weather information.

State Warrants Called In.

Pierre, S. D., March 31.—State Treasurer Schamber will, within a few days, make a call for $200,000 of outstanding state warrants. The warrants out at present amount to $125,000, and the call will reduce the floating debt of the state and will probably be all wiped out by the next call.

College for Mennonites.

Sioux Falls, S. D., March 31.—South Dakota will have another new college if the efforts of the Mennonites living at Freeman, Hutchinson county, and vicinity meet with success. They propose raising the sum of $25,000 for the construction of a college.

SAWYER'S OBSEQUIES.

Funeral of the Wisconsin Statesman at Oshkosh.

Oshkosh, Wis., April 3.—Former Senator Philetus Sawyer was buried yesterday afternoon and the funeral was the most imposing and impressive ever held in this district. The special trains on the Northwestern and St. Paul roads brought 4,000 people to the city. The services were marked by the greatest simplicity, according to the wish of the deceased. Rev. Edward H. Smith, of the First Congregational church, conducted them and he made no address whatever. The funeral procession was the longest ever seen here, the various civic societies and the militia turning out. The pallbearers were all relatives of the deceased. The funeral was attended by the state officers and by most of the prominent men of the state.

FARMERS TO MAKE STARCH.

Co-operative Factory for Grantsburg, Wis.

Grantsburg, Wis., April 3. — At a large meeting of the representative farmers of the county, held at the court house, it was decided to build a farmers' co-operative potato starch factory in this village, to be known as the Farmers' Starch Factory of Burnett county. A committee on incorporation was appointed, and as soon as a sufficient amount of stock is disposed of, the building will be erected. They expect to grind this season's crop. The capital stock is $15,000.

TOO LATE NOW.

Man Executed on Circumstantial Evidence Wrote of His Innocence.

Butte, Mont., April 3.—The alleged confession of Joseph C. Hurst to Preacher Warman, that he killed Sheriff Cavanaugh, is generally discredited by the press. Saturday a letter written by Hurst just before his execution, was received, and in an exhaustive review he protests his innocence and argues the improbability and impossibility of his having committed the crime.

TO BUILD A BRANCH LINE.

Large Area of Country Will Be Opened Up by Railroad.

Devil's Lake, N. D., April 3.—Nearly 200 representative farmers and business men met in the court house here Saturday. Three thousand dollars will be put up Wednesday night, which will insure the building of a branch line fifteen miles north from Devils Lake. This opens up a large area of country to profitable farming operations.

To Erect a New Hall.

Sioux Falls, S. D., April 3.—for some time the town of Langford has felt the need of a public hall. Swan Ogren, a citizen of the town, has finally decided to erect such a building at a cost of $4,000. The fraternal societies of the town have not had suitable quarters, and steps are now being taken to rent a portion of the new building for lodge purposes.

UP TO THE HILT

IS THE DAGGER OF INHARMONY IN THE G. O. P. CORPOROSITY.

Big Demand For Tariff Powders and "Plain Duty" Pills—The C. K. Davis Anti-McKinley Move a Cloud Bigger Than a Man's Hand—Non-Ripple Making Capacity of the Dewey Announcement—The Democratic Position Stated by Chairmen O'Brien and Rosing—Other National Political Points—State and Twin City Points—Judge Willis' Honorable Course in the Saintly City Muddle. The Week's Roundup.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, April 9, 1900.

The week has seen consummation, so far as the senate could do, and lacking only the assured concurrence of the house, of the iniquity of laying a tax on poor Puerto Rico—that mere fly speck on the map of the country, but which promises to be, in the full application of the principle involved, a veritable nation of power for arousing the American conscience to the dangers which beset the country. But there has been such a protest from within the party being used to consummate the iniquity of taxation without representation, as promises a widespread revolt in its ranks. The knife of inharmony is in clear up to the hilt. The best promise of effective revolt, is in the boom for C. K. Davis as anti-McKinley candidate, and which movement it should surprise no one to see in progress in the open in the near future, as it is being now carefully nursed in secret. And the play will deepen, as the conventions come on for nomination of congressmen, here the free trader, and there the 85 per cent liberty man. Then will follow the state convention to set its sea-dog candidate on a platform which will suit both sentiments, and which will have for its particular work the endorsement of Senator Nelson with his uncompromising free trade attitude. Altogether it is a situation calling for tariff powders and "plain duty" pills in vast quantities.

And, speaking of the sea-dog candidate, what an opportunity there is going to be for Commodore Van Sant, of the Winona flotilla to show his statesmanship and his ability as acrobat. Besides covering the inconsistencies above mentioned, all of which the astute commodore will undoubtedly be able to explain, we shall see him calling for the support of the veterans who fought for freedom for black men, while Van's party stands for the war against the men who are brown. Van will explain how he once stood for the Declaration of Independence, but now stands with his party for taxation without representation; that he stands for the Constitution and for the flag wherever it waves, but does not stand for rights for those who have been brought in under the protection of the Constitution and the flag. The commodore will undoubtedly do this, at least to his own satisfaction, but there are those who think he will find troubles worse than river snags or the festive steamboat mosquito.

The Dewey presidential "boom" fell upon Minnesota with not so much as a ripple on the political waters. It was almost impossible to find people taking the announcement seriously. Pressed home to some of our leaders, by requests for their views by the Eastern papers, the general sentiment of all was expressed by the following telegrams sent respectively by National Committeeman O'Brien and State Chairman Rosing:

"The Minnesota Democracy is united on William J. Bryan. The party is bound to him by all the ties of confidence, respect and loyalty. Democracy demands as a candidate for the presidency one who stands for a definite national policy.

"THOS. D. O'BRIEN,
"Member National Committee of Minnesota."

"Minnesota Democrats desire to win the coming campaign upon Democratic principles. The candidate must represent Americanism in its broadest sense, the Americanism of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson and Lincoln, and opposition to the Imperial, Military and Trust protecting policy of McKinley and Hanna. W. J. Bryan represents these views and Democrats trust him. The political views of Admiral Dewey are unknown in this state.

"L. A. ROSING,
"Chairman Democratic State Committee."

The above sentiments were also unquestionably those of the other allies, Lincoln Republicans and Populists.

The persistency with which the "temperances" are after Brother McKinley, leads to the suspicion that they have better proofs that the president is a real "tippler" than is generally supposed. On this point we may give some testimony that, if we dare give names, would be absolutely convincing. Recently a national politician was in St. Paul who is in intimate relations with a Western United States senator whose wife, a rabid temperance woman, is a member of McKinley's church, and who has been not a little distressed at the reports of the president's drink habit. On a recent occasion this senator and wife dined at the White House, and the lady determined to see for herself whether or not the president drank wine, or, as he had informed church officials and friends, simply went through the motions. So when wine was reached she watched narrowly, and this is what she told the senator when they reached their carriage returning: "That hypocrite! Why he not only went through the motions with his glass, but drained each and every one to the very bottom."

Apropos a friend tells very touchingly of how one of the Minneapolis clergy of McKinley's denomination satisfied himself on the subject. The minister was a recent chaplain of the Minnesota legislature. He told his friend how he had agonized over the reports which had come to be believed by so many of his church people, that the president tippled. He said that he had personally asked a church friend of prominence to go direct to Mr. McKinley with the charge. He did so, said the Minnesota preacher, and the president with tears in his eyes, thanked him for his kindness. In public life, said the president, we cannot make denials of charges like this. Then the president threw his arm about the neck of the visitor and with his voice full of emotion, the tears increasing in size as they coursed down the Napoleonic visage, assured his friend that he had on the certain occasion referred to, only drank Appolinaris water! "And so," said the devout and unsophisticated Minnesotan, "I thank God for this convincing proof of the integrity of our president." And, as a minister once wrote into a report of his sermon—"here he wept a little."

"How do you find trade this spring?" we asked of one of the best known of the Twin City traveling men—one of the monuments still standing to show what traveling men were before the trusts fell upon them. "Rotten, rotten," was the reply. And the salesman, whose line is hardware and building materials, went on to explain that dealers are now overstocked with the "boom" purchases of last year, and the continued high trust prices have checked all kinds of building.

On the same point Old Pease, in the oft-misguided Anoka Union, tells the actual truth as to Twin City conditions in the following:

"Things ain't just right yet in Minnesota, and I don't know but what it will apply to the nation. Every blamed thing that enters into the construction of a building has gone skyward in price, and yet you can buy store buildings and houses in St. Paul, in Minneapolis, Anoka, Mankato, Winona and many other towns for less than the raw material is worth. In a St. Paul daily recently I saw residences offered in good localities for several hundred dollars less than they could be built for today, and the lot was thrown in the bargain. There's something wrong when such a state of affairs exist, and I'd just like to know what's the matter? That's not prosperity by a long shot."

The annual statistics of the state's various charities show rather small increases in such charges. Of insane the increase is 147, the present total being 5,542. Total of all the institutions, insane, soldiers' home, deaf, blind, feeble minded, state public school, training, reformatory and state prison, 6,158; increase, 221. Soldiers' home has decreased 8, and the public school decreased 29. The reformatory has increased 48, while the prison has increased but 2.

And speaking of state departments, the dairy and food keeps up its record, with fines collected for March amounting to $888.

The Democratic state central committee has been called by Chairman Rosing to meet on April 18 at St. Paul, 2 p. m., for the purpose of calling the state convention to select delegates to the coming national convention. The meeting takes place at the Merchants hotel headquarters. Eighteen delegates and the same number of alternates are to be selected.

Speaking of which call, it is surprising how little mention there has been of candidates for delegates, going to show how much less men are thinking of themselves and personal ambitions, than of principles, issues, and the most effective line of action to secure their success.

The unfortunate situation in St. Paul, with two factional candidates for mayor, has been reduced to one of great hope, by the patriotic and self-sacrificing withdrawal of one of the candidates, Hon. J. W. Willis. The judge's noble action well illustrates the sentiment of consecration and the determination to let nothing stand in the way of party success, which so largely prevails in the reform ranks. Judge Willis' act should be commended all over the state.

The great Democratic victory scored in Milwaukee is a pointer for that which the united Democracy will score in St. Paul soon, and Minneapolis a little later. Watch the prediction.

Fighting Jack Mullen's fight for scaling fees, ended just as he promised it would. Closing that long case the state has received in cash the full amount claimed against the boom companies, for which the state reimbursed Captain Mullen for his fees, so that the state is repaid every dollar, some $15,000.

Since his return from Texas, our great national leader, Mr. Bryan, has been on an extended tour of the Pacific slope, including Washington, Oregon and interior portions of California, returning via Southern Kansas. Since his great campaign of 1896 it is said that Mr. Bryan has traveled over 100,000 miles. He has addressed more people by far than any other man in the world. And as to popularity and enthusiastic reception he excels all others, even Grant, in his time of greatest hold on the country.

BRITISH DISASTER

FIVE COMPANIES OF INFANTRY CAPTURED.

Lord Roberts Reports Another Serious Reverse Near Reddersburg—Lord Methuen Wires a Victory and Gen. Villebois, Boer Chief of Staff, Is Slain—No Word Except Lord Roberts' Dispatch Is Allowed to Come Through—Boers Will Try to Retake Bloemfontein.

London, April 8.—Lord Roberts reports that five companies of British troops have been captured by the Boers near Bethany.

The following is the text of Lord Roberts' dispatch to the war office announcing the capture of five companies of his troops:

"Bloemfontein, April 6.—Another unfortunate occurrence has occurred, resulting, I fear, in the capture of a party of infantry consisting of three companies of the Royal Irish Fusiliers and two companies of the Ninth regiment of mounted infantry, near Reddersburg, a little eastward of Bethany railway station, within a few miles of this place. They were surrounded by a stronger force of the enemy with four or five guns.

"The detachment held out from noon, April 3, until April 4, 9 a. m., and then apparently surrendered, for it is reported that the firing ceased at that time. Immediately after I heard the news, during the afternoon of April 3, I ordered Gatacre to proceed from Springfontein, his present quarters, to Reddersburg, with all possible speed, and I detached the Cameron Highlanders hence to Bethany. He arrived at Reddersburg at 10:30 Wednesday morning, without opposition, but could get no news of the missing detachment. There can be no doubt the whole party has been made prisoners."

Gen Villebois-Mareuil,
The French Military Expert Adviser to the Boers Who Has Been Killed.

Information Held Back.

London, April 8.—Not a word regarding the disaster at Reddersburg has been allowed to come through except the dispatch of Lord Roberts. It is, therefore, impossible to form any notion as to what happened. Meanwhile the British public is beginning to realize the immense difficulties to be overcome even before Pretoria is reached, and is revising premature ideas with respect to the time when it will be over. No one now believes it will be ended by the beginning of July. The latest disaster more particularly illustrates the heavy task in holding the railway. This body of some 400 British troops, without guns, which disappeared so completely within thirty-five miles of the great British army, had been engaged in guarding a section of the newly acquired railway between Bloemfontein and Springfontein. If it could thus be spirited away, how is Lord Roberts to insure his continually extending communications.

It is asserted that 4,000 rebels surrendered during Gen. Clements' northward march. The Boers will do their utmost to hold Ladybrand and Thaba N'Chu centers of producing districts. A correspondent of the Morning Post at Springfontein telegraphing Thursday, says he is glad to be able to report that increased precautions are being taken in patrolling the railway. It is said that most of the prisoners captured at Boshof are foreigners.

The report that Mr. Steyn had been appointed to the command of the Free Staters and the report that the Free State had obtained a loan from the Transvaal for war purposes are both confirmed.

Ten thousand remounts from South America are due to arrive during the coming week at ports of Natal and Cape Colony. Another Boer version of the fighting with Col. Plumer's forces says that four officers and thirty men were taken prisoners at Ramathkbama. It appears that the names of Cecil and Granville, which were originally supposed to be two officers captured at the time, should have read together as the name of one officer. As numerous prisoners are now held on both sides and the numbers are about equal, the question of exchange was mooted in the house of commons last evening. This elicited a reply that the government had no intention of proposing an exchange.

Boer Chief of Staff Killed.

London, April 8.—The war office has received the following dispatch, also from Lord Roberts, dated Thursday:

"Methuen telegraphs from Borhof (in the Orange Free State, a little northeast of Kimberley) as follows:

"'Surrounded Gen. Villebois-Mareuil and a body of Boers to-day. None escaped. Villebois and seven Boers killed, eight wounded; fifty-four prisoners. Our losses were: Killed, Captains Boyle and Williams, both of the yeomanry, and two men of the yeomanry; wounded, about seven men. The attack lasted four hours. The corps behaved very well. Our force was composed of yeomanry, the Kimberley mounted corps and the fourth battery of artillery.'"

Gen. De Villebois-Mareuil was the chief of staff of the Boer army. He was about fifty years old and is said to have been responsible for many of the Boer successes in Natal and later in Cape Colony and the southern part of the Orange Free State. It is said that he entered the Boer service merely because war was his trade. He went through a number of campaigns in the French army.

Boers Mean Business.

London, April 8.—The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Morning Post, telegraphing Thursday, says: "The Boers are apparently making an attempt to redeem their promise to retake Bloemfontein. A considerable force has moved south through Thaba N'Chu. Gen. Tucker's isolation at Karee is more apparent than real, since the open ground north of Bloemfontein offers small opportunity for Boer tactics. They may possibly engage him to distract attention from operations elsewhere. Remounts are anxiously awaited."

Ordered to Quit Pretoria.

Lourenzo Marques, April 8.—According to a dispatch from Pretoria, all British subjects have been ordered to quit Pretoria and Johannesberg immediately, except some 400 who are permitted, under a recent law, to remain in the rand. Those who are expelled number about 600. The prisoners and guns taken at Sannas post have arrived at Pretoria.

OVER DEWEY'S CANDIDACY.

Exciting Argument Results in the Death of One Man.

Chicago, 8. — One man was killed and another badly injured in a fight here growing out of an argument over Admiral Dewey's candidacy for president. Eugene Tucker, a colored man, was shot and instantly killed by George Miller, a barber. The latter was badly cut about the throat with a razor and may die. Both men had been drinking. Blows were struck and then the negro attacked Miller with a razor. Miller drew his revolver and fired six shots. Two of them entered Tucker's body.

PORTO RICAN LABOR.

Island Organizations Joining the National Bodies.

New York, April 8. — The Socialist-Labor party has been notified by Santiago Iglesias, the Porto Rican labor leader, that the Porto Rican labor organizations have decided to join the national union labor bodies of the United States. At a big mass meeting of carpenters, joiners and laborers in the capital of Porto Rico great enthusiasm was manifested when it was announced that the federated labor union has sent an appeal to Washington on behalf of the Porto Ricans.

TRIBAL FIGHTING.

Serious Trouble Feared in Ashanti—Body of Troops Dispatched.

Accra, British Gold Coast, Africa, April 7. — Tribal fighting has taken place in Ashanti. Gov. and Lady Hodgson are at Coomassi. The telegraph wires have been cut, communication stopped and dispatches destroyed. A body of hussars is leaving here for Coomassi. The situation appears to be serious.

LYNCHING IS IMMINENT.

Angry Mob With Bloodhounds and Guns Pursuing Virgina Negro.

Norfolk, Va., April 8.—Edward Tillman, the negro who, for revenge, started the fire by which the town of Ivor was almost completely laid in ashes, is being pursued by an angry mob with bloodhounds and guns. If caught he will be lynched.

UNVERSITY LOSS.

Physical Laboratory at Bethlehem Destroyed by Fire.

Bethlehem, Pa., April 8.—The physical laboratory, one of the largest and finest buildings of the Lehigh university, was destroyed by fire. The loss will probably exceed $300,000.

Bogus Capt. Clark Gets Three Years.

New Orleans, April 8.—Julius Moyse, alias Capt. Clark, who, during mardi gras week married Miss Bertha Warnken, under the false representation that he was commander of the battleship Texas, then in port, and who was convicted Wednesday on the charge of impersonating a United States officer and with having obtained money under false pretenses, was sentenced to three years imprisonment.

Tammany Consults Dewey.

New York, April 8.—A special to the Herald from Philadelphia says: Robert Van Wyck, mayor of New York, representing Tammany Hall, and two other Democrats of New York, also representing Tammany Hall, came to Philadelphia yesterday to consult Admiral Dewey regarding his announcement that he would accept the nomination for the presidency of the United States.

Carried Away by a Tidal Wave.

Victoria, B. C., April 8.—It is reported that a tidal wave yesterday afternoon carried away the new wharves of the Dunsmuir collieries at Ladysmith, with a loss of $50,000. The wires are down and details may not be securable for some hours.

Restore Rank of Lieutenant General.

Washington, April 8.—Senator Lodge yesterday introduced an amendment to the army appropriation bill, giving to the commanding officer of the army the rank of lieutenant general, and to the adjutant general the rank of major general.

DEATH IN THE FLOOD.

Great Disaster Overtakes Austin, Tex.

Austin, Tex., April 10. — The great Austin dam gave away at noon Saturday before the floods of the Colorado river, spreading disaster in the lowlands of the city and points below here on the river. The dam and power house just below, both of which were wrecked, were constructed seven years ago at a cost of $1,400,000. Great damage has been done to crops and property throughout the flooded section, which extends practically from Waco to San Antonio. In addition to a vast loss to property interests seventeen lives have been sacrificed. Austin is in darkness, with the river one mile wide and swollen far beyond its banks, running through the lower part of the town.

Wreck of the Plant Complete

Sunday fully 30,000 people gathered at the dam and power house stationed north of the city to witness the ruins of the plant. The waters of the Colorado river are still plunging and foaming around the wreck, eating away the big pile of granite which once formed the dam as though it was nothing more than chalk rock. So fierce was the current that great boulders were carried half a mile from the dam, being rolled over and over by the turbulent tide.

The power house, which succumbed to the terrific waters at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, lies a mass of wreckage at the edge of the river; all the machinery either having been thrown into the river or badly damaged by the falling timbers of the power house. The wreck of the plant is complete. The situation in the city is most serious. The wreckage of the plant means that it will take several weeks to secure a temporary water and light system, if it can be made possible even then. In the meantime the city will be in bad sanitary condition. All the hotels, private residences, stores and the like are without water and there is

No Fire Protection.

Churches were unable to hold services last night for want of light, and all public meetings were abandoned. The daily newspapers are handicapped in their publication, being deprived of their electric power. The river is falling. Reports from the neighboring country are to the effect that everything is under water. In Williamson county, north of here, railroad bridges and trackage have been laid waste and all trains have stopped running. Hundreds of head of cattle have been drowned and miles of fencing torn down and washed away. In Bastrop county and in the south portion of this county similar conditions prevail, everything being under water and much loss of property is reported. The country tributary to the Colorado river all the way down its course is being inundated, and while it is believed the worst is over, the loss as now estimated will exceed $3,000,000, counting Austin as the largest loser. The only drownings reported were here when the dam broke and caught the victims unawares. A mass meeting of citizens has been called in order that some steps may be taken to relieve the situation.

No Danger of a General Flood.

Houston, Tex., April 10.—As a rule the Texas rivers are now falling and there is not much danger of a general flood. The crops have been damaged over a wide area, but there is still time for farmers to replant if they can get the seed. Corn has been planted over once and will have to be planted the third time. The farmers, as a rule, have not planted much cotton because the heavy rains have kept them out of the fields. The railroads have lost many small bridges, and it will be a week before traffic resumes its normal condition.

GEN. MILES IS WILLING.

Another Formidable Presidential Candidate in the Lists.

New York, April 10. — Gen. Nelson A. Miles is said to be willing to be the Democratic nominee for president. He has so stated to his friends, and ten days ago he visited William C. Whitney to talk with him about the possibility of his being nominated. Mr. Whitney told him that all of the leading gold Democrats were as much opposed to the nomination of Bryan now as they were when he was nominated four years ago but he did not commit himself to the support of the general. He merely took the matter under advisement and said he would consult with his friends.

ALMOST A CLASH.

Opposing Militia Factions in Kentucky Ready for Action.

Frankfort, Ky., April 10—A clash between the opposing militia was narrowly averted here Saturday. Two soldiers at the state house were arrested for drunkenness by the police and their comrades rescued them. A number of shots were fired but no one was hurt. Chief of Police Williams summoned his full force and went to the state house to demand the prisoners. The Beckham military authorities intercepted the police and dissuaded them from attempting to capture the men who had started the trouble and who had been rescued by their comrades. The soldiers of the opposing administration were drawn up ready for action.

Partially Destroyed by Fire.

Chicago, April 10.—A fire yesterday partially destroyed the piano and organ factory of M. Schultz company, entailing a loss of $50,000; covered by insurance. The cause is thought to have been spontaneous combustion.

Woman Shot by Lover.

Waverly, N. Y., April 10.—Kate Tobin, twenty years of age, was shot and instantly killed in the street near her home in this city last night by Fred Krist, a young married man who was in love with her.

Passenger Train Wrecked.

Laredo, Tex., April 10. — The northbound passenger train on the International & Great Northern railway was wrecked by the spreading of the rails near Twohy. Mail Agent Bright was seriously injured.

St. Hilaire Spectator.

ST. HILAIRE, - MINNESOTA.

If the government wants any armor plate Carnegie and Frick are once more in the field.

Power sometimes forgets itself so far as to imagine that it exists for itself, and not for the service of humanity.

The world's noblest work is in reclaiming the fallen, in strengthening the weak, in gaining victory over temptation and in creating virtue.

If there's a right thing to be done, and we seem to pass through a wrong thing on our way to it, depend upon it there's another way to it, and a better one, and it is our own fault, and not God's, that we do not find it.

Gov. Roosevelt expressed a great truth and urged a much-needed lesson when he said, in a recent speech, that while the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," should be enforced upon politicians, another commandment, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor," should in equal measure be enforced upon the critics of politicians.

There are forty George Washingtons in Baltimore, of whom thirty-nine are colored and one is white. This recalls the story of the aged colored man who remarked, on hearing his son read from ancient history of Pompey and Caesar, that all the great men of antiquity must have been negroes, as those names were not commonly borne by white people.

Weather terms are elastic. Havana was full of shivering people, and the visitation was called a cold wave, when the temperature lately fell to 53 degrees. The Cuban style of wintry blasts would be popular in regions where boreal gales have no inclination to mercy. The West Indian cold wave is almost matched by the London hot wave, reported each summer, when the mercury has risen only to a point indicative to Americans of seasonable warmth.

Some of the experiments with wireless telegraph apparatus for the use of the British army in South Africa are said to indicate that the operation of the instruments is interrupted by veins of iron ore in the hills. This recalls the recent report of the United States Naval Board on Marconi's system, to the effect that communication might be entirely interrupted when tall buildings with an iron framework intervened between the transmitting and receiving stations.

A writer in a medical publication of the Johns Hopkins University describes a case which, he says, "is interesting because it sugests a new operation—hepaticocholecystostochol cystenterostomy, or hepaticocholecystostenterostomy." Every one will be relieved to know that the treatment so eloquently described is only an advanced method of dealing with colic, by which it will be seen that science in its march is encumbered by the baggage it carries. Caesar called it impedimenta, which has taken a modern sense that seems appropriate in this case.

The average loss by fire in the United States has been reduced in ten years from $6,922 to $1,860. The insurance loss in the same period was reduced from $3,993 to $1,056. The prevailing use of electricity has unexpectedly brought about a large increase in fires, owing to crossed wires. Ten years ago there were only sixty-six such fires and last year there was 958. Defective flues are responsible for over 11 per cent of the fires and incendiarism is next as a cause. Last year 6,891 incendiary fires occurred. Lightning caused 3,479, spontaneous combustion, 1,179, friction in machinery 295, natural gas 94, dust explosions 14, and five were caused by the sun's rays passing through window glass. There was no assignable cause for 12,204 fires of last year.

There is visible in the night sky, under favorable circumstances, a faint light, rounded in outline, and situated always exactly opposite to the place of the sun. It is called "gegenschein," and is one of the most inexplicable objects known to astronomers. Recently Prof. W. H. Pickering has suggested a new explanation of the gegenschein. According to him it may be "a sort of cometary or meteoric satellite" attending the earth. He supposes it to be composed of a cloud of meteors, situated about 1,000,000 miles from the earth, and revolving round it in a period of just one year, so that the sun and the meteors are always on opposite sides of the earth. He estimates that the size of this ghostly satellite may be nearly the same as that of the planet Jupiter, viz., about 86,000 miles in diameter.

The regular soldier is expected to be a model of obedience, patience, courage; but it appears he is also a pattern as regards thrift. The statement is credited to the chief paymaster of the forces in the Philippines that 65 per cent of all the money sent there to pay the regulars is either deposited with the paymaster, to be kept until the end of the soldier's enlistment, or is sent back to the United States in the form of paymaster's checks. Our Tommy Atkins is clearly not absent-minded. He does not forget home connections and obligations.

Dr. D. K. Pearsons of Chicago, who during the last ten years has given to colleges and charitable institutions gifts amounting to $2,500,000, is about to deed away the remainder of his fortune, $1,500,000 in all, in similar bequests. For the maintenance of himself and his wife during the remainder of their lives Dr. Pearsons will stipulate that only an annuity of 2 per cent be paid by those who receive his gifts hereafter. On the $1,500,000 this will mean a yearly income for the doctor and his wife of $30,000, which will cease when he and his wife are dead.

TWO SEASON TICKETS.

He and she both had season tickets to the Chicago orchestra Friday concerts. They sat side by side in the main balcony, and they did not even know each other's names. He was tall and distinguished looking, with the face and hands of an artist. She was small and fluffy looking, with the daintiness and beauty of a flower. He always brought formidable scores with him and poured over them during the entire concert, except when, carried away by the music, he forgot its signs and gazed abstractedly before him, seeing visions not of earth. She brought a box of chocolates with her, and ate one after another until the box was empty. She admired him much and used to peep furtively at him and his scores, wondering how any one could be wise enough to understand all about such difficult music. He never seemed to notice her, and so she unconsciously watched him more and more and wove fantastic romances about "my musician," as she called him to herself. Neither he nor she went down stairs during the intermissions, but she was afraid to look at him when there was no music, and that was when he looked at her—while she was inspecting the rest of the house.

One day he startled her by looking around while the orchestra was playing. Their eyes met and she blushed and turned away. Then it was that he thought how pretty she was.

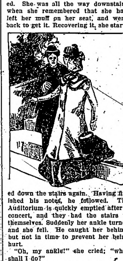
"Would you like to see the score?" he asked, extending a ponderous volume.

"No, thank you," she stammered.

"She doesn't like being spoken to by a perfect stranger," he thought. "How I should like to know her, but I don't know a soul who could introduce us. Introduce us—the idea! I don't even know her name."

Concert after concert they sat side by side, and he thought about her, and she thought about him, but stern convention forbade them becoming acquainted.

One afternoon he lingered in his seat after the concert was over making notes of an air which he feared might escape him unless immediately recorded. She was all the way downstairs when she remembered that she had left her muff on her seat, and went back to get it. Recovering it, she started down the stairs again. Having finished his notes, he followed. The Auditorium is quickly emptied after a concert, and they had the stairs to themselves. Suddenly her ankle turned and she fell. He caught her behind, but not in time to prevent her being hurt.



"Oh, my ankle!" she cried; "what shall I do?"

She tried to stand, but could not.

"Shall I call a cab?" he inquired; "or will you rest on one of the sofas in the foyer?"

"I'd rather go right home, please. You are good. Will you help me downstairs, if it isn't too much trouble?"

He had almost to carry her down and lift her into the cab.

"Oh, thank you," she said, gratefully, but rather hysterically, for she was suffering intense pain. "I can't go home alone. Would it be too much to ask you to go with me? Suppose the driver should refuse to leave the horses to ring the bell, or suppose I should faint in the cab—what would become of me?"

Thus besought, he could do no less than escort her home. He was pleased to find that the address she gave was in a good neighborhood.

"May I call tomorrow to inquire how you are?" he asked, as he took leave of her in her own home. "My name is Allyne, Wesley Allyne," he said to her mother.

"Wesley Allyne?" asked the lady. "Not the son of Dr. Wesley Allyn of Detroit?"

"His nephew, madam."

"I knew him when I was a girl," she said.

The rest of the story is as old as the hills.—Chicago Tribune.

The Pressure of Water.

A diving bell constructed for use in Lake Michigan was made of phosphor bronze five-eighths of an inch thick. Each plate was cast with a rim and bolted to its fellow as closely as was consistent with strength. There were ribs an inch thick and two inches wide for increased resistance, and the whole structure was very strongly braced. Windows three inches square were made of inch-thick plate glass. These were strengthened by iron bars. The bell when completed weighed 23,000 pounds. It was towed out into Lake Michigan to a point where there were 200 feet of water, and down it went for a test. When the line had been paid out for 200 feet, there was a curious quiver of the ropes, and flying to the surface came some of the heavy timbers that had been attached to the bell. The experimenters were astonished to find they were splintered bell was hauled up only a shapeless mass of metal was found. The plate-glass windows were in powder, and the entire structure had collapsed so that its original shape could not be determined. The pressure was estimated at 86.8 pounds per square inch, or 353,924 pounds to a side six feet square. This made the entire pressure on the bell something over 1,361 tons.

WAY OF KILLING WHALE.

There is Little of Excitement or Danger in the Pursuit Nowadays.

Dr. Frederick W. True of the Smithsonian institution, who has just spent two months in whale killing in Green bay, on the northeastern coast of Newfoundland, reports an interesting experience. He was sent out by the institution to study the finback whale and of ninety-eight animals caught all but eleven were of this variety. The story-book romance has gone entirely out of whaling as pursued by the Newfoundlanders. There is no frail whaleboat, with the grizzled old harpooner in the bow to strike the whale, but instead a little steam craft and a powerful gun. This gun throws a large iron harpoon, with crossarms which lie against the shaft until it strikes a solid body and then project out and imbed themselves. The head of this harpoon is cigar shaped and sharp-pointed and explodes as it pierces the whale's side, generating a gas, which serves to keep the fish afloat after the wrecking effect of the shock on its internal organs has left it a lifeless mass. A stout rope is attached to the butt of the harpoon and by this the whale is kept in leash as it thrashes madly through the water in a vain effort to escape its unknown enemy. Death rapidly ensues, unless, as sometimes happens, the projectile goes through the fish from side to side, when a second shot is necessary.

OLD-TIME HISTORIANS.

Ancient Writers Whose Methods Are Appreciated at Present Day.

If the English, German and American historical scholars should vote as to who were the two best historians, I have little doubt that Thucydides and Tacitus would have a pretty large majority, says James Ford Rhodes in the Atlantic. If they were asked to name a third choice it would undoubtedly be between Herodotus and Gibbon. What are the merits of Herodotus? Accuracy in details, as we understood it, was certainly not one of them. Neither does he sift critically his facts, but intimates that he will not make a positive decision in the case of conflicting testimony. "For myself," he wrote, "my duty is to report all that is said, but I am not obliged to believe it all alike"—a remark which may be understood to apply to my whole history. He had none of the wholesome skepticism which we deem necessary in the weighing of historical evidence; on the contrary, he is frequently accused of credulity. Nevertheless, Percy Gardner calls his narrative nobler than that of Thucydides, and Mahaffy terms it an "incomparable history." "The truth is," wrote Macaulay in his diary, when he was 49 years old, "I admire no historians much, except Herodotus, Thucydides and Tacitus."

He Came Down.

In "Old Times in West Tennessee" the author describes an amusing example of the administration of justice in the early history of Tennessee. 'Squire Thomas Thompson was the first magistrate in Tipton, and the reader will see that he did not allow offenders to go unpunished. Joe Seahorn, a quarrelsome fellow, had a difficulty with a neighbor which ended in blows. The 'squire ordered the offending parties arrested and brought before him. Seahorn, the chief offender, took to his heels when he saw the officer approaching. Finding that he should be overtaken, he climbed a tree like a squirrel, and took refuge in the topmost branches. The officer commanded him to come down. Seahorn defiantly refused. "If ye want me," he called, "come up here an' get me!" Thinking himself safe, he crowed like a defiant rooster on his perch. The officer hesitated but a moment. "Fetch me an axe," he said to a bystander. The axe was soon in his hand and he began aiming sturdy blows at the trunk. Joe's bravado began to melt as the tree cracked and showed signs of falling. "Hold on!" he cried rather weakly. "I'll come down." "Hold on yourself!" shouted the officer. "This tree's coming down, and you with it!" saying which he whacked away at the thinning trunk. Seahorn, thoroughly frightened, began to slide down, and struck the ground just as the tree left the stump. He was caught in a moment by the officer, and for safe-keeping was put under a cart-body weighted down with a huge log. There he spent the day, awaiting the 'squire's time for trying his case.

Automatic Magazine Rifles.

A new military Mauser was patented last year in which the loading is entirely automatic. With the ordinary magazine rifle, it will be remembered, that every shot the firer has to open and close his breech, and during the operation, the spent case is ejected, and a fresh cartridge transferred from the magazine to the powder chamber. With the new Mauser, all the marksman has to do is to keep his magazine charged. After firing, the breech is automatically opened, the spent case ejected, a fresh cartridge inserted, the striker cocked and the breech closed ready for firing, the whole operation only taking the fraction of a second. The less a marksman has to do beyond taking aim and firing, the better practice he is likely to make. Whether the weapon is, or is not, too complicated for practical military work may be open to question; but an examination of the drawings of it shows that the desired end has been obtained most neatly and compactly.—Engineering.

He Challenged the Pig.

Much amusement was created among the volunteers stationed on the railway line, as well as among the public, through an incident that occurred on a recent night. While passing along the line one of the Highlanders was startled by a black object which approached a culvert in the vicinity. Repeatedly he shouted to what he thought to be a Kaffir, "Who goes there?" but received no reply. Faithful to the regimental orders, he leveled his gun and capsized the "Kaffir," who was by that time a few yards from the line. The next morning found Mr. Gideon Hugo, Daljosophat, in a bad humor in consequence of one of his fine pigs having been shot during the night. The volunteer referred to acknowledged his guilt and offered to pay the damage, which, however, Mr. Hugo refused to accept.—South African News.

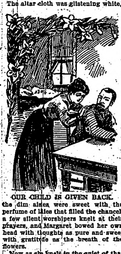
MARGARET'S NEW LIFE.

AN EASTER STORY.

The old gray house was filled with sounds of hurrying to and fro, of confusion and sobs and moaning cries, but Margaret knew nothing of it all. The girl had slipped away from every care and was out in the fields delighting in the first faint flush of dawn and the pure air on her cheek. It had been a long while since Margaret had been out of doors.

There was such joy in every step that she could not stop with the fields, but kept on down the road until she came to the village where the bells were ringing with gladness for Easter morning, and the children were carrying flowers to church. Margaret entered softly and took her old place in the dim corner, facing the window pictured with the story of Mary in the garden. How good it seemed to be there!

The altar cloth was glistening white, the dim aisles were sweet with the perfume of lilies that filled the chancel, a few silent worshipers knelt at their prayers, and Margaret bowed her own head with thoughts as pure and sweet with gratitude as the breath of the flowers.



OUR CHILD IS GIVEN BACK.

Now as she knelt in the quiet of that holy place, Margaret wondered to hear with the chiming bells, soft silvery strains of music, such as were never heard in the little church before, and to feel the touch of a gentle hand laid on her hair. She looked up to see the beams of the morning sunshine streaming down upon her and the stained window palpitating with glorious light and color, but wonder!—as she looked again the stained window was no longer there at all; instead opening before her on every side was a lovely garden sweet with flowers.

"This is too good to be true," she cried, rising in a kind of rapture as she felt the soft balm of the garden air in her face.

"Nothing is too good to be true," said a voice at her side, but Margaret could not discover any one.

"May I enter this rich garden?" Margaret asked of herself, thinking of her poor, shabby dress, so faded and patched, which she was always glad to hide in the dim corner of the aisle. But as Margaret, doubting, asked this question, the sun shining upon her dress, showed it to be glistening white as the altar cloth and the lilies in the chancel. In her confusion the girl put her hands to her eyes to see if she were awake or dreaming, but every moment the vision grew more radiant.

The broad stream of light now appeared a pathway along which angel children were passing to and fro, and they smiled on Margaret and embraced her and drew her tenderly with them, saying:

"Margaret, dear little sister! We are so glad you are here! Have you come to stay with us?" and they made music for her delight and showed her beauties of the garden past words to express, then went their way to appointed tasks.

As Margaret walked on in the garden, borne about by a kind of winged ecstasy rather than by any touch of her feet, she came upon the Gardener taking care of His garden, and He turned and looked at the girl.

"Sir," entreated Margaret, falling upon her knees, "may I stay with you? May I help you take care of this garden?"

"Margaret," said the Gardener, taking her by the hand—and then Margaret knew it had been His hand on her hair and His voice at her side.

"You may help me, Margaret, in another garden. You may work for me in the garden of human hearts and cultivate sweet and beautiful thoughts and make them grow."

"But I am so tired of the old life—of the pain, the poverty, the hardship of it all!" and Margaret began to weep bitterly. "I cannot go back to the old life!"

"My child, it is a new life I give unto you."

"But I must leave you!"

"I shall be with you always."

"But we must leave this heavenly garden!"

"Margaret, my child, the garden shall be where we are."

It was in the old gray house at sunrise, on Easter morning, that the father was saying with humble gratitude:

"Thank God, our child is given back to us."

"The Lord is merciful," sobbed the mother, "Blessed be His loving kindness."

So Margaret was once more given health and strength, and as she went about her daily tasks the radiant vision of Easter was always present with her and these words were always singing themselves in her heart:

"A new life I give unto you—I am with you always—the garden shall be where we are."

EASTER DAY.

Clang! Clang! Clang!
The penitential days are done,
Jehovah's joy bells ring;
And 'neath the glorious Easter sun
We hail the Lord, our King!

Clang! Clang! Clang!
On wings our spirits soar—
In earnest words, in hymnal rhyme,
In organ peal and belfry chime
We hear the story o'er!

Clang! Clang! Clang!
Christ rises once again—
Perfection of creation's sum,
Grand miracle of martyrdom,
To free us from our pain!

At Easter Breakfast.

It was at the Easter breakfast table, and little Mabel asked:

"Where's Johnny?"

"He's dyeing eggs," somebody responded.

Mabel opened her eyes in wonder.

"Do dying eggs come from dead chickens, mamma?"

"Here, Jane, take away this omelette," gasped Mabel's father, "and broil me a bit of steak."

EASTER IN CUBA.

Those of us who know Easter only on our cold and prosaic North can have little conception of the significance and solemnity of Passion Week in countries where a hotter sun has infused intenser warmth into the blood.

Mr. Thomas H. Graham, vice-president of the Juragua Iron Mines company, Santiago de Cuba, gives an interesting description of Easter as observed in Santiago and other Cuban cities. "During the entire week," he says, "all social gayety is suspended; even business assumes a quieter aspect, but the distinctive celebrations do not begin until Holy Thursday. On that day high mass is broken off in the middle, and a procession of priests carries the image of Christ—the 'Ecce Homo'—to the cathedral.

In towns where there is no cathedral some church is selected, and there the the eighteen canons of the church in image, life size and robed in white, is carried in solemn state, the entire populace joining the procession. This ceremony commemorates the journey to Pilate's Judgment Hall. The image is left in the church and the people disperse in silence. Then the devout begin the ceremony of the pilgrimage. That is, they visit fourteen churches, indicative of the fourteen stations of the cross, saying prayers at every station. It generally requires a part of Good Friday to complete the pilgrimage.

"A Good Friday in a southern Roman Catholic country is something to be remembered. The sun rises on a city plunged in absolute stillness—stillness of the grave. The very air is funereal. In the afternoon the procession of the Holy Virgin takes place. This is really the most striking of all the ceremonials. The sacred image, robed in black, is carried by priests and is followed by singular costume, all black. On their heads they wear conical black caps fully two and a half feet in height, and their robes have trains sixteen or eighteen feet long. Every canon is followed by an acolyte, who carries the train. Then comes the populace, men and women, still in black, all carrying lighted candles. The scene is curiously mediaeval and impressive.

"The people who are not in the procession vie with one another in doing homage to the Virgin as she passes. Money is freely given, and flowers are offered in profusion. While we lived in Santiago Mrs. Graham always sang a hymn to the Virgin as her image passed our house, which was facing the great plaza. As her voice rose from the balcony where we stood the vast procession would stop and listen in a silence so profound that it could be felt. Not a sound would be heard except Mrs. Graham's voice."

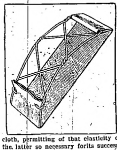
CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

Modern Shoe Polisher—Novel Candle Holder—The Moon and the Weather—Popular Beliefs as to Their Connection Are Altogether Unfounded.

Modern Shoe Polisher.

With the popularity of the up-to-date enamel, patent and russet leather and kid shoes, the use of patented preparations for cleaning and polishing them, the function of the old time blacking brush is becoming less important in the boot polishing outfit, its place being largely usurped by a piece of cloth. Lamb's wool polishers are excellent for this purpose, but unfortunately they are rather expensive, and when a man has to do his own polishing it requires considerable dexterity on his part to manipulate a long strip of cloth in the artistic manner of the professional. The shoe-polishing device here shown, the invention of an inventor of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is offered as an aid to this mighty army of unfortunates. Perhaps its most essential feature is the cheapness and simplicity of its construction, being made out of a single piece of wire bent and looped as shown, with provision at one end to take a fold in the polishing cloth, and at the other with two "tangs" that hold the other end. This arrangement forms a convenient and easily manipulated holder for the cloth, permitting of that elasticity of the latter so necessary for its successful operation by allowing the polishing cloth to conform to the outline of the shoe.



The Moon and the Weather.

A belief that the moon has a potent influence on weather changes is well-nigh universal. The moon's appearance goes through such marked changes each month that it would be very natural to attribute weather changes to these. In this way undoubtedly such sayings as these have arisen: "The weather won't change till the moon changes." "If the moon lies so that the water cannot run out we shall have a drought." "A wet moon is one upon which a huntsman can hang his horn," etc. Diligent inquiry, at one time, as to the popular belief regarding this question, brought out the view more persistent than any other, that more rain will occur at the new moon than at the full moon. Singularly enough, in Connecticut, on Long Island Sound, there does seem to be such a law, but it does not hold in the interior of the country, and a test on the Pacific coast showed, if anything, exactly the opposite. At London, where observations have been made for more than a century, a careful computation for the whole period has shown no effect. If we reflect that the moon is dead and does not have any air, even, up on it, that it always shows the same face to the earth, that its changes are simply due to changes in its position as respects the earth and sun, and that its varying appearances are all borrowed, we see how absurd the notion is that the moon does influence our weather. There is, however, another argument, that appears quite valid at first sight. If the moon can raise a tide of sixty feet in the ocean, why may it not raise tremendous tide in the extremely tenuous air, 800 times lighter than water, or a tide of about 48,000 feet, and if so, it seems easy to see that such a commotion would affect our weather enormously. The tide of sixty feet, (the highest in the world) is experienced only in the Bay of Fundy, and is due to the configuration of the Atlantic coast. In the open Pacific the tide is only a little over one foot. Most careful observations of a lunar atmospheric tide have been made at St. Helena in mid-ocean and have shown a tide a little more than .001 inch. Since ordinary weather changes affect the pressure a thousand times as much, we see how extremely insignificant the moon's total effect must be. There is a common saying, "The full moon has power to drive away clouds," and some computations seem to bear out this idea. If any one will look to the east as the rising full moon shines through the clouds, he will often see the clouds disappear. There is a natural explanation for this, however, and in no wise dependent upon the moon. A long series of observations have shown a diurnal range of cloudiness with a minimum point, or time of least clouds, from 6 to 9 p. m., hence we see that as the full moon rises and advances in the sky during this period, there will often appear a diminution of clouds. Lord Rosse turned his big reflecting telescope (so big that a tall man walking erect in it could carry a spread umbrella) toward the moon and found that if anything, the earth received a little chilling from the full moon. More recently the bolometer, an instrument which can measure less than one-millionth of a degree of temperature change, has shown that the earth receives a tiny bit of heat from the full moon. The evidence is cumulative and overwhelming, that no weather changes can be ascribed to the moon.—Prof. H. A. Hazen, in Popular Science.

Modern High Explosives.

Mr. J. S. S. Brame, F. S. C., gave a lecture at the London Institution, Dundee, the other day, on "Modern Explosives." He began by showing, says the Courier of that city, that an explosion was simply rapid combustion, caused by the combination of oxygen with some inflammable material, and the application of a light. A step onward led him to gunpowder—charcoal, brimstone and nitre—the nitre supplying the oxygen. These three things made up the powder of the ancient Chinese, as well as that used in the rude cannon of the battle of Cressy, in 1346. But during the last few years artillery has been so developed that gunpowder could not properly fire the huge shot fired by the 110-ton gun. What was wanted was something that would burn slowly at first, apply its power as the shot moved up the gun, and have expended itself by the time the muzzle was reached. So that we got gun-cotton, and later cordite. The making of cordite was explained fully. Its constituents are nitro-glycerine and gun-cotton dissolved in a mutual solvent, and vaseline added as a lubricant.

Lyddite, he explained, was carbolic acid in combination with sulphuric and nitric acids, forming picric acid. The only way of exploding it was by means of a powerful detonator. When the shell has been filled with the melted yellow lyddite, a "picric detonator" is placed at the top; and above this a fulminate of mercury detonator. When the shell strikes an object the fulminate explodes, flashing the second detonator, which in its turn explodes the lyddite. The only disadvantage of lyddite was that there was less certainty of detonating picric acid than of firing powder. Melinite was supposed to be a gelatinised compound of picric acid. Among several interesting experiments was one in which a little white flag was treated with nitric acid, and thereby converted into gun-cotton. At a touch of the gas flame it vanished in an instant.

Magnetism in Islands.

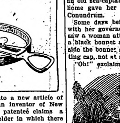
The Danish island of Bornholm, in the Baltic sea, is so magnetic as to be a danger to navigation. The island, which measures about twenty miles in length by fourteen in breadth, and is distant about twenty-four miles east by south from the nearest point of Sweden, is famous for its geological peculiarities. It consists almost entirely of magnetite. Bornholm's magnetic influence is not only known to the navigators on those waters, but is much feared by them on account of its influence on the magnetic needle, which makes the correct steering of a ship a matter of much difficulty. This influence is felt at a distance of ten miles, and so palpably that, on the island being sighted, mariners on the Baltic at once discontinue steering their course by the needle and turn instead to the well-known lighthouses and other signs by which to direct their craft. There are several magnetic islands and points along the Atlantic coast of South America. Near the mouth of the Rio de la Plata is a famous magnetic point—the western side of the headland known as the Punta Negra—and navigators of vessels bound for Buenos Ayres or Montevideo have to be very careful not to go too near it. Trinidad is another place of the same description, and one reason for its abandonment to Brazil was its utter unfitness for a telegraphic station, owing to its strong magnetic character.—Memphis Scimetar.

Horse Power for the Great Exhibition.

Engineering mentions the surprising fact that 20,000 horse-power of machinery will be required for the Paris exposition. As it is intended that the processes of manufacture shall be displayed side by side with exhibits of raw material, much machinery will be distributed throughout the Champ de Mars, and the transmission of energy will be electrical. About 5,000 horse-power will be needed for this purpose besides 15,000 horse-power for lighting, making a total of 20,000 horse-power. The steam producing plant will be collected in two buildings placed parallel to the old Machinery hall. Of course in each case the generators supplying steam will constitute exhibits, and payment made for the steam supplied, with an allowance towards the cost of installation. The coal supply will be taken through underground passages. The electrical units, consisting each of an engine and direct-coupled dynamo, will be placed as near as possible to the boiler-houses in a gallery parallel to them.

Novel Candle Holder.

Nothing to the inventor appears too trivial for improvement, and even the modest candlestick that has remained the same for generations is now to be transformed into a new article of manufacture by an inventor of New York city. This patentee claims a portable candle holder in which there are two fixed wings for the support of the candle and an adjustable wing attached to the handle. This arrangement permits of the use of candles of different sizes, and of the removal of the butt end which is left after the candle has burned down as far as possible. The simplicity of the design permits of cheap manufacture, an essential feature of such an article.



Artificial Paving-Stones.

A new method of making a durable artificial stone for paving purposes has been successfully introduced in Germany, and is likely to find employment in many countries. The basis of the pavement is, like that of many other systems, coal tar. This is mixed with sulphur and heated, and to the plastic mass is added a preparation of lime. When cold, the compound is broken into fragments and mixed with glass or blast furnace glass slag. Subjected to heavy pressure, the powder is molded to any form required; and it is found that its resistance to wear and tear is fully half as great as that of Swedish granite. The other advantages claimed for the paving is that its roughened surface gives a good foothold, that it resists changes of temperature, is not noisy, and is easily kept clean.

THE
SUNDAY STROLL

It isn't what it used to be,
This Easter walk, I own.
The "nobodies" now promenade,
Where only "nobs" were known.
But after church it's well enough
To do your little mile,
And view with an admiring eye
Solidity and style.

Behold the queens of wondrous wealth—
The money kings of power.
Fifth avenue's a stirring sight,
If only for an hour.
There furry fortunes are displayed,
If Easter should be cold,
Worn by the wives of millionaires—
A modern "clique of gold."

With what creations for the head
The avenue is lined,
If Sol will condescend to smile
And spring is only kind;
What glories of bewildering hue,
That seem not born to fade,
And blur the discontented eyes
Of poverty's brigade!

Here comes the clubman, stout of form
And fishy as to gaze;
"Manhattan cocktails" he suggests,
And many "pousse cafes."
He dresses well, but he is not Much happier, I ween,
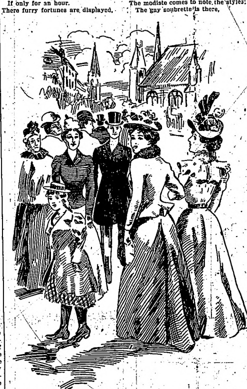
Than "Rocky" Ryan, close behind,
Whose suit cost "eight-fifteen."

The actor shows himself with pride;
The lawyer's walk is brief;
The lover's at his darling's side;
The henchman's with his chief;
The modiste comes to note the styles;
The gay soubrette is there,
And throngs of nobodies at all,
Who only stand and stare!

Roll on! roll on! O, human tide
Of wealth and power and fame.
You change with every passing day,
Yet always seem the same.
So love and hate and shame and faith,
The false beside the true,
In rich array on Easter Day
Shall walk Fifth avenue!

—New York Herald.

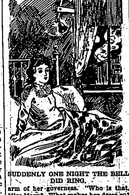


ETHEL'S EASTER.

Ethel lived on the seashore—that part of the Alabama coast which the Mobilians call "Over the Bay,"—and she visited Mobile rarely except during Christmas and Easter. She was a busy little girl with lessons and piano practice, and asked so many questions that an old sea-captain who lived near her home gave her the name of Little Conundrum.

Some days before Easter she went with her governess into the city, and saw a woman attired in a black gown, a black bonnet and a black veil. Inside the bonnet she wore a closely fitting cap, not at all like a widow's cap.

"Oh!" exclaimed Ethel, seizing the arm of her governess. "Who is that, Miss Mary? What makes her dress so? She has a chain at her side, too!"



SUDDENLY ONE NIGHT THE BELL DID RING.

"That is a Sister of Mercy," answered Miss Mary.

"Whose sister?" asked Ethel.

"A Sister of Mercy—a sister to all who need her."

"A sister to everybody?" echoed Ethel, looking puzzled.

"Yes. She spends her life in acts of mercy to the poor and the rich, too, if they need her."

"Does everybody love her?" asked Ethel, looking after the black gown.

"Oh, yes. People send for her when they are in distress. A Sister of Mercy nursed your Uncle Frank when he was ill of yellow fever."

"Oh, I wish I was a Sister of Mercy!" said Ethel, as they left the carriage and entered a shop, "but I wouldn't like to wear that dress."

"You need not wear it to be a good nurse."

"Well, but I want to be a sure enough Sister of Mercy. Can't I have a mark so people will know it?"

"Oh, yes," said Miss Mary, laughing, "if you insist upon a mark, you can wear a badge on your sleeve. I can easily make one for you."

On Easter morning Ethel put on the badge which Miss Mary had made for her of beautiful white ribbon. As she returned from church she found a bird with a broken leg, which she bandaged. Then she put the little invalid in a box, which Tom called the hospital. Easter Monday her first act of mercy was to carry a dinner to old Uncle Ebenezer, who was a cripple from rheumatism. He had been her grandfather's slave, and now lived with her father at the old homestead, the Maples.

"Look here, Uncle Ebby," said she, pointing to her shoulder. "You can't guess what that is, can you?"

"No, honey," answered Uncle Ebby, already beginning to eat.

"It means I'm a Sister of Mercy," replied Ethel. "I begin this Easter. That is my Easter resolution."

"Dat, indeed!" said Uncle Ebby, absorbed in his dinner. "Is you gwine 'bout nussin' fokes?" he added.

"No-o," drawled Ethel. "Mamma won't let me do that. Maybe I'll do something after a while for that poor woman at the wharf; but I'm going to help everybody here. I'm going to help Aunt Melindy feed the chickens, and now I will help you scrape lint for your lame foot."

While Uncle Ebby was eating, Ethel filled a basket with lint and set it on the chimney shelf.

"Now, Uncle Ebby, listen to me," said Ethel, "when you are sick in bed you mustn't call Jake or 'Tildy or any of your grandchildren. I'm to do the nursing on this plantation, and I want to call Jake and make him tie a string to your bedpost, and the other end to my bedpost, so that you can ring a bell right over my head when you are sick. You understand?"

"Jake! Jake!" called Ethel. Jake came when called, and after many trials arranged an unsightly contrivance, so that the pulling of the string did ring a bell just over Ethel's bed. Her brother Tom ridiculed it, but mamma said Sisters of Mercy must be patient under ridicule.

Every night Ethel hung her cloak near her bedside, ready to rush out at the sound of the bell. One night Tom played a practical joke by ringing the bell, but papa's sharp reprimand prevented a repetition of his mischief.

Suddenly one night the bell did ring, long and loud. Ethel jumped out of bed, and in a few minutes stood at Uncle Ebby's bedside. The moonlight fell on the black face and white head. Shaking his arm with all her might, she called out, "Uncle Ebby, wake up!"

The old man opened his eyes and sat up in bed.

"Didn't you ring the bell? What is the matter?"

"Nuthin' 'tall," said Uncle Ebby, at last recognizing the little sister.

Suddenly Ethel turned and perceived a curl of smoke in the corner of the cabin.

"What's that, Uncle Ebby? Look! Look!"

"Sump'n a-fiah, sho'!"

And so it was. Uncle Ebby screamed for help. Black and white rushed to the rescue. Jake and the other men led the cattle out of danger, and the mystery of the bell was solved when old Brindle's horns were seen struggling with the string, which in order to reach up to Ethel's chamber, had been passed through the cow-shed. The smoke had driven her to the open door, and in making her way she had caught her horns in the string. Fortunately nothing was burned except the corner of the shed.

Next morning at breakfast Tom, who had been very brave in putting out the fire, said, "Well, Ethel, which is the Sister of Mercy, you or old Brindle?"

But papa said, "If she had not been a Sister of Mercy, there is no telling what a fire we might have had, and perhaps poor old Uncle Ebby would have been burned in his bed. Ethel's Easter resolution was a noble one, and I hope it will last until next Easter."

Tom looked at his sister with admiring eyes, and Ethel still wears her badge.—Zitella Cocke, in Youth's Companion.

EASTER IN HUNGARY.

Some of the most curious Easter observances prevail in Hungary, the home of dance and song. Miss Janka Frankel, a singer who was heard in opera last winter in Philadelphia and other cities, gives an interesting account of the strange customs of her native land.

Passion week, as a whole, is generally very quiet, almost no social functions taking place. Its prominent feature is the pilgrimage to one of the sacred shrines. Devout persons in both town and country join in the pilgrimage, and every village through which the procession passes adds its quota to the pilgrimage. The journey is taken fasting, as far as possible, only bread and water sufficient to preserve from absolute exhaustion being indulged in.

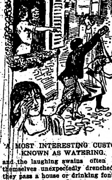
On Good Friday a life-size image of the Christ is carried to the principal church by a procession of priests and there remains until Easter, guarded by soldiers, who stand motionless as statues. On Easter Sunday the worshipers place offerings of money at the feet of the sacred image. Easter morning is greeted with tokens of gladness, somewhat similar to our Christmas, all the windows having wreaths of flowers or leaves.

One of the prettiest observances of the day is a procession of young girls in white, carrying branches of green trees, following the clergy in their robes and the acolytes with a huge gilded cross. After the white robed girls come the villagers.

The most interesting custom, however, is that known as "watering," which occurs on Easter Monday and Tuesday. Men go out armed with water in bottles or pitchers and throw it on the young women they meet in the village streets. Sometimes they even call at the houses and greet the girls who come to the door. The odd part of it is that the more thoroughly drenched the victims are the better they are pleased, as it brings them luck. In the cities the custom has been gradually refined so that gentlemen arm themselves with bottles of cologne.

This "watering" rite is said to be known in no other country, and its institution is ascribed to one of the apostles. It is possibly a perversion of the rite of baptism.

Young women retaliate on Tuesday, and the laughing swains often find themselves unexpectedly drenched as they pass a house or drinking font.



A MOST INTERESTING CUSTOM KNOWN AS WATERING.

Easter Monday is the Hungarians' favorite wedding day, as it is supposed that it is especially fortunate for marriages, and the priests are usually kept busy that day. The rest of the week is filled with social gayeties, and the quiet of the rigorously observed Lent is fully atoned for.

If every person would be half as good as he expects his neighbor to be, what a heaven this world would be!

A Surprise Bear—Clever, Easy Tricks—How to Startle Your Playmates or Other Friends With a Few Puzzling Performances—About Snow.

From a Garret Window.

I've watched the tears fall from the sky,
I've watched the clouds go sailing by,
I've seen old Sol the heavens paint
With fairy pictures old and quaint,
And when the west had grown quite red
I've watched him scurry off to bed.

I've seen the stars come one by one,
And then the great effulgent moon
Comes sailing out, with robes so bright
To chase the shadows from the night.
With roguish smile so full of play
She turns the darkness into day.

So pure and fair the heavens seem
I hoped to catch some tiny gleam
Through golden portals quickly shriven,
But only with my soul I see
A glimpse of that eternity.

I leave my garret window small
And on this old terrestial ball
I walk again with firmer tread,
Still looking to my God o'erhead;
So when the daylight slowly dies
I through my window search the skies.

A Surprise Bear.

One day, not long ago, Jimmie was sitting up on the gate post, swinging his feet and wishing that something nice would happen, when very unexpectedly something did happen that promised to be very exciting, for down the street came an Italian holding a long chain, at the other end of which was fastened a little, round, roly-poly bear—at least it looked like a bear—and Jimmie, after one quick glance, saw that "all the other boys" were with the man and the bear, and if you are a boy yourself, you know what Jimmie did. With one jump he was off the gate post and in a few seconds was in the midst of the crowd. "Hello, Jimmie!" said one of his special friends, excitedly. "That bear understands every word the man says to him! Watch him!" And Jimmie watched as hard as a little boy with two bright eyes can watch. The bear pulled and tugged at the chain which held him, but at a word from the Italian he would turn handsprings in the funniest way, walk on his hind feet, shake hands, and even swing on a pole when it was held in the air for him. Now this was all very interesting, but still it was not exactly wonderful to Jimmie, for he had seen far more marvelous things at circuses, and I am sure the other boys had, too; but you will be as surprised as anybody else was when I tell you that the little bear, after he was tired tumbling around, took an old cornet out of his master's hand, put it to his mouth, and—now this is not a fairy story at all; it really and truly happened not long ago—actually played "Yankee Doodle." Jimmie and the other boys standing round were so astonished for a minute that they could not say a word; then they all with one accord broke into wild hoots of appreciation, and the little bear was so frightened at all the praise he received that he clung tightly to his master's leg, and would not let go for all the coaxing of the boys and the tugging of the chain. "Oh, please make him do it again!" they urged; but the little bear only shook his head as if he understood, and clung closer to his master. "I tell you," said the Italian in broken English, "I make him do even more great thing than all else for feefteen cents." The boys looked at each other solemnly, and then felt deep down in their pockets. Fifteen cents is a good deal for small boys to raise, you know, but then, a bear that could do something even more wonderful than play the cornet was worth paying for! Their combined wealth, however, only amounted to ten cents. The boys looked appealingly at the Italian, after they had counted the money, and the Italian eyed the ten pennies doubtfully. Then he grunted and said, "That'll do," and gave the little bear a quick jerk, and the small creature puts his paws up to his head, gave his head a quick twist, and off it came in his hands! Yes it did, really, and inside the bearskin was the smallest, brightest, blackest-eyed little Italian boy you ever saw, red in the face, and almost choking with exercise and suppressed laughter. And every one else laughed, too, when he passed around his bear-head for the ten pennies. And the boys? Well, some looked foolish and walked away; others said that they "knew it was a 'kid' in there all the time," and Jimmie said bravely, "Well, I really was dreadfully fooled, but it was more fun than a box of monkeys, anyway." What do you think?—Anne Spottswood Young.

Clever Easy Tricks.

Here are three easily performed tricks that will be found interesting any evening when other forms of entertaining your friends are exhausted: The Animated Candle—First tell your audience that you can make an ordinary candle perform gymnastic feats. If doubt is expressed, proceed as follows: Take an ordinary candle. Cut off three inches, leaving a piece of wick at each end. Stick two pins in the candle, opposite each other, and by means of these balance it between two glasses so that the candle rests in a horizontal position. Light both ends simultaneously, and the candle will swing up and down like a see-saw. A piece of paper should be placed underneath to catch the grease. This trick having been performed satisfactorily, proceed to number two.

The Matchbox Trick.—Get an empty matchbox, without a case, and cut away one end, leaving the two sides and other end. Place on a table, away from the edge, bottom upward, with the open end toward you, and try to turn it right over without touching it. People trying this generally blow under it; and it is amusing to see the box moving all over the table, but not turning over. The way to do it is to clap your hands in front and near the open end of the box, allowing the little finger of each hand to touch the table while clapping. When you have had your laugh over this trick, say that you will do the Bottle and Cork Trick.—Your next trick will surprise everybody. You will place an empty and perfectly dry bottle on the edge of the table (an empty soda-water bottle will do). Then you will put a small piece of cork about the size of a pea, just inside the mouth of the bottle, and, when everything has been arranged, you ask your friends to test the power of their lungs. They may blow as hard as they please, but they will never succeed in blowing that piece of cork into the bottle. Everybody will think that it can be done with the greatest ease, and they will be astonished to find that it cannot.

About Snow.

A snowfall is equivalent to about a tenth of its depth in water; that is a snowfall of ten inches would, when melted, make a layer of water about one inch in depth. A deep snowfall, though injurious to traffic, is beneficial to farmers. While it lies on the ground it prevents frost from penetrating the soil, and protects delicate plants from freezing. By the cooling it produces when it thaws, it retards and even prevents the sudden and extreme changes of temperature that are so injurious to life. Moreover, by lying late in the spring it keeps plants from sprouting too early and so from being nipped by the frost. The snowflakes are of varied and beautiful forms, and, in accordance with the laws of the crystallization of water, are sexanary, or governed by the number six. Six-rayed stars are the most common form of snowflakes in mild weather, and the enormous flakes that sometimes fall at the beginning, or at the end of winter, will be found, when examined, to have the six rays, each branching. As the weather grows colder the flakes become simpler and smaller, until they are often reduced to slender six-sided prisms, with sharp ends, or to flat hexagonal scales. The needle-shaped prisms are characteristic of the blizzard, and it is the stinging that they cause, when driven against the skin by a high wind, that brings most of the suffering in these dreadful storms. Some winter fogs are made up of ice-crystals instead of droplets. They are somewhat iridescent in the sunlight, and the effect is so beautiful and striking that it is not soon forgotten.

Training Dogs.

In Berlin one Herr Strauss has established an academy from which watch dogs are turned out by the hundred every year. His system is educational, and is applied to almost every kind of dog. He first teaches the animal obedience by training it to perform certain "tricks" at command, and then trains it to distinguish between a visitor and a burglar, and what part of a man's body should be attacked to render the man helpless. Outside of the gate the trainer places a dummy representing the burglar, and to the latch is attached a string. By means of the string the gate is opened slowly, and the head of the dummy becomes visible, when the dog is taught to fly at his throat. Herr Strauss is very particular about this; he makes dogs attack the throat or the upper part of the body always. Sometimes a real man, well padded, takes the place of the dummy, and of course, he is well paid for his services. All dogs, it seems, may be made good watch dogs, but the St. Bernards and the Russian wolfhounds are the best where property of great value is to be guarded. For dogs not so fierce as they are a different system of training is used. They soon learn to guard anything committed to their care, but are not so quick to attack an intruder as the fiercer dogs are.

Indian Children's Ice Sleds.

Indian children cannot go to the store and buy their boats, so they make them of blocks of ice. They cut from the river great slabs of ice, which they trim into proper shape, rounding them up in front, rubbing them off smoothly, and making holes for the rope in the most ingenious way. They procure a hollow reed, and putting a little water into it, they blow through it upon the ice. The water rises and falls as the child blows or draws in his mouth, and gradually bores a hole through the slab. But bare ice sleds would be cold and slippery. So water is poured upon it, and a layer of grass, rubbed fine, pressed down and frozen into place, and the sled is ready. And, tucking their little ropes around them, away the children go at a speed it would be hard to match by the sharp steel runners of our own boys and girls.—Plan Book.

A Curious Boiling Lake.

Did you ever see or hear of a whole lake full of boiling water? I did—I mean I have heard of such a thing, but never saw it. In the Bay of Plenty, New Zealand, is one of the most extraordinary islands in the world. It is called White Island, and consists mainly of sulphur mixed with gypsum and a few other minerals. Over the island, which is about three miles in circumference and which rises between 800 feet and 900 feet above the sea, floats continually an immense cloud of vapor, attaining an elevation of 10,000 feet. In the center is a boiling lake of acid-charged water, covering 50 acres and surrounded with blowholes from which steam and sulphurous fumes are emitted with great force and noise. With care a boat can be navigated on the lake, but there's no such thing as skating there.

Wise Mule.

Lady Burton, a famous English woman, who has made a great many long journeys, was once traveling in Syria, when a mule, which was in great pain, hobbled up to her in spite of the heavy load on its back and held up the hoof that it had hardly been able to use with a look on its face that spoke plainly, not only of agony, but also of hope that she might cure it. On looking at the hoof Lady Burton found it pierced with a two-inch nail, which she pulled out at once, and from that time on the grateful animal followed her about like a big dog.

New Catch Game.

Here is a new game of "catch" the boys will enjoy. It is called "Stags and Hounds," and in playing it one boy is at first the hound, and he must try to touch the other players. When he has touched one, the two hounds join hands and try to catch another. When they have caught, the three join hands and run after others, until all except one have been caught and joined hands. Then the one that has not been caught has to be first hound for the next time.

He's a Cuckoo.

This story was told recently at a smoker given by the alumni of the University of Michigan at Chicago.

"A young man and his wife, not long married," said the relator of the incident, "lived down on the South Side, where they had a pretty little two story brick. One of their wedding presents was a large clock which told the hours and the half hours by means of the cuckoo's cry instead of by the usual chimes or the sounding of a bell. One night the college fraternity of which the man was a member gave a banquet, and it was accordingly late when he arrived at the front door of his home. He thought that discretion was the better part of valor, so that when he got inside he began to remove his shoes before going up the stairs. Unfortunately he was not very happy in his execution of this act, for one of the shoes slipped and made a noise that could be heard all over the house. A moment later his wife's voice came from the head of the stairway.

"'Is that you, Charles?'

"'Yesh, dear.'

"'What time is it, Charles?'

"'Bout 12.'

"'And then,' said Charles in telling the incident afterward, 'that blamed clock began to cry out. But it cuckooed only three times, and I had to stand there like a fool and cuckoo the other nine.'"—Detroit Free Press.

How He Spent the Balance.

"No," said Zeke Perkins as he cleaned the mud off his felt boots on to the floor, "I ain't a-kickin a feller when he's down, but Ab Simpkins ain't a-deservin of charity. You know the deacon give him a order on the grocery for $1 to help his fambily out on the same day that phonograph feller come to town?"

"Yep," said the man with the uncultivated lilacs; "that was all right, wasn't it?"

"Sartinly, sartinly, it was all right. As I said afore, charity's a good thing. But Ab goes down to the grocery an buys a half bushel o' potatoes, sack o' cornmeal, a hunk o' side meat an a big chunk o' tobacker. Then he says to Smith, 'How much does that come to?' says he. 'Seventy-nine cents,' says Smith. 'What more do you want?' he says. Ab stood an thought for a long spell. 'Well, Smith,' he says, 'I don't know as we're needin anything else a-tall. If you can give me the balance in money, it'll be better fer me an better fer my fambily.'

"Smith gives him the balance, o' course, out o' pure charity, an I'll be doggoned if he didn't go an spend it to hear the band play in that phonograph machine!"—Edward Singer in Indianapolis Sun.

A Joke That Failed.

During one of the legislative sessions at Albany Senator Thomas F. Grady wired for his evening dress suit. He wished to attend a reception. When the satchel arrived at Grady's apartments, his roommate, Assistant Corporation Counsel Thomas J. Creamer, opened it, took out the dress suit and replaced it with one of his rainy day suits.

"Let's get a crowd of senators here when Grady opens that satchel this evening," said Creamer.

"All right," said Senator Timothy D. Sullivan. "Hurry up and get the senators."

As soon as Creamer left the room Sullivan took Creamer's old suit out of the satchel and put back Grady's evening dress suit.

Senators Coggeshall, Ahearn, Coffey, Featherson, Martin and McCarren were present when Grady opened the satchel. As he carefully unrolled his dress suit the senators looked at Creamer. The latter was speechless. At last he stuttered:

"The cigars are on me, boys."—New York Journal.

Trick of the Sleight of Hand Man.

The Anne Psychologique has an interesting article by M. Binet, the well known French psychologist, on mental suggestion and prestidigitation, in which he shows that sleight of hand and clever tricks do not make a prestidigitateur without a power of "suggestion" on the spectator. A skilled performer has a marvelous power of acting on the secret springs of the will. Thus he can generally make a person choose a figure below ten by the way he asks for it. If he wishes the person to choose five, he runs rapidly over the first figures and dwells a little on "five" to suggest it to the memory. It is also curious that of such figures "seven" is the most likely to be chosen and "one" the least likely.

His Imagination.

During one of the Napoleonic campaigns a Frenchman was tripped up by a spent cannon ball, but without being injured in any way. He thought both his legs had been carried off and lay on the ground all night, suffering excruciating agony and never moving for fear of encouraging the bleeding. Next day the medical officer, coming around, said to him, "What has happened to you, comrade?" "Ah," he answered, "please touch me gently! A cannon ball has carried off both my legs!"

The Oratory of Gallerus.

The oldest Christian structure in Ireland is a remarkable building, evidently very ancient, but wonderfully well preserved, at Dingle, in County Kerry. It is popularly known as the "Oratory of Gallerus." Who Gallerus was history does not say, but as the oratory has stood practically uninjured for more than a thousand years he was probably one of the converts of St. Patrick.

A Japanese admiral receives the equivalent of $6,000 a year, a vice admiral gets $4,000, and first and second class captains are paid $2,406 and $2,283 respectively.

LIMITS OF SEED VITALITY.

No Truth in Stories of Germination After Thousands of Years.

"The statement is frequently made in the popular press," said Professor L. H. Pammel, government botanist, "that seeds have retained their vitality for a long time. Thus it is stated that wheat under some conditions has preserved its vitality for 50 or 100 years. It has frequently been stated that wheat taken from Egyptian monuments germinated, but in not a single case is this germination authenticated. Not a single grain taken from an ancient Egyptian sarcophagus and sown by various persons has ever been known to germinate, and the conditions for preserving the seed in these Egyptian monuments are better than in the soil. They are protected from the air and variations of temperature. The experiment which has been most talked of is that of the Count of Sternberg at Prague. He had received the grains from a trustworthy traveler, who told him that they were taken from a sarcophagus. It is said that two of these seeds germinated, but it is a well known fact that impostures are perpetrated by the people who dispose of these seeds. In some cases they have even stripped corn of maize into these sarcophagi.

"Many experiments have been made, not only in this country, but in Europe, to determine the vitality of various grain seeds. Thus, barley retains its vitality better than any other cereal, and this is said to retain its vitality from eight to ten years. In the case of wheat 90 to 100 per cent germinates in from one to four years; in five to seven years, 85 to 87 per cent. In the case of rye the percentage of germination in five years dropped to 55 per cent; in seven years, 30 per cent; nine years, 13 per cent. In the case of corn, I made some experiments a few years ago to determine the vitality and found that corn which was kept in tightly closed vessels at the age of 20 years had lost all its power of germination. Experiments also indicate that corn kept even a few years became largely deteriorated and lost much of its power of germination. Even grass seeds which have been buried at some depth in the soil and in vessels tightly sealed failed to germinate after a dozen or 15 years."—Chicago Chronicle.

BOOKS' NARROW ESCAPES.

Virgil's "Æneid," Works of Aristotle and Talmud Saved by Good Luck.

Three of the greatest books in the world have narrowly escaped destruction, the "Æneid" of Virgil, the work of Aristotle and the great body of Jewish tradition represented by the Talmud.

It is recorded that Virgil on his deathbed sought to burn the only copy of the "Æneid," as he had not revised it, and when he was foiled in this he ordered his executors, Varro and Tucca, not to give it to the world, a direction which was disregarded by order of the Emperor Augustus.

The works of Aristotle suffered from neglect. They lay many years buried in a cellar, and when, by mere accident, they were at last unearthed, they were so damaged by damp and dirt that in many passages they are hopelessly corrupt. How great would hav been the loss of this work to the human race may be judged from the fact that everything that was known in the middle ages of the arts and sciences was derived directly from these writings.

The Talmud nearly became extinct through persecution. The possession of the Talmud, by a long series of edicts extending over many centuries, was made penal, and the book itself was burned. No fewer than 24 wagon loads of Talmud manuscript were burned in France in 1244.—Stray Stories.

The Model's Hard Trial.

Miss Siddal had a trying experience. In order that the artist might get the proper set of the garments in water and the right atmosphere and aqueous effects, she had to lie in a large bath filled with water, which was kept at an even temperature by lamps placed beneath. One day, just as the picture was nearly finished, the lamps went out unnoticed by the artist, who was so intensely absorbed in his work that he thought of nothing else, and the poor lady was kept floating in the cold water till she was nearly benumbed. She herself never complained of this, but the result was that she contracted a severe cold, and her father, an auctioneer at Oxford, wrote to Millais, threatening him with an action of £50 damages for his carelessness. Millais paid the doctor's bill, and Miss Siddal, quickly recovering, was none the worse for her cold bath.—Life of Sir John Millais.

Tommy's Speech.

Sue (who has just been asked to play something on the piano)—I really can't play anything.

Tommy—But, I say, Sue, why don't you play that piece you spoke to me about?

Sue—What piece?

Tommy—Why, that one you told me to ask you to play when we had company 'cause you knew it better'n any of the others. I forget the name!

Then Tommy was sent to bed.—Kansas City Independent.

We Want Correspondents.

We desire a correspondent in every school district in the county, one who will give the local news of his or her locality in a fair and impartial manner. To any one who will undertake the matter the SPECTATOR will furnish the necessary stationery and postage and will send the paper free during the time the person acts in that capacity. Only one correspondent desired in each district. It is an advantage to any community to be represented in the columns of the local paper.

Sale of Ditching Jobs.

Notice is hereby given, that, on the 23rd day of April 1900 at 1 o'clock p. m. at the auditors office in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, I will sell the jobs of digging and constructing the ditch No. 1 of Red Lake county, established by the board of county commissioners of Red Lake county, State of Minnesota, by their order bearing date January 5th 1900, viz: In sections of 100 feet each, each of said sections to be known and numbered by stakes, as shown by the report of the viewers in said matter, commencing at the one including the outlet, and from thence, successively, up stream to the one including the source, also the constructing of the bridges required on said ditch according to plans and specification now on file in the auditors office of said county to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, said work to be completed within the time required, and in the matter specified, in said viewer's report. And no bid will be entertained which exceeds more than thirty (30) per cent over and above the estimated cost of the construction, in any case, as stated in the said order; and the successful bidder will be required to give a satisfactory bond, with two freehold securities, for the faithful performance and fulfillment of his contract, and to pay all damages that may accrue by reason of his failure to complete the job within the time required in the contract. The said order and estimates and profile are on file, and may be seen at my office.

Getting Acquainted.

The family had occupied the dwelling about a day and a half, and the mistress thereof was putting a carpet down in the sitting room when there came a ring at the doorbell.

She hastened to the front door and opened it. A smiling woman greeted her.

"Good morning!" said the caller. "This is Mrs. Murkley, I presume."

"Yes."

"I am Mrs. Pergallup, your next door neighbor."

"Glad to see you. Will you come in?"

"Thanks. I believe I will step in for a little while."

"You will find us all torn up, of course. We haven't begun to get things in shape yet."

"Now, don't you apologize, Mrs. Murkley. I know all about this thing of moving."

"It's an awful job, isn't it?"

"Terrible. I sometimes tell Mr. Pergallup I'd almost rather have a spell of sickness than to move. Two moves are about as bad as a fire. Well, I thought I'd drop in and get acquainted. Could you lend me a cupful of coffee?"—Chicago Tribune.

Food Elements in Fruit.

Sugar, starch, gum, dextrin, pectine, saccharifiable cellulose, organic acids and other extractive matters are, together with water, the chief elements in pulp fruits. The sugar is assimilable and is a food. Fruits which contain most of it, as bananas, dates and figs, are true hydrocarbonated foods. Extractive matters are also nourishing, but in a less degree, as they are not so digestible. With these and other rare exceptions, however, fruits, in the opinion of M. Balland, are little nutritive and cannot be considered as foods. Their juices, which please us by their smell or acidity, are condiments rather than foods.

When He Turned Jap.

A humorous touch in connection with Lafcadio Hearn's naturalization as a Japanese was the reduction of his professional salary from 150 to 50 yen a month. As a foreigner he drew a larger salary than the native instructors, but at the dinner in celebration of his change of nationality the president of the university rose and observed that now that Professor Hearn had become one of them the last insidious distinction would be removed by cutting down his salary. And the American born professor tried to look as though he enjoyed it.

A Peculiar Plant.

There is a species of plant growing in New South Wales whose showy flowers contain a large proportion of mucilaginous juice of a glossy varnishlike appearance. Chinese ladies use the juice for dyeing their hair and eyebrows. In Java the flowers are used for blacking shoes.

The most ancient dictionary and glossary in the world is of the Chinese language and is the lexicon of Pacutshe. This first known glossary was compiled more than 1,000 years before Christ.

N. J. VERNON, Pastor.

The wheels of the large mill of the St. Hilaire Lumber Company were put in motion yesterday for the first time this season and everything was found to be in good running order. To-day the first logs are being cut, but on a small scale as there is too much ice in the pond and the logs will have to be selected for a few days at least. Only the band saw is run at present but after this week the management expect to have the gang running at full capacity. We are informed that on and after May 1st the night crew will be put on and the mill will saw about a million feet per week. Supt. Miller has been very fortunate in securing good men for the heads of the many different departments and a big season's cut is looked for. The majority of the men worked here last year which goes to prove that they were well used by the company.

Dentist.

—Dr. J. H. Thomas, the Crookston dentist will be at Hotel Markham, St. Hilaire, April 23rd and 24th prepared to do all kinds of up to date dental work in all branches. All work warranted. Remember the dates 23rd and 24th.

—The SPECTATOR is for sale at $1.50 a year—strictly in advance.

An Accident.

Mrs. A. C. Adams and Mrs. Geo. Cunningham of this village while driving to Thief River Falls last Friday met with an accident while crossing a ditch on the north side of the railroad track that may cost them their lives. From accounts the ditch is about three feet deep and in crossing the horses made a jump and in so doing the occupants were thrown out of the rear of the buggy onto the party frozen track where they were picked up in an unconclous condition and taken to the nearest house and a doctor summoned. Mrs. Adams is slightly improving but Mrs. Cunningham still lies in a critical condition being affectell by some internal injury.

Sow Heavy Seed.

Experiments made by the Department of Agriculture have but confirmed hundreds of individual experiences to the effect that only large, heavy seed should be planted. Scientific farmers in this country and in Europe have found that heavy seed wheat, barley, corn, etc., produce heavier crops than lighter seed of the same variety. Farmer frequently experience difficulty in obtaining a good stand of grain. Sometimes the seed comes up very unevenly, producing plants of uneven height and vigor. The weaker plants, if they grow to maturity, produce a smaller crop. Many weak plants perish in the seedling stage. Those seeds which were lacking in vigor, even though they may germinate, may succumb to a sudden change of temperature, or a prolonged, or a slight frost. The seedlings from heavy seed always show more vigor than those from light seed.

From Farm, Stock and Home.

Plant with hope, it makes both heart and labor lighter.

Temper the work for a few days to the long idle horse.

The onion and cabbage rarely find soil too rich for their blood.

Stock on soft pastures destroy with the foot more than is consumed by the mouth.

If this country could not exist half slave and half free, it surely cannot exist half republic and half empire.

The price of mutton sheep and lambs indicates that the popular appetite for that excellent meat is growing sharper.

This paper cannot do it all in protecting its readers from swindlers: the readers must help by being less easy marks.

If all would think of their neighbors while they live as charitable and kindly as they will after they die how it would add to life's joys.

What splendid, faithful, useful friend the horse, cow, ox, sheep and dog are, if cared for according to their deserts they will know no cruelty.

Again it seems necessary to warn some readers to be dead sure that the innocent looking "agreement" or "commendation" they are induced to sign cannot be transmuted into a neagotiable note.

Patronize home industry by buying your wall paper at the New Drug store.

Our paper is not the best in the United States, but if you can show us that it is not worth two cents per week we will agree to eat the next issue. First you read it, then spread it on your shelves and use it there six months, then clean your lamp with it, then use it in starting the fire, then use the ashes to make soft soap, and if that does not make it worth two cents, at the present price they are charging you for lumber, why, don't take it.—Ex.

Wall paper and calcimine at the New Drug store.

It doesn't cost a dollar more to produce at the mouth of the mine a car load of coal today than it did a year ago; it doesn't cost a shilling more to produce a tank of oil than it did a year ago, and yet the price of every one of these commodities has been advanced arbitrarily from 50 to 150 per cent. The advance represents just so much plunder torn from the people by the main strength and awkwardness offense to the God of right and justice as is the act of the man who stands in the dark place with a bludgeon and robs the midnight traveler.—Princeton Union.

At Home.

The editor who can please everyone is not fit for this earth, remarks an exchange, but is entitled to wings. Human nature is so constituted that some like scandal, some don't; some like to see others ripped up the back, others don's; some like to see fakes exposed, others don't; some like the truth told about them, others don't; some like to take their paper seven or eight years and never miss an issue or pay a cent and get mad and stop when they get a statement of their account, others dont. It is some consolation to know that the Lord himself failed to please everybody while on earth.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent

The republicans were startled and not at all pleased by the announcement of Admiral Dewey that he is a candidate for President, and if not nominated by one of the existing parties is willing to run as an independent candidate They know that if he runs as an independent candidate he will draw his strength largely from Mr. McKinley and they also know that Mr. McKinley has no surplus strength to lose. Col. Bryan, having already been practically chosen as the democratic candidate, the democrats in Congress regard Dewey's announcement very complacently and rather hope that he will run as an independent, although they would be afraid of him if he got the republican nomination.

Webster Davis has resigned his post as Assistant Secretary of the Interior and will lecture in behalf of the Boers. Mr. Davis has just returned from a trip to the Transvaal, where his sympathies as well as his judgment were all awakened in favor of the two gallant republics, and he has decided that he cannot remain a member of an administration which so strongly shows its partiality for Great Britain. Mr. Davis has been a conspicuous figure in Republican politics. He is one of the best and most forcible campaign orators of his party. He resigns a very prominent position position in order to speak to the country without restraint touching a struggle in which the country's sympathies are as unmistakable as they are righteous. It is a startling proposition that any official representative of the United States should find it necessary, or even convenient, to abandon his office in order to feel at liberty to proclain sympathy with a republic struggling to defend itself against monarchical aggression. If the United States has a mission in the world it is that of upholding the cause of the Boers against England. And yet, it is now announced that Mr. Davis cannot declare himself for the South African republics and at the same time hold office under the American Union! To such a pass has the country been brought by the Anglomania of the President and Secretary Hay.

Familiar Boer War Words.

Many readers have been perplexed over the meaning and pronunciation of the new and often formidable words which appear in the cablegrams and articles relating to the South African war. It is to be remembered that nearly all of South Africa was originally settled by the Dutch, and that it is from their language that these difficult and preplexing terms are taken. Thus the ending "dorp" seen in the names of so many towns, such as Klerksdorp and Ardsdorp, is the Dutch for village; "berg," another familiar ending, means a mountain; "fontein," a spring, and "drift," a ford. In addition to these words the war news from South Africa has been sprinkled with frequent references to "kopjes," "pans," "veldts" and "spruits." "Kopje" is the Dutch for the hillocks which have formed such an excellent natural defence for the Boer marksmen; a "nek" is the saddlelike elevation connecting two hills, such as Laing's Nek; "kloof" is another word for ravine; a "pan" is a sheet of water; a "veldt" a South African prairie and "spruit" is a general term applied by the Boers to any small stream. These are the most common words in use in the current dispatches from South Africa, and if this explanation of their meaning is kept in mind it may help to a clearer understanding of the course of events in that part of the world.—Leslie's Weekly.

Something Wrong.

Things ain't just right yet in Minnesota, and I don't know but what it will apply to the nation. Every blamed thing that enters into the construction of a building, has gone skyward in price, and yet you can buy store buildings and houses in St. Paul, Minneapolis, Anoka, Mankato, Winona and many other towns for less than the raw material is worth. In a St. Paul daily recently I saw residences offered in good localities for several hundred dollars less than they could be built for to-day, and the lot was thrown in the bargain. There's something wrong when such a state of affairs exist, and I'd just like to know what's the matter? That's not prosperity by a long shot. Anoka Union. (Rep.)

HER HEART'S SECRET;

Or, UNDER A SPELL.

BY JEAN WARNER.

CHAPTER VII.

A "Disinterested" Friend.

Herbert Clive had been restless all the evening after his interview with Sybil at Sunset Hill.

He had devoted himself to Miss Marian Grey, escorted her home, and laughed, jested and chatted with a nervous gayety which the young lady—who, from her pinafore days had regarded Herbert as the epitome of all masculine perfections—found exceedingly delightful.

"Greylawn" was the adjoining estate to Clive Towers, and the young people of both places had grown up on the friendliest terms, though there had never been much intimacy between their parents.

Mr. Grey, senior, was a dried-up old limb of the law, too grim and taciturn to form social ties, and Robert Clive was not the man to press frienly relations on any one.

The ladies of the family had visited during the late Mrs. Clive's life time; but since her death the heads of the two houses rarely exchanged more than a formal bow.

But Laurence and Herbert had been college chums, and were still fast friends, while Fannie and Marian were "devoted" in that airy, ephermal way peculiar to their sex, patronized the same milliner and modiste, and were very confidential as to coiffures, cosmetics and all the pretty arts pertaining to feminine fascinations.

But the friendship went no deeper. There are strange affinities between woman and woman, and these two girls, whose lives had glided on so smoothly, side by side, could never be friends in the truest acceptance of the term, as Fannie and Sybil might have been.

There was something dark and secret about Marian which Fannie Clive recoiled from, unconsciously as the sunlight from the cloud—something which perplexed and annoyed her far more than Sybil's acknowledged reserve.

With a woman's intuition, she felt Marian was insincere, though she could not tell where or when; by the same unreasoning logic she knew Sybil was honest and true, despite the shadows which darkened her heart and soul from her gaze.

But men are not gifted with this delicate acumen, and Herbert found Miss Marian a very frank, charming and beautiful companion, as they walked together over the moonlit hills to her house.

Laurence and Fenton Forest loitered behind, to indulge in a smoke, so our hero had the field to himself, had he been disposed to take advantage of it.

But Miss Marian perceived, with mortification of spirit, that Mr. Clive had no mind for sentiment that evening. Neither the moon-lit waves nor the shadowy groves could awaken any romantic ideas, and the jests and laughter which were so sparkling in the drawing room at Clive Towers seemed to lose their spirit and brilliancy in a tete-a-tete walk through the woods.

Miss Marian was disappointed. She had quoted a verse from Byron, and Herbert had made an absurd parody of it; she had stopped at a sequestered glade, to admire the mist-robed river, and the young gentleman had given her a matter-of-fact warning about damp feet and chills; she had made some allusion to their childhood romance, and Herbert had frankly called himself "a little fool."

It was very provoking, and naturally Miss Marian grew a little spiteful, and proceeded to manifest it as only a mortified woman can.

"What a strange fancy dear Fannie seems to have taken for that young lady—Miss—what is her name? Oh, yes—Miss Sybil Wraye."

"Strange?" repeated Herbert, lightly. "What is there especially strange about it, Marian? Ladies' fancies are generally unaccountable, but Miss Wraye seems a very gentle, attractive friend for one of her own age to choose."

"Oh, no doubt," answered the young lady, in a tone which was slightly sarcastic. "There is no doubt of her attractions; but she seems so very, very different from dear Fannie herself—so silent, and quiet, and reserved. Where did Fan pick her up, anyhow?"

"They were schoolmates at Madam Fleury's, I believe," was the rather cold reply.

Mr. Clive found the young lady's questions exceedingly harsh.

"Ah, at Madam Fleury's?" repeated Miss Grey, thoughtfully. "Then, of course, it is all right. But—"

"Why should it not be all right?" he asked, quickly. "In what manner has Miss Wraye invited your criticism, Marian? I know ladies are apt to be severe upon each other, but I confess that Miss Sybil seemed quiet and inoffensive enough to diarm even a—sister-woman."

"I'm sure I meant no offense," said the lady, apologetically. "I really had no idea you were so—so interested in the young lady, Mr. Clive. I ought not to have spoken at all, perhaps; but dear Fannie and I have grown up almost like—like sisters," added Miss Marian, with charming hesitation, "and, knowing her frank, impulsive disposition, as I do, I was naturally a little anxious to learn when and where she had formed so close and tender a tie as that which seems to exist between her and Miss Wraye. I may have been critical," she continued, gently, "but I assure you, Mr. Clive, it was only as a friend would criticise, with perhaps too jealous an eye, the stranger who seems to have stepped between her and her childhood's friend."

"I am sure you wrong Fannie," said Herbert, warmly. She can never change toward you, Marian, any more than I can toward Laurence. The ties of years are not to be so easily severed. But friendship need not be a monopoly. Love alone rules with such jealous sway; friendship shares its privileges willingly, seeking only to know that it has worthy partners in its high estate.'

"Perhaps," said the young lady, dubiously; "but women cannot argue about their feelings as cleverly as men. We get notions without knowing why; and though, of course, it is an absurd idea, I could not help fancying from the first that this Miss Wraye was not the friend that—that your mother would have chosen for her child."

"And pray, why not?" asked Herbert. "Surely you have some reason for a conclusion so very injurious to a young lady?"

"Do you ever arrive at a conclusion without reasoning, Mr. Clive?" was her meaning reply. "But, since you force me to be explicit, I will say that, from all I have seen and heard of Miss Wraye, I should be very loth to admit her to an intimate companionship. I prefer friends whose present and past are less shrouded in mystery. I am too frank, perhaps; but, surely, our old friendship gives me the privilege of speaking the truth. I only say honestly what others say less kindly, though more cautiously. There, you are biting your lips! I have offended you. Forgive me if I have presumed too far. I promise that this subject shall never again be broached between us."

They had reached the gate at Greylawn while she spoke, and as she paused and held out her hand, with an expression of wistful anxiety in her beautiful eyes, Herbert felt almost remorseful at the indignation her words had awakened.

This lovely girl was a true friend. She spoke frankly and fearlessly, and did she not speak the truth? What did she know of Sybil, save that she was fair, and sweet, and gentle? Had not Madam Fleury warned him that there was an impenetrable cloud around her pupil? Nay, had not Sybil, that very evening told him with her own lips that there was a shadow upon her pathway, a curse upon her life? And yet he had suffered her to be a sister to his sister. He had asked her to be the wife of his bosom—his better, dearer self. He loved her—loved her!

Miss Grey might well scoff at the logic that could condense itself into such brief words. He loved her, and would believe nothing, hear nothing, think nothing against her. He loved her, and that was proof, reason, argument—all!

Very coldly he took the little jeweled hand Miss Marian extended to him. Very grave and courteous was his brief response:

"I could not take offense at such disinterested friendship, Marian, even were I disposed to do so. Still, I think you judge her too hastily and too harshly. 'Tis generally the purest and most delicate nature that veils itself in womanly reserve. Good-night!" he added, with forced playfulness, "and don't be jealous, Marian."

She shook her head, laughingly, but a dark change came over her face, as he disappeared from her sight. The soft, beautiful eyes grew hard and fierce, and a bitter smile curled her full, red lips.

"Is he mocking me, I wonder? Can he know what he says? Not be jealous? Ah, he little guesses the demon this night has wakened in my heart! He loves her—loves this sly, white-faced, silent girl—this girl of whose past and present he knows nothing. Ah, Mr. Clive, I have heard of this mysterious pupil of Madam Fleury's before! You forget that I, too, have other friends than your foolish, light-headed sister. Aye, I have learned something of Miss Sybil Wraye, and I will learn more. How his face flushed, how his eye flashed at my words! Ah, it was joy, fierce joy for me to see him wince at my thrusts! Yes, yes! If I know not how to win his heart, I know how to wound it. Aye, and I will wound—sharply, relentlessly, with a deadly aim—wound it to the core!"

She entered the house. It was nearly midnight, and her father was very regular in his hours; but to-night a light burned in his study, and the sound of voices told her he was not alone.

As she passed up to her own room she stopped for a moment in the little passage that connected the office with the main house wondering, with feminine curiosity, what important client was honored with an audience at this untimely hour, for Mr. Grey was a rigid adherent to system, and it was of his rules to transact no legal business after 4 o'clock.

As she paused in the shadow, the study door opened and the light within revealed one of the noblest specimens of manhood she had ever seen. A tall, sun-browned man, with crisp, iron-gray curls shading a massive brow, and whose herculean frame was not disfigured by his easy, careless garb, stood upon the threshold, evidently taking leave of her father.

"And you can do nothing for me? Well, I expected as much," he was saying, bitterly; "though they told me you were no toady of that purse-proud hypocrite on the hill. I could make it worth your while to take the case in hand."

"I doubt it," was the wary old lawyer's reply. "You have no case at all, sir, as I understand—no proof, no witnesses, nothing but your own unsupported word."

"Do you call me a liar?" was the fierce rejoinder.

"By no means," was the cool reply. "On the contrary, I am personally inclined to credit your story, wild and improbable as it would seem if I attempted to prove it in a court of justice. For you have no proof, I repeat it, sir—no proof! It would be simply madness in me, or any other lawyer, to attempt a contest on such grounds with a man who has the power, influence and position of Robert Clive."

"Power, influence and position! Aye, curse him—curse him!" was the passionate reply. "He has all—all that of which he has robbed me, increased a thousand-fold! And I—I have not even the right to bear my father's name!"

"Be calm, my dear sir—be calm," said the old lawyer, who was growing rather nervous at the visitors passionate demonstrations. "There are thousands of cases such as yours met with in our profession every day. You can do nothing but submit—nothing but submit."

"Submit!" There was something terrible in the man's hoarse, suppressed tone. "You know not the fierce blood that flows in my veins, or you would never speak to me of submission! Submit to the foul, cruel injustice that takes from me my name, my birthright—the name and birthright I should hand down in honor to my children? Submit to living as I do, a nameless outcast, while he, the liar, the spoiler, fattens on his ill-gotten gains. Submit to be driven from his threshold like a dog by his upstart son? I tell you, sir, there are wrongs to which no one can submit who calls himself a man! Submit? Never! May my right arm wither and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth when I abandon my righteous cause—when I cease to struggle against Robert Clive!"

And, with a fierce gesture of his uplifted arm, the man flung himself from the room, just as the flowing garments of Miss Marian swept up the stairway.

"I wonder—I do wonder what it all means?" said that young lady, a lambent gleam of triumph in her dark eyes. "Some dreadfull family secret of the Clives. And they have always been so high and mighty, and honorable. Ha, ha! Mr. Herbert, perhaps you are not so grand a catch as you think you are. There is a skeleton in your closet, eh? and my name is not Marian Grey unless I drag it to the light yet!"

CHAPTER VIII.

Beside the River.

In no very pleasant frame of mind, Herbert commenced his homeward walk. He was vexed with himself, vexed with Miss Marian, and, such is love's inconsistency, vexed with unconscious Sybil.

Why did she choose to set herself apart from her sex? Why did she make enemies and critics of those sharp-eyed, sharp-tongued beings, who can forgive all things but superiority? What was this veil of mystery surrounding her that could make one so sweet, and pure, and gentle, the object of so much distrust?

Ah, Love—immortal! Love itself—is not invulnerable to the shafts of malice! and Herbert, who, only a few hours before, had vowed to Sybil that no shadow could ever darken the sunshine in which her image dwelt, even found himself questioning, fearing, nay, even doubting, the woman who ruled his heart!

Truly, Miss Marian knew how and when to wound.

In his present uncomfortable mood, Herbert felt no wish to return home. He had no mind for Fannie's gay badinage, or his father's more earnest converse; he did not care to meet Laurence or Fenton, who had asked him to stop in the former's bachelor sanctum until their arrival, when Fenton was to concoct some remarkable beverage, whose proportions were solemn mysteries to the civilian world.

So, striking into a by-path that led through the grove, the heir of Clive Towers proceeded to indulge his gloomy meditations by a walk to the river.

The road wound close to the shore, and the quiet waters seemed to murmur their peaceful music at his very feet.

The veiling mists, now illumined by the light of a queenly moon, floated around him like transparent clouds, and gave a strange, unreal, dream-like aspect to the familiar landscape. He was in a world of vague, fleeting shadows; all about him was vapory and uncertain. He could grasp, he could hold nothing; and, like a weird echo from some far-off shore he seemed again to hear the melody of Sybil's sunset song:

"Thou in the sunlight
And I in the shade;
Yet, ah, by the sunlight
The shadow is made!
Thine be the gladness
And mine be the gloom;
For love, though thy triumph,
Is only my doom."

The memory of the sweet, sad face, upturned to the rose-tinted sky—of the wistful glance in the soft gray eyes—the tremulous pleading of the beautiful lips—came back to Herbert with a force that swept away all other feelings by a gush of noble tenderness.

"My love, my love—my own sweet, sorrowful love—though the whole world should turn against her, my heart shall be faithful and true! my love shall be her refuge, her safeguard, her shelter! One gleam from her pure, sweet eyes—one faint smile from her lovely lips—is more eloquent than the voices of a thousand such frivolous, worldly-minded critics as Marian Grey! Sybil, my darling—my own sweet Sybil!"

It was only the unconscious cry of a heart stirred into renewed tenderness; but, as if his words had magic power over her, a white form glided through the mists, and Sybil herself, or her disembodied spirit, stood before him.

For a moment Herbert Clive, sound-minded and practical as he was, thought he looked upon some unearthly vision; for, veiled and shrouded in garments of clinging white, with her pure face wearing a look of dread despair, and her eyes fixed in a gaze of stony unconsciousness, she passed him, like the wraith of her living, breathing self, and glided on, with outstretched arms, to the silent, sleeping river.

Then suddenly, as if aroused by a lightning-flash from a dream, Herbert's sober senses awoke, and, with a low, startled cry of "Sybil!" he caught the girl's arm even as she poised herself for a spring into the waves.

"Sybil! Sybil are you mad or dreaming? God in heaven, what is it you would do?"

She gave one wild, terrified glance into his face, and then sank, cowering and trembling on the sands at his feet. feet.

"You here?" she whispered, brokenly; "you—you? Then there must, indeed, be a God who watches all!"

"What is it you would do?" he repeated, sternly, for the mighty love swelling in his heart made him her censor now. "Were you seeking death, Sybil?"

"Aye, death!" she answered, in a strange, unnatural voice. "Death and safety. Safety for you and for me! Oh, why did you stop me—why did you stop me? It would have been only a brief pang, and then all would have been over!"

Herbert Clive, gay and thoughtless as his young life had been, shuddered at the girl's words. He had knelt at a Christian mother's knee, had learned from her loving lips those lessons that are far more enduring than all the theological teachings of after years. Was it possible that this fair young being lived in the darkness of utter disbelief?

"All would have been over?" he repeated. "Sybil, Sybil, you know not what you say! Have you no faith, no hope, that you would so madly brave a dreadful Hereafter?"

"No, no! No faith, no hope!" she answered, despairingly. "I have nothing, nothing, either in this world or the next. Life has given me naught but struggle and suffering. Only in death can I seek peace and rest!"

"Do you speak to me thus, Sybil—to me—to the man who loves you better than his own life?" was Herbert's reproachful question. "Oh, my darling, my darling!" he continued, his tone changing into one of infinite tenderness; "what is this dark sorrow, this dark mystery, that is blighting, cursing your sweet young life? What is it that stands between us, Sybil? Show me the barrier that my love is powerless to level! Show me the wound my love is powerless to heal!"

"Love? love?" she echoed the word as if it stung her. "Do not speak to me of love! Look at me here, poised on the very brink of a self-sought death, hopeless, wretched, desperate; and you talk to me of love! Go seek happier women for your honeyed phrases. They fall upon my heart like dew upon a parched desert, whose sands can never flower or fruit."

"I will not believe it," he answered. "Your heart is no desert, Sybil. Blighted and seared it may be, but love can make it bloom anew. You can not frighten me, darling. You can not set my love aside. It has risen upon your life like the sun rises over the sheltered valleys. Its course is unalterable. It must shine until the day is done."

"There is no day for me!" was the passionate answer; "no light, no sun! It is all darkness and night—eternal night!"

"The sun has risen," he repeated, taking her by the hand, and lifting her, with gentle force, from her shrinking posture. "Darling, the sun has risen, and there can be no more night. Let the past be past forever, with its darkness, its sorrows; I seek not to unveil them, whatever they may be. The future shall be all sunshine, gladness and peace. Only trust me, Sybil—trust your wounded heart to me. Let me love you, and teach you how to love me a little in return."

"If you knew—if you only knew—how you torture me!" she murmured, in a broken whisper. "My life is dark enough, dreary enough, barren enough, already. You only mock its bitterness by pointing to the smiling Eden that lies far, far beyond its reach. Why will you not believe me when I tell you love for me is hopeless? We can never love; or if, alas, it is our cruel, cruel fate, that love must be our curse instead of a blessing—our cross instead of our crown."

"One word!" cried Herbert, detaining her, as she would have fled away—"one word, Sybil, shall silence my pleading voice forever. Are you free? Has any one the right to stand between us? Are you pledged to another?"

"I am not free," was the low reply. "There is one who stands between us, and who will stand between us forever. I am pledged to another—one whom I love and honor, and must obey."

WHAT A JOURNALIST IS.

How He Differs From a Plain, Ordinary Newspaper Man.

After his lecture before the journalistic class at Corwall university, a sophomore class asked Eli Perkins when he became a journalist.

"Never," said Eli, "but I do hope, after twenty years' more experience, to become a newspaper man."

"Well, what is the difference?" asked the sophomore.

"Just this, my son," said Eli. "A callow reporter calls himself a journalist. As George Welshons says, 'in his first tadpole stage, when his head is swelled,' he is a journalist. If he finally shows great brain and industry, and escapes the fool-killer, he may become a reporter. After years of study and toil, and when his brains are stuffed with wisdom, wit and discretion enough to kill his own editorials and 'make up' a sixteen-page Sunday edition, then I say he's a newspaper man."

"Then he is as high up in the profession as he can get?"

"Yes; he is now at the pinnacle. By and by, when he gets lazy and stiff and old and stupid, they reduce him to the position of editor."

"An editor is a decayed newspaper man, with bunions on his brain, chilblains on his heart, corns on his ears and warts and dyspepsia on his liver. The business of the editor is to sleep up-town all day and at night he prowls around a newspaper office, and at midnight he takes a blue pencil and assassinates every bright and readable idea that the smart reporters have brought in during the day.

"The editor is all epithet, while the reporter is all proof. The editor calls a man a chicken-thief, and gets sued for libel, while the reporter, kodak in hand, interviews him while picking off the feathers in his back yard, and the next day the thief takes a whole advertisement to shut up the newspaper.

"No," continued Eli; "I hope I am a newspaper man, and I dread the time when I shall get old, and stupid, and have to kill my own bright things which made the people glad; sold newspapers and made Americans know me."

MOST DEADLY WEAPON.

A New Gun Said to Be Superior to Any Now in Use.

In accordance with the recommendation of parliament the British army is being strengthened by adding a new gun which will insure the supremacy of Great Britain over the seas for many years to come. It is known as the twelve-inch steel and wire gun, and is not only the best weapon which the royal navy has ever had, but is far superior to any gun possessed by any foreign navy.

It weighs fifty tons, is forty-one feet long, has a muzzle velocity of 2,367 feet per second. The projectile weighs 850 pounds, the bursting charge being 83 pounds and the firing charge 167½ pounds of cordite.

The admiralty has ordered 450 at a cost of £10,000 each. Of these 150 have been completed and 300 are still in the hands of the contractors.

Each man-of-war will carry four of these formidable weapons, and when the navy is supplied they will be issued to forts on the sea front. The new gun will be the heaviest in the English service, and will take the place of the 110-ton, 100-ton and 80-ton guns, of which no more are to be made.

The best Krupp gun can fire a shot twelve and a half miles, and the United States government is constructing at one of its various arsenals a monster gun which, it is said, will carry a heavy shot twenty-one miles. The new British naval gun, though less than half the weight of the American weapon, mounted on the heights of Dover, can, however, drop a shell on the shores of France. No accuracy of aim could, of course, be obtained or maintained at this long distance, the effective range being 16,000 yards, or between nine and ten miles.

Tree Burials in New Zealand.

The recent fall of an enormous puketea tree near Opotiki, New Zealand, discloses the fact that the hollow interior from the roots to the first fork, about forty-five feet from the ground, had been filled with human bodies. A confused heap of skeletons burst out at the butt of the tree when it fell. A local paper says: "A more extraordinary sight than this monarch of the forest lying prone and discharging a perfect hetacomb of human skeletons can scarcely be conceived. Some are nearly perfect, while others are mixed up in a chaotic mass of heads, hands, feet and arms, indiscriminately. All the Maoris here seem to have been quite unaare of this natural charnel house, and declare that it must have been some hundreds of years since this novel family vault was filled with its ghastly occupants."—Austin's Hawaiian Weekly.

WEIRD TALE OF SEA.

VESSEL SAILS WITH TWENTY SOULS ON BOARD.

Reaches Spain in Good Condition, but Deserted—No Trace from That Day to This of the Missing Crew—Theories of the Disaster.

No deeper mystery of the sea was ever left for man to solve than the fate of the crew of the brig Marie Celeste, which left Boston in the 60's, bound for Mediterranean ports. The story as told in an English publication is one of absorbing interest and opens up a vast field of speculation. The Marie Celeste set sail from Boston with a crew of seventeen hands, the captain, his wife and his little daughter, twenty souls all told. Nothing, as far as we know, occurred on the voyage across the Atlantic other than the routine life of a trading brig at sea. But one fine day the brig came within hail of the Spanish coast. It was thought she was heading for Gibraltar on her way to enter the great inland sea. All her sails were set. The weather was fine, the sea calm, and a light wind bore the vessel along. Duly the Spanish authorities hailed the brig, without receiving any answer to their signals. Then came a visit of inspection by the coast guard, and an astonishing state of things revealed itself. Not a soul of the twenty persons who set sail from Boston in the brig was found on board. Every man had disappeared from the captain to the boy, and the captain's wife and child also were as if they had never been. The vessel was minutely and carefully examined. There was an inspection by the American consul; there was a business-like noting of all details, and a report was duly prepared for the authorities on the other side of the sea.

Not a rope or stay, not a sail was injured or a bolt missing. Everything from truck to keel was in its proper place. The brig's boats were all on board, slung on their davits or stowed on deck. Below everything was in the same undisturbed state. The watches of the captain and his wife hung on nails in the cabin. In the men's quarters, as in the cabin, there were the remains of half-eaten dinners, cooked apparently not long before the brig drifted toward the Spanish coast. Below and aloft all was silence—a ghastly, significant silence, appalling by reason of its inexplicable nature, and causing the faces of the searchers to pale before the mysterious possibilities which offered as solutions of the grim deadness of the ship. Since the day when the Marie Celeste drifted on her course to the European shores not a trace of any one of the twenty souls has been discovered. Needless to say, strict inquiries were made both in America and in Europe concerning captain and crew. Every sailors' home was notified of the story, in case some derelict seaman should have come to a restful haven therein. The names and nationalities of the crew were known, but not a scrap of intelligence, not a wave-washed bottle with a message in it, not even a dead body, ever came to light which could suggest a solution of this horrible mystery.

Suppose we set our wits a-going on the problem of the Marie Celeste, what explanations are possible or likely to merit attention? Pirates and a wholesale slaughter of the crew by ordinary murder or by walking the plank? Nonsense. Piracy was no more common in the Atlantic in the 60's than it is now, and pirates do not attack a ship merely for the sake of murdering the crew or without looting the vessel and sinking her, and a piratical attack surely would have left traces of a struggle on the deck. The pirate idea clearly will not hold water at all.

A storm which swept everybody away? Equally untenable as a theory; for storms there were none at the time the brig drifted eastward, and storms leave traces of damage such as were absent in a vessel with all sails set and not a rope or bolt missing. Some calamity in the way of illness, you suggest. Well, where were the bodies? And if, mayhap, you maintain that the last survivor pitched his dead friends into the sea and then drowned himself, you have first to find that mysterious epidemic, and to regard it as very unlikely that any disease should attack a whole crew rapidly and instantly, so as to cut them off in a few hours' time.

Don't forget the half-eaten dinners, for that fact proves that within a short distance of the land the crew were practically at rest, undisturbed by any omen of approaching calamity, and no disease I know of, save, perhaps, cholera of malignant type, can kill people in a few hours. Besides, you must have infection, and whence did the pestilent microbes come to the brig? Sudden insanity on the part of one of the crew, leading to homicidal slaying of the others? Well, if you elect to believe that theory, you may. I don't, for the plain reason that seventeen men could surely have overpowered one. The insanity idea will not work. It does not explain the facts as a true theory should, and a true theory should explain them and be contradicted by none.

One of Glen McDonough's Jokes.

In spite of his farces Glen McDonough had written two or three lines to be spoken by a chorus girl. The lines were given to a green, heavy amateur, who looked well and would do. At the rehearsal the girl made her way to McDonough, who held the book, and said: "Mr. McDnough, I have a line in the first act and one in the third. Couldn't you write me one for the second act, to?" McDonough thought a minute, looked at the girl, and said: "Yes, in the banquet scene you enter and say, 'Here is the ham.'" "Oh, do I bring the ham on with me?" "No, my dear; it is not a speech, it is a confession."

PAINTING AND MUSIC.

Description Which Illustrates Contrast Between the Two.

A picture is a thing the incidents of which are carried merely over space, and have nothing to do with more than an instant of time, says the writer of one of the "Tesserae," so delightful a feature of the architect. Music, on the contrary, says Pall Mall Gazette, is an affair the incidents of which are carried over time, and in which space is not considered, but which notwithstanding, as far recognized, may be compared to a stream, the minimum width of which is represented when a single note only, in extreme attention, occupies the ear, and the maximum width of which occurs when the fullest harmonies are rolling under their greatest depth of tone. In music the ear is occupied one moment with that which it ceases to entertain the next, and this circumstance enables the composer in one piece to perform transitions through many keys, according to certain laws, at first sanctioned by the pleasures of the ear, but now found to be accompanied by coincidences of simultaneous vibration. In painting it is quite a different affair; the eye does not cease to be occupied one moment by that which it entertained in the preceding one. On the contrary, it is acknowledged that a picture is, or should be addressed to the eye in toto. It is the affair of an instant of time; its color is merely one of the embellishments of that instant; and though it may contain the fullest harmony, it should be the harmony of one key, if one feeling is intended to be produced by it; there being nothing of the contemplated elements of the instant of time and the certain limited surface of a picture, sufficiently analogous to a series of chromatic deflections and absolute transitions from one key to another in music, to warrant any digression or perform a resolution the necessity of which, in music, such digression would require.

GUEST OF THE FRENCH NATION

An Indiana Girl Who Wears the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

Jennie Creek of Milgrove, a little village in Indiana, is an American girl who is certainly to be envied. She has been invited by the National Humane society of France to be the guest of honor of the French government during the Paris exposition. Jennie will wear upon her breast when she starts for the other side of the water one of the proudest decorations in the gift of the French nation, the cross of the Legion of Honor. She received this high mark of distinction for a deed of exceptional bravery performed six years ago, when she was but 11 years of age. The story is no doubt a familiar one to many of our readers. On the afternoon of Sept. 10, 1893, Jennie, while wandering through some woods belonging to her foster father, her parents having died some years before, suddenly caught the smell of burning wood and on going to investigate found that a railroad bridge over a gulch on the Panhandle road, which ran near by, had burned away. Almost at the same instant the brave girl heard the rumble of an express—the World's Fair train rushing on to destruction. She knew that she must act quickly or the train would plunge into the yawning chasm with its precious freight of human lives. Tearing off her red underskirt she waved it frantically before the onrushing train. The engineer saw the signal of danger, reversed the lever and came to a stop almost on the verge of the gorge. Jennie was carried through the train in triumph and the passengers took up a collection for her. On board were a number of French people, returning from the fair, and when they reached their native land they told the story of the brave little American girl. The result was that she receive the five-pointed gold star of the society of the Legion of Honor.

A Botanical Freak.

One of the curiosities of nature is known as a plant atol. There are but two or three of these known to scientists. This atol is made up of a circle of growing plants. They are found floating on the top of ponds or lakes. They form a hoop-shaped figure and are closely matted together at the roots, which make a sort of cup or basin, to which more or less vegetable matter falls or floats. There is a sufficient amount of nutriment in this to keep the plant growing. As it increases, the roots become longer and larger, and in time the plant may anchor itself in the soil at the bottom of the pond. These rings, after many years of accumulation and growth, make what appear to be small islands. It is the opinion of certain scientists that islands may have been formed in this manner. The roots catch all floating vegetable or animal matter. Leaves collect and form mold, and after a while birds may drop plant or tree seeds on the little pod that floats on the top of the water. These take root and further assist in the growth of the little island. It may take centuries for the plant to come to any size, but with nature a thousand years are but as yesterday.

Amber and Its Production.

An enormous amount of amber comes from Prussia, where it is mined by what is practically a monopoly. The company controlling the greater part of the out-put pay to the government over $160,000 a year for the privilege of control. The beach in East Prussia, after heavy northwest winds, is often thickly strewn with amber, which comes up in the sea-weed that is often piled up to the height of three or four feet along the shore. After a storm, men, women and children swarm over the beach, gathering amber and finding most profitable employment thereby. From a hundred to a hundred and fifty tons of raw amber are worked up every year in one city. The greater part of it is melted to make varnish and lac. Beads are made of many of the best pieces, and these are in demand all over the world.

ALABASTINE is the original and only durable wall coating, entirely different from all kalsomines. Ready for use in white or fourteen beautiful tints by adding cold water.

LADIES naturally prefer ALABASTINE for walls and ceilings, because it is pure, clean, durable. Put up in dry powdered form, in five-pound packages, with full directions.

ALL kalsomines are cheap, temporary preparations made from whiting, chalks, clays, etc., and stuck on walls with decaying animal glue. ALABASTINE is not a kalsomine.

BEWARE of the dealer who says he can sell you the "same thing" as ALABASTINE or "something just as good." He is either not posted or is trying to deceive you.

AND IN OFFERING something he has bought cheap and tries to sell on ALABASTINE'S demands, he may not realize the damage you will suffer by a kalsomine on your walls.

SENSIBLE dealers will not buy a lawsuit. Dealers risk one by selling and consumers by using infringement. Alabastine Co. own right to make wall coating to mix with cold water.

THE INTERIOR WALLS of every church and school should be coated only with pure, durable ALABASTINE. It safeguards health. Hundreds of tons used yearly for this work.

IN BUYING ALABASTINE, customers should avoid getting cheap kalsomines under different names. Insist on having our goods in packages and properly labeled.

NUISANCE of wall paper is obviated by ALABASTINE. It can be used on plastered walls, wood ceilings, brick or canvas. A child can brush it on. It does not rub or scale off.

ESTABLISHED in favor. Shun all imitations. Ask paint dealer or druggist for tint card. Write us for interesting booklet, free. ALABASTINE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE TEEMING WEST.

Western Canada Prairie Lands Being Filled with Excellent Settlers.

The salient fact that presents itself in taking a birdseye view of the Canadian West, is that of intense activity in every department. Whether the glance be turned upon the district east of Winnipeg, the Red River Valley south or north, the Dauphin and M. & N. W. district, the Southwestern, or whether it take in the great central division along the main line of the C. P. R., stretching away out to the Rockies and from there bending north and south to Prince Albert and Edmonton, McLeod and Lethbridge—whether the examination be made in any of these directions the same activity, growth and hopefulness are observable.

The Canadian West is not only a good place to locate permanently, but it is also a good place to invite one's relatives and friends to come to. This is the spirit that seems to animate the West at the present time, and its effects are to be seen on every hand. To enumerate the towns where handsome and substantial blocks and residences have gone up this year would be simply to give a list of the towns and villages along the railway lines. And this movement has not been confined to these centers of population, but in many cases it has been overshadowed by the improvement in farm buildings.

So far as one can see, this is no passing phase, no repetition of any temporary boom following a period of good crops and fair prices. It is a movement more spontaneous, more general, more marked than anything that has gone before, and seems to indicate that the great West, like Samson, bursting the encompassing bands, has awakened to a period of activity and development that will surpass anything we have known in the past and which will only be paralleled by the opening out of some of the most fertile of the western states of the union.

Look at some of the figures. Over a thousand schools in Manitoba, and the number going up by leaps and bounds; something like 500 schools in the territories. Winnipeg as representing the gateway of the West, the third city in the Dominion in regard to bank clearings, postal business and probably in regard to customs, the customs return at Winnipeg running about 30 to 40 per cent greater month by month than in the fiscal year of 1897-8, the largest previous year for actual business entries, when over $900,000 was paid through the Winnipeg office for duty; the C. P. R. and Canada Northwest land sales together running over $1,500,000 for the year. These and a thousand more signs show how the West has leaped into new life.

This is an inspiring and cheering spectacle, but it brings with it great responsibilities. The business men realize this, the banks realize it and have spread their agencies through every bustling little town clear out to the coast; the churches realize it, and one denomination alone has opened an average of about thirty new stations in each of the past two years, and will increase this in the year now entered upon; the government departments realize it, and there is talk of redistribution and additional members. The educational branches realize it, and new schools are springing up everywhere. Over 12,000 settlers came in from the United States alone last year, and these, with the people who came in from the East, prove the most rigorous westerners. They lose no time in developing their farms, in filling their grazing lands with stock, and in every district is to be found evidences of thrift and prosperity.

A Grand Farming Country

One of the finest agricultural regions in the country is now being opened up by the building of the Bismarck, Washburn & Great Falls Railway.

The country referred to is the famous Missouri Valley in Burleigh and McLean Counties, North Dakota. The soil is a rich, dark loam, with clay subsoil; good water, a healthful climate and an abundance of cheap coal. Thousands of settlers are preparing to move into the country this spring. You can get choice lands at $4.00 to $6.00 per acre on easy payments. If you are interested write for descriptive maps to

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Varieties of Strawberries.

From Farmers' Review: It seems to me now, after twenty years of experience, that there is nothing more important to the strawberry grower than choice of variety. In the raising of grain, or vegetables or fruit of any kind, much depends on the proper selection of varieties, but in strawberry culture almost everything depends on it. With a pretty general knowledge of the well tested varieties now grown, gained both by observation and reading, I do not hesitate to say emphatically that for this latitude and for a number of degrees north and south of the latitude of Chicago, the one great berry, worth more than all the others together, is the Warfield.

Speaking of strawberry culture in the past I think it is true that there have been just three great berries, each of which had its day and gave way to the next, and these are the Wilson, the Crescent, and the Warfield. Growers who raised the Wilson in its day and who at the proper time substituted the Crescent, and then after the Warfield was well introduced planted it and gave up the Crescent, have done the best for themselves and for their customers that could be done. I think most practical growers will agree with me when I speak of the expense and disappointment which have attended our efforts to secure the best varieties. What a time indeed we have had with the highly praised newcomers, the Bidwells, Manchesters, Jewels, Lady Rusks, Chas. Downeys, Big Bobs, Mt. Vernons, Bubachs, Jessies, Parker Earles, and a host of others whose names I will not mention, all introduced with a great flourish and often having some good qualities but as practical, business berries, utterly worthless. It seems strange to me that so many writers and even experiment stations speak of some good point in very many of these varieties, without adding that in the summing up, they have no value at all.

I know that some growers will protest against my judgment of some of these berries, but I believe the best conclusions of practical men are in line with my own. Some would probably defend the Bubach and Haverland, which are of good size and productive, but I never ate one of the first without regretting it, and the second I would not permit my pickers to gather, so wretchedly soft and tasteless it is. Parker Earle is solid and productive, but of bad color and unreliable. Beder Wood is productive and has been highly praised, but I have always felt guilty for picking it at all, so soft and insipid and colorless it is and I am glad to see in our latest station reports that it is not recommended as it was.

Doubtless some of the new berries will prove to have value, and some, like the Marshall, are certain to be of use for fancy market, but I repeat in conclusion that for the climate I have mentioned, for real value both to producer and consumer, there is no well-tested berry which is worthy of comparison with Warfield. In my view the most important problem for practical growers now is to find the best and most reliable fertilizer for the Warfield.

S. W. GIBSON.

The Value of Weeds.

Weeds have a value. The writer once heard Professor Bailey say that the weed is the friend of the farmer, and no man should want to get rid of a farm because it is weedy. He himself had purchased a good farm at a low price, because it had all run to weeds and the former owner believed that they were so numerous as to greatly reduce the value of the land. But these same weeds had been keeping the fertility of the soil from leaching out, and had kept the ground in a condition where it would not bake, but would readily yield to the plow. He simply turned all the weeds under and got back the fertility they had taken from the ground. Then he planted to other crops and had a regained farm.

Were it not for weeds, say after a clover crop, the nitrogen in the soil in readiness for plant use would disappear. As it is, the weeds take it up and hold it for subsequent crops. The cultivation that is necessary to keep down weeds is not time and effort lost. The benefit to the crop cultivated is more than enough to pay for the outlay. The additional effect of conservation of moisture is not to be forgotten.

Weeds are also valuable for the work they do in keeping the land in the hands of the many. Were there no weeds the cultivation of the land could be undertaken on an immense scale by men of wealth and a monopoly in land would be possible. If such a monopoly were attempted at this time, the cost of keeping the land clean would make it impossible to keep it under control.

Among the Window Plants.

From the Farmers' Review: At this season of the year most plants in the window will begin to make strong, vigorous growth, if properly fed. As soon as they begin to grow, but not before, give them liberal applications of some good fertilizer. Many persons whose plants are not growing satisfactorily think to "give them a start" by feeding them rich food. This is all wrong. The plants are not in condition to make use of such food until they begin to grow. It injures them if given when they cannot assimilate it. Therefore, wait and keep close watch of them, and when signs of growth are seen, begin to feed them. Give weak applications at first, increasing the supply as the growth of the plant increases.

The proper time to train plants is when they are growing. If a branch shows a tendency to outgrow other branches, thus making the plant unsymmetrical, nip off the end of it at once. Keep it from making more growth until the other branches have had a chance to catch up with it, thus giving the plant proper balance on all sides. Most persons neglect their plants in this respect, because, they say, "It seems such a pity to interfere with them, when they are growing so well." Growth is not all we aim at. We want well-shaped, symmetrical plants, and such plants we can not have unless we give them proper training. Very few plants can be trusted to train themselves. Whatever training they get should be given while they are in the early stages of development. The old saying that it is hard work to teach an old dog new tricks applies here. When a plant has been allowed to grow to suit itself until it has reached its prime, it is too late to do very much for it. Take it in hand, then, while growing, and make it understand that it must come to your terms. Plants are tractable things. They will do as you tell them to if they see you "mean business."

EBEN E. REXFORD.

Water Hemlock.

This is called also American water hemlock, wild hemlock, spotted hemlock, spotted parsley, snakeweed, beaver poison, musquash root, muskrat weed, cowbane, spotted cowbane, children's bane, death of man.

It is a smooth erect perennial, 3 to 8 feet high, with a rigid hollow stem, numerous branches, finely-dissected leaves, white flowers, and a cluster of spindle-shaped roots, which vary in length from 1½ to 3 inches, and are very characteristic of the plant. It grows commonly in swamps and damp soils throughout the Atlantic states westward to Louisiana, Iowa and Minnesota; much less commonly northwestward through Nebraska to the Rocky Mountains and in New Mexico.

This is one of the most poisonous native plants in the United States, being rapidly fatal to both man and animals. The roots are especially dangerous, because the taste, being aromatic and to some people suggestive of horseradish, parsnips, artichokes or sweet cicely, is apt to lead children to eat them when they are found forced out of the soil by washing, freezing or other causes in the early spring. Cattle sometimes eat the tubers, and in marshes they are poisoned by drinking water contaminated by the juice of roots that have been crushed by being trampled upon. No estimate can be made of the amount of damage done to live stock, but it is very considerable. The human victims average several per annum.

FIG. 14.—Water hemlock (Cicuta maculata), showing section of spindle-shaped root and lower stem, the leaves, flowers, and fruit one-half natural size; also fruit and cross section of seed, enlarged five times.

The prominent symptoms of the poisoning are colicky pains, vomiting, staggering, unconsciousness, and frightful convulsions ending in death.

Fertility in Potatoes.

Bulletin 57 of the Maine Experiment Station giving some figures of the chemical contents of a potato crop says: Assuming these figures to fairly represent potatoes as grown in Maine, a crop of 200 bushels, weighing six tons, would remove thirty-seven pounds of nitrogen, sixteen pounds of phosphoric acid and fifty-eight pounds of potash. If the amounts and proportions of fertilizing elements removed by a crop could be taken as a guide in preparing a field for that crop, the problem of supplying the proper amount and kind of plant food to the soil would be much simplified. To manure a field for a crop of potatoes, nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash would have to be added in about the proportions given above and in sufficient quantity to supply the vines and tubers the land was expected to yield. A formula made up on this basis would be very materially different from any mixed fertilizer on the market and would contain the fertilizing elements in about the following proportions: Nitrogen, 5 parts; phosphoric acid, 2 parts; and potash, 8 parts.

Mixing Silage.

At a recent dairymen's convention in Illinois the question of the mixing of silage was considered.

Q.—How do you mix your silage?

W. J. Kennedy.—Some do it by taking gunny sacks and sewing them end to end thus making a tube that will carry the cut corn to all parts of the silo.

Mr. Kennedy.—In the falling of cut silage from the carrier into the silo the heaviest parts go farthest and the lightest parts fall directly under the carrier. I got over that trouble by hanging a blanket up in front of the carrier for the silage to strike against, and the leaves and stalks fall together. Then all we have to do is to spread it.

Q.—Can spoiled silage be fed to young stock with profit?

Mr. Frasier.—You might let them pick it over, but they should not be starved into eating it. The hogs might be given a chance to pick out the corn.

Russian Thistle as Fodder.—A Nebraska friend of mine whose stock wintered last year largely on Russian thistle, thinks that it isn't a bad kind of a weed, after all. And many in the west are coming to the same opinion. The Russian thistle is proving a blessing instead of a curse to the drouth stricken or desert lands. Moreover, it is not "taking the country" in any section, as was predicted a few years ago. The various laws enacted against it are practically dead now, because there is no need to enforce them.

A Metaphorical Expulsion.

Bill—You proposed for the hand of his daughter?

Jill—Well, I suggested that I might make him a good son-in-law.

Bill—And he put you out of the house?

Jill—In a hurry.

Bill—What excuse did he offer?

Jill—Only that he was merely throwing out a suggestion.—Yonkers Statesman.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

PERUNA PROTECTS OUR HOMES.

The Roberts Family, of Falls City, Neb., Are Healthy and Happy—A Rare Sight in These Days. They Say, "We Think Peruna Is The Greatest Medicine On Earth."

No man is better known in the State of Nebraska than Mr. Carl T. Roberts, contractor and mason. A typical American—active, shrewd and full of business sagacity. He is not only a provider for his family, but a protector. In a recent letter to Dr. Hartman he writes among other things, as follows:

"Our boy, James, had the membranous croup and repeated attacks of lung fever. Our boy, Charlie, was also subject to attacks of pneumonia and pleurisy. Our third boy, John, was subject to fever and ague (malarial) and liver trouble. Your remedy, Peruna, cured my boys entirely, and now I have three of the healthiest boys in the State of Nebraska, which I attribute to your medicine. My wife had a stomach trouble which Peruna also cured. Altogether for my whole family we have used nineteen bottles of Peruna, and have thus saved $500 in doctors' bills. I am a contractor and mason by trade, and am known all over Nebraska. I have had a stomach trouble, which has been greatly relieved by your remedy, Peruna, for which I am still taking it. We think it is the greatest medicine on earth."—C. T. Roberts, Falls City, Nebraska.

Hon. William Youngblood.

Hon. William Youngblood, Auditor for the Interior, writes from Washington, D. C., to Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, as follows: "I've often heard of your great medicine and have persuaded my wife, who has been much of a sufferer from catarrh, to try Peruna, and after using one bottle she has wonderfully improved. It has proved all you have claimed for it, and I take pleasure in recommending it to anyone who is afflicted with catarrh." Peruna has become, in a multitude of households, absolutely indispensable.

Mr. T. G. Walker, Carneiro, Kansas, writes: "It is with pleasure that I report that I am better than I have been for many years. I believe Peruna is without a doubt the best medicine that ever was used in a family. It has cured my nervousness, with which I had been afflicted for a great number of years."

It is a fact of ever-increasing astonishment that so many otherwise sensible and provident people will, for the neglect of so simple a precaution as to have a bottle of Peruna at hand, bring upon themselves the needless suffering and foolish expense that a practitioner of medicine is forced to witness every day.

As soon as the value of Peruna is fully appreciated by every household, both as a preventive and cure of these affections, tens of thousands of lives will be saved, and hundreds of thousands of chronic, lingering cases of disease prevented. Peruna is the household safeguard.

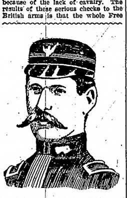
FREE STATE UP AGAIN

AS A RESULT OF THE SERIOUS CHECKS TO THE BRITISH.

Boers Are Full of Activity Over the Entire Field—Severely Censored News Brings No Satisfaction to England—Rumors That Wires to Bloemfontein Have Been Cut and That the Hussars Are Missing—No Sign That Buller Is Moving—Boers Reported in Force South of Bloemfontein, Threatening the Railway.

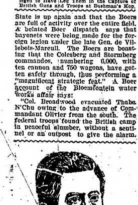
London, April 10.—When it is borne in mind that all the dispatches from the front are severely censored there is little in the news to bring satisfaction to England. Assurances that nothing need be feared, even if the railways and telegraphs are cut and Bloemfontein isolated, together with the news that the ladies and other civilians are being ordered away, do not augur well. There are rumors from Cape Town that the telegraph wires were already cut yesterday, and also that the Hussars who were sent to the relief of the Royal Irish rifles, are also missing, although probably these are the outcome of Boer exaggerations, designed to encourage the burghers.

The attempt of Gen. Colville to catch the Boer leaders in conference at Reitfontein failed probably, as usual, because of the lack of cavalry. The results of these serious checks to the British arms is that the whole Free State is up again and that the Boers are full of activity over the entire field. A belated Boer dispatch says that bayonets were being made for the foreign legion under the late Gen. de Villebois-Mareuil. The Boers are boasting that the Colesberg and Stormberg commandos, numbering 6,000, with ten cannon and 750 wagons, have gotten safely through, thus performing a "magnificent strategic feat." A Boer account of the Bloemfontein water works affair says:



Capt. Carl Reichman, U. S. A., Military Attache With the Boer Forces, Alleged to Have Led Them in the Capture of British Guns and Troops at Bushman's Kop.

"Col. Broadwood evacuated Thaba N'Chu owing to the advance of Commandant Olivier from the south. The federal troops found the British camp in peaceful slumber, without a sentinel or an outpost to give the alarm. Gen. De Wet immediately placed guns and the commandos in such positions as to surround the British, who did not have time to recover from their surprise."



Earl of Rosslyn. (Reported captured by the Boers.)

The Boers are displaying activity in Natal, but there is no sign that Gen. Buller is moving. Mafeking was still besieged April 1. The garrison was suffering seriously from lack of bread, and a mixture of oats, bran and meal was doing duty for that article, which is described as "coarse in substance, of the color of ginger bread and of the consistency of Norwegian pine."

IRISH RIFLES CAPTURED.

They Fought Steadily for Thirty Hours, but Had to Give In.

Bloemfontein, April 5.—(Delayed in transmission)—The Royal Irish rifles had been marching in the eastern part of the Free State, collecting arms, and were returning to Bethany Tuesday, when they were intercepted by a Boer commando who had placed three guns in position. The Irish intrenched themselves, while the mounted infantry scouted along both flanks, only to find escape impossible. The Boers opened with gun and rifle fire. The British replied sparingly with rifle fire, husbanding their cartridges in the hope that help would arrive. Gradually the Boers drew into closer quarters. They fired intermittingly during Tuesday, but did not attempt to reach the British position until Wednesday, when the Irish division, which had fought tenaciously, was suffering terribly from want of food and water. By this time two rifles had expended their last cartridge. Finding at this time there was no sign of succor they surrendered, having fought thirty hours steadily. They had lost ten killed and many wounded. Among the captured is Capt. Tennant, Gen. Gatacre's chief intelligence officer.

Boers Forced From Positions.

London, April 10.—The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says: "All is quiet here. Remounts and reinforcements are arriving and preparations are being made to deal with the enemy. Last Tuesday many of the historic regiments could not muster a hundred mounted men, while artillery horses were very scarce. The enemy have now been entirely cleared out from the position they lately occupied north of Glen and the British force there is being considerably augmented. Lord Kitchener commands the railway to the south and our positions are secure against interruption. The troops are still all in good spirits, though badly in need of clothing and boots."

Bad Effect on Natives.

Maseru, Basutoland, April 10.—The reoccupation of Ladybrand, Thaba N'Chu and Bloemfontein water works by the Boers in the very sight of the Basutos, who recently witnessed the expulsion of the Boers by the British is far the most important aspect of the situation here, in view of its probable effect upon the native mind. Already the natives are arguing that the British have suffered reverses, and should the British evacuate Wepener the results, so far as the natives are concerned, are likely to prove disastrous. All hope to see Gen. Brabant steadily advance and drive the enemy before him.

Unrest Swaziland.

Lourenzo Marques, April 10—A runner who has just arrived here from Sopobo's Kraal, Swaziland, says that Sopobo has been killed and his women tied up with ropes. Unrest is increasing in the country, which is in a most unsettled state, bordering on a reign of terror in the absence of "white men's law." Many natives have been threatened, and in one district they have been completely killed off. A messenger from Bromersdorp, Swaziland, says the Boers are making presents to the queen and are seeking to pass through Swaziland armed.

Bloemfontein Is Safe.

London, April 10. — The Bloemfon. correspondent of the Morning Post, telegraphing Friday, says: "No anxiety need be felt as to the security of Bloemfontein, although the enemy may succeed in destroying telegraphic communication and even in cutting the railway for a brief period. A number of civilians, including Lady Bentick and Lady Edward Cecil, who arrived here recently from Cape Town, left Friday in compliance with a general order issued by the authorities."

As Reported by Boers.

Pretoria, April 10—It is reported that Gen. De Wet attacked and defeated a large force of British cavalry at De Wet's dorp, southeast of Bloemfontein, capturing 450 prisoners and a large quantity of ammunition and camp stores and inflicting heavy loss. The federal loss was two killed and four wounded. All is quiet with the other commandos.

Boers Threaten the Railway.

Bloemfontein, April 10.—The Boers are reported in force to the south, threatening the railway, which, however, is strongly protected. British pickets at Springfield, eight miles distant, were attacked Saturday by Boers advancing from the water works. Remounts are rapidly arriving. The British are in high spirits and anxious to advance.

Roberts' Advance Will Be Delayed.

London, April 10.—The Cape Town correspondent of the Daily News, telegraphing Friday, says: "Owing to lack of horses and to the sufferings of the men from pneumonia, due to thin clothing, Lord Roberts has decided not to make a big move until the troops are provided with thicker uniforms."

No Trace of Caeptured British.

Bethany, April 10.—Gen. Gatacre's force has returned here without having any trace of the ill-fated British column captured by the Reddersburg commando. It is impossible to estimate the British losses, but as the men fought stubbornly it is probable that these were large.

Insurgents Walk Into a Trap.

Carnovon, Cape Colony, April 10.—It is reported that 200 insurgents who were not aware that Sir Charles Parsons had occupied Kenhardt, rode into that place and were captured by the British troops. The Canadian artillery has arrived here from Van Wyck's Vlei.

Steyn's Brother Captured.

Bloemfontein, April 10.—Another of Mr. Steyn's brothers was captured near Karee Siding Friday and arrived here Saturday.

AMERICAN GIRL ASSAULTED.

Louisville Banker's Daughter Struck by a German in Italy.

Louisville, April 10—James A. Leech, a well known Louisville banker, has received news of an assault made upon his daughter, Miss Carolyn Leech, while she was traveling on the Italian railway between Florence and Venice. The only information given in the dispatch was that Miss Leech was struck and rendered unconscious by a German who was traveling in the same compartment with her. Mr. Leech telegraphed his wife for further information, and to the American consul at Venice. The matter was also reported to the American consul at Rome. Miss Leech has been traveling in Southern Europe all winter on account of her health.

Store Burglarized.

Rice's, Minn., April 10.—John Gazette's store was burglarized. The safe was opened and $20 in money and $1,000 in checks and orders were taken. There is no clue.

Petty Burglary.

Stewartville, Minn., April 10.—The hardware store of Demro & Ballard was broken into and about $40 worth of knives and razors stolen. No clue to the burglars.

Prisoners Attempt to Escape.

Marquette, Mich., April 10. — Six prisoners awaiting trial here made ineffectual attempt at escape in the jail here. They were all charged with murder.

Succeeds His Father as Consul.

Washington—Charles E. Barnes of Decatur, Ill., was nominated as consul at Cologne, to fill the vacancy created by the death of his father. The former consul filled the office a number of years, having been appointed by President Harrison.

Ristori Still Vigorous.

Rome—Mme. Ristori, who is now seventy-nine years old and who was a rival of Rachel half a century ago, is still vigorous. She delivered an address at the recent dramatic congress in Rome.

Increase in Exports America.

Berlin—The quarterly exports of the Hamburg consulate are $5,765,000, as compared with $3,104,000 in 1899; of Berlin, $7,114,000, as compared to $5,050,000 in 1899.

Expulsion of Religious Order.

Paris—The religious order of the Trinitaires at Barcelonette have been expelled from France. The members were escorted across the frontier and the convent seized.

Military authorities will ascertain the adaptability of Chicamauga Park for a military post.

CONGRESS

RESUME OF THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS.

Washington, April 3.—Advocates and opponents of the Porto Rican tariff and government bill waged vigorous war in the senate yesterday for seven hours. Long before the senate convened at 11 o'clock the galleries were crowded, and many remained until the senate adjourned. Those who listened to the debate were well repaid. The speeches were good and the running debate unusually bright and lively. During the speech of Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin, particularly, the chamber fairly scintillated with sparks as he crossed argumentative swords with some of the best debaters on the Democratic side. His address, if so it could be called, was devoted almost wholly to a discussion of the constitutional questions involved in the pending bill.

Mr. Bate of Tennessee opened the discussion of the day with a carefully prepared speech in opposition to the bill. He was followed by Mr. Cullom of Illinois in a vigorous speech supporting the measure. Then came Mr. Depew of New York, a member of the committee which framed the bill, who made an eloquent and forceful defense of the measure. Mr. Spooner, who spoke next, was followed by Mr. Perkins of California, also a member of the committee on Porto Rico, who presented a strong argument for the bill. The closing speech was delivered by Mr. Simon of Oregon, who, in criticising the measure, entered into a brief discussion of the political effects of its passage.

The final vote on the bill will be taken late this afternoon. It is arranged for 4 o'clock, but an effort will be made to extend the time for debate beyond that hour.

The House.

A possible reduction of the war tax was foreshadowed in a resolution adopted by the house yesterday calling upon the secretary of the treasury for information as to the probable surplus existing revenue laws would create during this and the coming fiscal year. The resolution was presented by Mr. Payne, the floor leader of the majority.

Under suspension of the rules bills were passed to open to settlement 418,000 acres in the Fort Hall Indian reservation and 2,500,000 acres in Oklahoma by ratifying the agreements with the Bannock and Shoshone Indians and the Klowas, Comanches and Apaches; to divide the Northern judicial district of New York into two districts and to appropriate $100,000 for a military post at Sheridan, Wyo.

The Senate.

Washington, April 4. — This was a notable day in the United States senate. It brought to a close the sharpest and most poignant debate upon any measure since those discussed during the memorable "war congress" two years ago. At 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon the votes were begun upon the Porto Rican tariff and civil government bill and the pending amendments and less than an hour later the measure about which there had been so much contention in and out of congress, was passed by a majority of 9, the final vote being 40 to 31. Only committee amendments were adopted. Mr. Davis' amendment, providing that "no duties on imports or exports after the passage of this act should be levied or collected on any articles imported from the United States into Porto Rico or from Porto Rico into the United States," was lost, 30 to 40. Without division two other amendments offered by Mr. Davis, were defeated. Mr. Nelson's free trade amendment was also lost, 29 to 41. It had been evident for some time that the bill would command a majority in the senate, but notwithstanding the fact the interest in the matter, both of senators and of the public, had not flagged a bit.

The particularly notable speeches of the day were delivered by Mr. Mason of Illinois, in opposition to the measure, and Mr. Foraker of Ohio, who replied to a brief speech by Mr. Wellington of Maryland. It was the Ohio senator's desire to clear up any misunderstanding or misinformation concerning the bill. Mr. Mason's speech was argumentative, eloquent and amusing by turns, and as it covered the entire range of the country's duties and responsibilities to what the Illinois senator sarcastically termed "our in-su-lar pos-ses-i-ons," it was very interesting to his hearers.

Just before the adjournment a sensational episode occurred in which Mr. Wolcott of Colorado accused Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts of uttering that which was "unqualifiedly false." The difficulty arose over an effort by Mr. Lodge to have the Spooner bill made unfinished business. This displaced the Quay case, and the friends of the Pennsylvania senator made things lively for half an hour.

The House.

The house yesterday entered upon consideration of the substitute for the senate Hawaiian territorial bill under a special order which will bring the question to a vote on Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock. debate was in committee of the whole, and only three of the six speeches were pertinent to the bill. Mr. Knox of Massachusetts, chairman of the committee on territories, delivered a carefully prepared speech in advocacy of its passage. Mr. Robinson of Indiana criticised a section in the bill, which, he said, continued in force later contracts existing in Hawaii, denouncing it as legislating a system of wage slavery. Mr. Mondell of Wyoming spoke generally in support of the bill. Mr. Lane of Iowa, one of the Republicans who opposed the Porto Rican tariff bill, made a vigorous speech reaffirming his position and warning his Republican associates that the country would not support an unfair policy toward the Porto Ricans. Mr. Thomas of North Carolina, Mr. Williams of Mississippi and Mr. Boutell of Illinois discussed imperialism.

The House.

Washington, April 5.—There was an exciting scene in the house yesterday as the climax of a discussion of the Kentucky situation when Mr. Wheeler, a Kentucky Democrat, and Mr. Pugh, a Kentucky Republican, faced each other from opposite sides of the main aisle and indulged in a wordy duel. Mr. Pugh charged Mr. Wheeler with misrepresenting certain facts. He was laboring under great excitement. Mr. Wheeler showed admirable temper, and though quick to resent the fancied insult, awaited the explanation of Mr. Pugh, in which he disclaimed any intention of imputing to him personally a desire to distort the facts. Throughout the debate, which was precipitated by Mr. Boring, the other Republican member from Kentucky, there was an air of suppressed excitement. It was the first time the subject had been broached in the house, and intense interest was manifested. Mr. Lacey of Iowa concluded the debate with a general denunciation of the Goebel election law. This incident overshadowed the other speeches yesterday on the Hawaiian bill, many of which were irrelevant.

The Senate.

Peace was restored in the senate yesterday, before the body convened, and during the proceedings of the session there was only a reminder of the harsh language used just before adjournment Tuesday. The senate opened with a lively and interesting discussion of the Quay case, in the course of which Mr. Wolcott apologized for the language he had used Tuesday, disclaiming any intention of being offensive to anybody, least of all to his friend, Mr. Lodge. The Colorado senator made a vehement and eloquent appeal for early action upon the Quay case. He was supported by other friends of Mr. Quay. It was decided finally to take up the case today under the unanimous consent agreement made March 10. In accordance also with that agreement the Spooner bill was made the unfinished business, thereby bringing the Philippine question to a direct issue in the senate.

The House.

Washington, April 6.—The house did not finish the bill to provide territorial government for Hawaii yesterday. When the hour fixed for taking a vote, 4 o'clock, arrived, less than half the bill had been covered and so many amendments remained that it was agreed to continue the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule until it was finished. Several important amendments were agreed to, among them the following: To nullify all labor contracts in the islands; to extend the alien contract labor laws to the islands; to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor in saloons; to limit the land holdings of corporations to 1,000 acres, and to substitute for the house provision regarding to the appointment of judges and other officers of the island the senate provision. The house provision lodged the appointing power in the governor; the senate placed it in the president.

The Senate.

During yesterday's comparatively brief open session of the senate Mr. Gallinger of New Hampshire presented an argument against the seating of Hon. M. S. Quay as senator from Pennsylvania. He devoted himself almost entirely to the constitutional phase of the question. Most of the day was spent in executive session.

The House.

Washington, April 7. — The house, after four days of debate, passed the substitute for the senate bill providing for a territorial form of government for Hawaii. The bill now goes to conference. The most interesting feature of the day's session was the attempt of Mr. Hill of Connecticut to secure the adoption of two amendments, one providing for a resident commissioner instead of a delegate in congress and the other declaring that nothing in the act should be construed as a pledge of statehood. Both were overwhelmingly defeated.

The Senate.

Senator Deboe of Kentucky yesterday gave notice that he would move to refer the credentials of Former Senator J. C. S. Blackburn, as a senator from that state, to the committee on privileges and elections. During the greater part of the session the senate had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill. Mr. Sullivan of Mississippi delivered a speech in favor of the seating of Hon. M. S. Quay.

MINNESOTA ORATORS BEATEN.

Michigan Wins the Championship of the Central Debating League.

Chicago, April 8.—The University of Michigan debating team defeated the University of Minnesota team last night, winning the championship of the Central Debating League, which is composed of the University of Chicago, Northwestern university, Minnesota and Michigan. The decision of the judges was unanimous. Michigan defeated the University of Chicago in the preliminary contests and the University of Minnesota defeated Northwestern, so by defeating Minnesota, Michigan won the series. The question: "Are the economic advantages of trusts sufficient to justify their existence under the law," was debated. Michigan took the affirmative. Its team is composed of Gustavus Ohlinger, Martin H. Carmey and Albert M. Cloud. Minnesota's team was composed of Hilder B. Gislayson, Owen P. McElmel and J. Archie Burger.

PHILIPPINE TONNAGE.

Movement of Vessels at Manila and Other Habors Since American Occupation.

Washington, April 8.—The division of customs and insular affairs of the war department made public a statement of foreign vessel movements at the ports of Manila, Iloilo and Cebu, Philippine islands, from the date of American occupation on Dec. 31, 1898. The statement shows that the total number of foreign vessels that entered the ports named during the period above mentioned, was 517, with a total tonnage of 607,577. The total number of foreign vessels that cleared from the above ports during the period mentioned was 505, with a total tonnage of 630,901.

News of the Northwest

DEWEY IS TICKLED

Over the Manner in Which His Announcement Has Been Received.

Washington, April 6.—Admiral Dewey last night expressed himself as very much gratified over the manner in which his announcement to be a candidate for the presidency has been received by his friends. His manner likewise indicated the fact as he chatted with a representative of the Associated Press at his home last evening. Many telegrams have come, particularly from the South, and some from the far West, indorsing his course and saying he would have the support of the signers in the campaign he will make. The admiral was in excellent humor and talked interestingly of a number of things in connection with his proposed candidacy, though concerning questions asked him, he said he would soon make a public statement.

PASSENGER TRAIN WRECKED.

Most of the Passengers Injured, but Only Two of Them Seriously.

Silver City, Iowa, April 6.—The St. Louis "Cannon Ball" on the Omaha & St. Louis railway, was wrecked just east of here yesterday. The train was running at about thirty-five miles per hour on a straight track when the sleeping car suddenly left the rails and rolled over on its side, pulling the remaining cars, consisting of a chair car, smoker, baggage and mail car, with it. The engine remained on the track. Most of the passengers were injured, but only two seriously, Mail Clerk Ettinger and Mrs. T. S. Shkill of Imogene, Iowa. Ettinger had an arm broken and severe bruises on the body, and Mrs. Shkill was injured by being thrown against a car seat.

IOWA'S FIVE-MILE BILL.

Saloon Restriction Measure Defeated in the House.

Des Moines, Iowa, April 6. — The five-mile limit bill which has been hotly debated in the legislature at the present session, and which was finally passed by the senate, was defeated in the house. The bill prohibited the establishment of a saloon within five miles of any town in the state in which was located a state educational institution.

AFRAID TO REPUDIATE.

Greenway Holding Manitoba Liberals in Leash.

Winnipeg, April 6.—It looks at present as though no Liberal member will have sufficient courage to repudiate the leadership of Greenway, preferring rather to shoulder the scandal of the secret railway deals. There has been talk among the liberal members of repudiating Greenway, but no materialization.

Fishing Depredations.

Winona, Minn., April 6.—It has just been discovered that an immense amount of black bass have been illegally taken from the Mississippi river during the winter and shipped to a fish house in Chicago. The depredations were confined to the vicinity of Winona and La Crosse. A movement is on foot to arrest the offenders and prosecute the cases to the limit.

Rose's Plurality Decreased.

Milwaukee, April 6. — Complete returns from the municipal election in this city give Mayor David S. Rose; Dem., a plurality over H. J. Baumgartner, Rep., of 2,374. Two years ago Rose's plurality was 7,767. The new board of aldermen is made up of 21 Democrats, 10 Republicans and 2 Populists. The board of supervisors is largely Republican.

Mrs. Tawney Ill.

Winona, Minn., April 6.—Mrs. J. A. Tawney, wife of Congressman Tawney, was operated upon yesterday for appendicitis. Dr. E. D. Keyes performed the operation, assisted by Dr. Mayo of Rochester. The operation proved entirely successful. The congressman will remain in Winona until Mrs. Tawney is out of danger.

Green Goods Dealer Captured.

Marinette, Wis., April 6. — Elibe Hogue, alias Harry Elibe Hogue, alias Harrington, who is much wanted at Paulding, Ohio, was arrested here by Sheriff Nelson on a charge of having passed green goods. Ohio officers have been hunting Hogue for six months. He has served two terms in the penitentiary.

Accidentally Shot.

Clear Lake, Iowa, April 6.—Tuesday afternoon Carl Harthow was shot in the back by a neighbor who was hunting, and fired just as Harthow passed on horseback. The shooting was probably accidental, but a coroner's inquest has been asked for.

A Death From Smallpox.

STATE TICKET IN MINNESOTA.

Middle-of-the-Road Populists Make Nominations—A Large Vote.

Minneapolis, April 10—The following state ticket for Minnesota was nominated by the middle-of-the-road Populists: Governor, S. M. Fairchild; lieutenant governor, E. G. Wallender; treasurer, S. W. Powell; attorney general, E. A. Twitchell; chief justice, S. G. Harris; associate justice, J. W. Temple; railroad commissioners, M. R. Parks, N. P. Moran, J. J. Hibbard. The nominations were made by a referendum system of balloting, the ballots being canvassed by the state convention. Some comment has been aroused by the fact that about 4,000 votes were cast for the nominations, while only 1,802 were polled by the party at the last election.

MAIL CLERK KILLED.

Believed He Fell From a Great Northern Train.

Grand Forks, N. D., April 10. — J. Ewing of Carrington fell from the north-bound passenger train on the Great Northern north of Conway, and was killed. No one knows how he fell, as his absence was not noticed until the train had passed Pisek and neared Park River. The body was found by section men and taken to Pisek, where a coroner's inquest was held and a formal verdict of accidental death was rendered. Deceased was a clerk in the employ of the government mail service, and was on his way to Pisek to arrange for a mail route.

SIGSBEE AT FARGO.

The Captain Puts in a Very Pleasant Day.

Fargo, N. D., April 10—Capt. Sigsbee was Saturday the guest of Fargo. The captain addressed the school children, all of whom were assembled at the high school building, with patriotic colors fully displayed. Afterward the captain and party were driven over the city. In the evening there was a banquet and reception at the Metropole, after which the party started for St. Paul. At the reception the members of the G. A. R. and the veterans of the Spanish war were especially invited to meet the naval commander.

THE CALL FOR TOWNE

INCREASING INDICATIONS THAT MINNESOTA'S WELL-LOVED SON

Is Wanted For the Presidential Ticket With Bryan—Mr. Towne's Personal Attitude—Other Notes of the National Campaign — The Lincoln Republican Movement Shortly to Be Inaugurated. State and National Resume of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, April 16, 1900.

The event of the week, connecting national and state politics, has been developments touching the candidacy of Hon. Charles A. Towne for the vice-presidency. The matter has been quite fully gone into in another branch of the reform press work, wherein has been given as fully as space would permit current comment on the matter, and Mr. Towne's own very clearly expressed as well as patriotic and noble sentiments.' In a short time the county conventions of all the allies will begin, from which there will be reflected, doubtless, a very clear idea of what is the home view of what should be done. Certain it is that no beloved son of any state has a deeper hold on the love and confidence of his people than has Towne on Minnesota, and that just as deep and abiding is that sentiment of devotion to duty and to our cause, that will sacrifice anything and all for that cause.

In connection with the Towne candidacy there has been no small attempt by the goppite press to make it appear that there is a change of position on the money question. The contrary is the fact, as shown by Mr. Towne. The money question is simply intensified. From discussing the simple free coinage question, we have the whole question, of which free and equal coinage was four years ago but a feature. Now is presented the whole question of the surrender of the money issuing prerogative to the banks, the whole control of the circulating medium to the few, the burdens of the special privileges conferred, placed on the many.

The coming week will probably be promulgated the programme for organization of the Lincoln Republican party, as has been briefly mentioned in these letters. In advance, suffice it to say first, that the plan originates in Minnesota, and next is approved in all sections of the country; that it will embrace not only silver Republicans, but all those who, regretting the turning of latter day Republicanism into Hannaism, will be glad of the opportunity to rally under the name so long revered, that of Lincoln. The final consummation will of course be at Kansas City a feature of next Fourth of July celebration. Meanwhile all Republicans desirous of participating in such a movement will please send names and addresses to this bureau.

Another of the brave, honest Lincoln Republicans to repudiate Hanna McKinleyism is Colonel George C. Ripley of Minneapolis, whose recent public address to that end was published by the St. Paul Globe in full, and which forcible and patriotic speech is worthy of the widest circulation. Colonel Ripley is of Revolutionary stock and is among those who earned this right to political independence by honorable service to his country in the Civil war.

Ominous indeed are the signs of disruption in the G. O. P. ranks. Many life long Republicans are daily declaring their purpose to vote for Hannaism no longer. Indeed there are more signs of dissolution of that party than were to be seen among the Whigs at the same distance before their final taking off.

Speaking of the same thing the other day, President David Starr Jordan of Leland Stanford university, whose avowal for Bryan, whom he opposed in 1896, he has recently reaffirmed, said that Theodore Roosevelt confessed as much, and that the imperialist policy was what was ruining the party, as exemplified in Porto Rico tariff. Roosevelt expressed his anxiety thus: "Jordan, I wish to God we were out of the Philippines and had them off our hands."

And, speaking of the alleged determination of Hanna that Roosevelt shall consent to stand for vice president, President Jordan states that Roosevelt recently said to him of McKinley: "McKinley has about as much backbone about him as a toy chocolate man that you see on the confectioner's stands." Teddy will no doubt be very willing to run for vice president along with such a backbone.

With real estate still dead, building dull, jobbers' trade quiet, products lower, come reduced exports, or foreign trade, to go along with the gold standard. During March, as compared with March a year ago, exports of breadstuffs have decreased $3,000,000, cattle and hogs decreased $500,000, provisions decreased $1,000,000, cotton decreased $22,000,000 and mineral oils decreased $1,000,000. In the nine months last passed breadstuffs have decreased $29,700,000, and cattle and hogs $3,200,000. What labor and capital have jointly lost in strikes should be added to the score.

The Minnesota reform forces heard with regret the announcement that Judge Caldwell would not stand for the vice presidency. Judge Caldwell's determination was in Senator Jones' hands for some weeks. It is safe to say that no other man than Judge Caldwell is now so generally urged as our glorious Towne. Still Minnesota with all her love and devotion to this her great son, will remain disposed to leave the final determination to the assembled wisdom at the national conventions.

Labor has practically won all demands made in the Twin Cities, and all rejoice at union successes. It is clearer and clearer that labor will have little or nothing except what it obtains for itself, and how else to get it except by organization? It is not the builders and masters that labor has to fortify itself against, but the spirit that is abroad, which has grown immensely during the past dose of Hanna-McKinleyism, that labor has no more rights that should be respected than any other of the down-trodden classes and peoples. The same spirit which would crush liberty in the Philippines and in South Africa, would drive unionism from the earth. It has had open exemplification in Idaho. There under bayonet rule as vicious as that which over awed the South, miners were required to renounce under oath membership in any union, and secure a permit to be employed. Men were sent to the bull pen for the mere crime of being union miners. More than this, General Merriam made to President McKinley the following recommendation: "I would suggest that a law be enacted by congress making such unions or kindred societies a crime; surely history furnishes an argument sufficiently in favor of such a course."

Twin City labor unions will shortly be supplied with all the terrible facts of the Idaho horrors and outrages as brought out in the congressional investigation, and therefore official. One of the facts shown is that the wicked proclamation of the governor was in fact the product of President McKinley—that the governor instead of issuing the proclamation, as he had testified, sent it in blank to the president, who changed it and sent it back, and it was thus issued as the president had censored it. Another is that of the petitions sent to Washington, praying for troops to be left at Wardner, purporting to be signed by some 8,000 names, were in fact bogus, and not more than one-third of the signatures were genuine, but were put on the petitions by the wholesale signing by others. Won't labor reckon with McKinley when the proper time comes?

All the machinery of the administration has been at command to smirch labor unions, in the Idaho investigation and in other labor troubles. They have been denounced as trusts, but has any one seen a hand lifted against the real trusts?

And this pro-English administration went to the subterfuge of having Hay's son cable that there are no proofs on file at Pretoria that Macrum's mail was censored. The world has the proofs in the fac-similes of opened letters. Poor Hay. It has given the whole administration the heaves.

Condemnation for Clark, but not a word against Quay. Such is goppite righteousness.

The wail goes out that the state Republican committee is badly in need of funds. What's the matter with Hanna?

Young America to the fore! Fifty messenger boys won a strike in an hour in St. Paul, and one of their representatives is on the briny bearing resolutions of sympathy from Philadelphia, New York and Brooklyn kids to Paul Kruger.

As fast as those who were so prejudiced against Mr. Bryan in 1896 come to know the man, and learn his real character, they are as pleased with him as they were formerly prejudiced. A specimen of this is Secretary Erving Winslow of the Boston anti-imperialists, who opposed Mr. Bryan before, and who now has the following to say of him: "I want to say that I consider Mr. Bryan one of the cleanest, sincerest, most alert and single-hearted public men that we have today."

There is every indication of a cleaning out of the St. Paul Republican administration. The fire is specially concentratrated on comptroller, whose mismanagement of the city's finances is monumental.

The Porto Rican iniquity is consummated and only one so-called Democrat voted for it. Vale, poor Sibley. There's not a man of your former admirers in the Northwest, to do you honor. Vale, to the valley of Oblivion.

Congressman Fletcher voted for the infamous rule by which it was possible to pass the Porto Rican bill, though voting against the bill. Everybody knows that Fletcher's party would have had his vote for the bill, if it had been needed.

"Pray God," said W. J. Bryan to 15,000 hearers at Los Angeles, "that England may not win over the Boer republics," and the throng cheered its mighty amen. It is the prayer of the American people, except its trust-cursed, pro-British administration.

Apropos, there is expectation that ex-Secretary Davis of the interior, who had the manhood to resign that he might speak for the Boer republics, will shortly speak in the Twin Cities. He will be accorded a magnificent welcome.

The frightened goppite papers have now got the figures of the enormous campaign fund of the reform forces up to five or more figures. Did you see anything of my ghost?

The state press contains many complimentary references to Judge Willis' patriotic action in withdrawing from the St. Paul municipal race, as he did in the interests of party harmony.

HON. CHARLES A. TOWNE.

TOWNE TALK

Movement for Hon. C. A. Towne for Vice President Comes Into the Open.

No Favorite Son Affair, but Springs Spontaneously From People.

Modest and Characteristically Clear Statement by Mr. Towne--His Views.

For a long time Hon. Charles A. Towne, our dearly beloved Minnesotan, has been in the minds of National leaders all over the country as prospective candidate for Vice President with Bryan. It has been quite as deeply in the heart of his close friends, who have taken great care not to say or do anything that would influence the case one way or another. His closest friends have been opposed to the movement in the respect that they felt that the Vice-Presidency would be no adequate recognition of their idol, and they also felt that their love and enthusiasm for Mr. Towne could they decide that the candidacy would not impair his future, ought not to weigh against considerations that might be urged, such as geographical location, party expediency, etc., etc. It may be said without violating confidences, that the matter has been brought to a focus by a tremendous demand for Mr. Towne to assent, coming from the portions of the East where, in February, Mr. Towne delivered several addresses on the newer issues. The substance of these demands was that no man, barring Mr. Bryan, had presented the issues to compare with Mr. Towne, and that with both great champions on the ticket such a campaign would be made as was never before known in this country, if in the world. To this there has been added the consideration that the situation suggested a candidate with Mr. Bryan who would represent the allied forces, which Mr. Towne, as recently a Republican, would do pre-eminently. It is to this phase of the matter that Mr. Towne addressed himself particularly in his statement to the press.

It was under such circumstances that Mr. Towne felt called on to make a statement, immediately made necessary by the fact that the press had brought to light the facts concealed by his friends as long as possible, and the increasing demand for his candidacy, and also in the official declaration from National Chairman Jones that Judge Caldwell, who would doubtless have been made the candidate absolutely refused. The following is Mr. Towne's statement:

"It cannot be said with strict truth that I am a candidate for the nomination for Vice President. It is true that for a couple of years past there has been more or less discussion of the matter by friends of mine in different parts of the country. Not until recently, however, has this discussion been so pointed or definite as to require any notice from me.

"At first I found little in the idea that commended itself, either to my inclination or my judgment. More recently, however, and after considerable reflection I have said that if the reform forces of the country should tender me the nomination on the ticket with Mr. Bryan I should esteem it a high honor to accept and would put forth all my efforts toward the success of the ticket.

"Not, however, by so much as the movement of a finger would I do anything to complicate a wise, politic and satisfactory arrangement of this matter by advancing any claim of my own to conflict in the slightest degree with the best interests of the cause for which the Democratic party and its allies stand. It is argued by many that inasmuch as we must secure, in order to win, the votes of several hundred thousand citizens who, in 1896 voted against Mr. Bryan, it is necessary to make some strong proof to the ancient opponents of Democracy that that party was really reborn in 1896, and that the high impulse of that campaign still forms its chief inspiration.

"Nothing, it is argued, would show that all patriots of the country who are in favor of restoring the republic and of preserving the wedded union of the flag and the constitution, would be sure of finding a welcome and a congenial environment among the ranks of the rejuvenated and disenthralled Democracy. I own that to me there is great force in this consideration. We must win this year largely by the aid of the votes of Lincoln Republicans.

"Now Lincoln constantly invoked in his time the principles of Jefferson. What, therefore, could be more consistent than to put a representative of Lincoln Republicanism on the ticket with Mr. Bryan who embodies the very spirit of Jeffersonian Democracy.

"This consideration is, of course, entirely impersonal. I have nothing to say as respects my own qualifications for the place. If by the favorable judgment of the Democratic party and its allies, acting with entire freedom, uninfluenced by manipulation of any sort, the decision were reached to offer me the nomination for Vice President, I firmly say I should accept it."

In this connection is of great interest Mr. Towne's view of the issues of the campaign, the pertinent portions of his interview with the Duluth News-Tribune, which follows, after having received the paper's criticism that he was "dropping" the 16 to 1 issue and the circumstances under which his party left him, nationally and locally, together with his demonstration that whatever has occurred to lessen the demand for free coinage has proven the correctness of the bimetallic theory. Mr. Towne says:

"I suppose it is something of a disappointment to you that I have found something else to talk about recently than the silver question. If I had continued to harp on that subject while the public was becoming greatly concerned with other matters so grave as to threaten the very destruction of our Government, it would have been a very convenient proof of the truth of the cheap and easy observation which you advocates of the gold standard have so delighted to make, that I was a "man of one idea," etc., etc. I can well understand that it is a serious disappointment to you to find that we of the Republican party in 1896 to the great speculative banks have somehow men who rebelled against the surrender been able to keep up with the progress of events and to be just as bitterly opposed now to the attempted surrender of the Government by that same organization to the power of the trusts and the hosts of militarism. So far as I am concerned I am nothing daunted by loud cries of having 'shelved silver' and 'abandoned the fetich.' The principle on which the claim for bimetalism was rested in 1896 is avowed by every standard political economist that has ever written during 2,000 years in any language or any country, and it is no abandonment of that principle to admit that circumstances may temporarily have obscured the importance of the question either by a relaxation of the rigors of monometalism through increasing monetary supplies, or by the appearance of other issues which, because of their far-reaching importance, must claim first place in the interest of the people until they are settled and settled right. There are no terrors for me in the detractions of either malevolent misrepresentation or ignorant malice. The Republican party has followed up its surrender to the banks in 1895 by as base a

SURRENDER TO THE TRUSTS,

and, above and beyond all else, it has challenged the patriotism of the American people by laying an unholy hand upon the constitution and by proposing to divorce the flag from the glorious legends of liberty that have heretofore always waved upon its resplendent folds. I have not the slightest hesitancy in saying that all other questions must remain subordinate to this great problem of how to save the Government of our fathers from its recreant betrayal at the hands of the present day leaders of the Republican party. In the days of Lincoln it was the glory of that party to amplify liberty, to proclaim far and wide its sanctions and to prophecy the peaceful spread of the spirit of our institutions among mankind. To-day we behold the chief representatives of that once liberty-loving organization engaged in the pettifogging attempt to narrow and curtail these great guarantees of freedom, to separate the flag from the constitution, to set up ideals of physical force in place of those earlier and nobler ideals of manhood and character and liberty upon which the greatness of the republic has been nurtured for 120 years. Believe me, News-Tribune, and all the other apologists and champions of modern you cannot escape responsibility for this hideous and impious conduct. We will not permit you to fabricate false issues. We will not allow you to babble the jargon of other conflicts. The senseless mummery of 'saving the honor of the country,' 'and protecting vested rights,' and 'honest money' cannot be used by you in this campaign to mislead the people of the United States into a mistaken verdict. The patriotism of the people has already detected you. Your crime is fresh upon you. The blood is upon your hands. You will be dragged into the political arena this year upon the issues chiefly that are here and vital now and with which the great heart of the American people is to-day full almost to bursting. Pass your Puerto Rico tariff bills. Heap up the measure of deceit and carry disappointment to those unhappy islanders that welcomed the advent of our soldiers with songs and flowers. Pursue and kill in the Philippines the men whose arms assisted us in destroying the power of Spain in that archipelago the while they were chanting in our hearing their fond mistaken hopes of independence. Laugh and snap your fingers at the reproof of the people uttered in their newspapers and by the resolutions of their legislatures. It is well for you to do this. Those who have controlled you have long forsworn any fealty either to the welfare of the country or to the wishes of the people. But, as I think, the gods have almost made you mad enough to be ready to visit you with that inevitable destruction which follows such madness.

DEGENERATE REPUBLICANISM,

"It may be that you are right when you say that 'Mr. Towne and the Duluth Herald have lost all political prestige in this community.' I am quite sure that if I have sought any political prestige it has been that I might do what in my best judgment seemed good and wholesome for the community and the country. If I have lost it, so let it be; but allow me to say that I could find little to flatter my personal pride in the fact, if it should ever eventuate, that those who had honored me with any of their political confidence should be led to withdraw it by the arguments of the News-Tribune.

"In conclusion, referrig to your sneer at 'anti-everything,' let me remind you that our liberties were founded in 1776 by men who were 'anti'-British tyranny, and that the grand deeds of the old Republican party began with 'anti'-slavery."

THE MINNESOTA DELEGATION AND TRUE REPUBLICAN PRINCIPLES.

The final act in the drama of the Porto Rico infamy remarked the Minnesota delegation for cowardice and inefficiency. Five members had their mouths stopped from uttering a single lofty sentiment, as will be the case when they reach the stump, by the inconsistencies of their position, and the base betrayal of former Republican principles. In the two other cases, Heatwole and Fletcher, neither has the ability to open his mouth effectively or even creditably. Woe's me.

What a contrast to our groveling delegation were those few other Republicans who stood by the colors of Lincoln, even to quoting the early Republican platforms against the base betrayers of liberty. Crumbacker, the Indianian, was quoted correctly when he said that the first Republican platform (Fremont's) declared that the constitution carried political liberty to all territory of the United States, as well as Lorimer, Illinois, that all rights and privileges extend to all American territory. Here are the planks referred to:

First paragraph, platform of 1856: "THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLE PROMULGATED IN THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE AND EMBODIED IN THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION, IS ESSENTIAL TO THE PRESERVATION OF OUR REPUBLICAN INSTITUTIONS."

In the second paragraph of same: "That, with our Republican fathers, we hold it to be a self-evident truth that ALL MEN ARE ENDOWED WITH THE INALIENABLE RIGHTS OF LIFE, LIBERTY AND THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, and that the primary object and ulterior designs of our Federal Government were to secure these rights to all persons within its exclusive jurisdiction; that WE DENY THE AUTHORITY OF CONGRESS OR OF A TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE OF ANY INDIVIDUAL OR ASSOCIATION OF INDIVIDUALS TO GIVE LEGAL EXISTENCE TO SLAVERY (OR OTHER FORM OF OPPRESSION) IN ANY TERRITORY OF THE UNITED SATES."

In sixth paragraph of same: "THAT THE HIGHWAYMAN'S PLEA THAT MIGHT MAKES RIGHT * * * WAS IN EVERY RESPECT UNWORTHY OF AMERICAN DIPLOMACY, AND WOULD BRING SHAME AND DISHONOR UPON ANY GOVERNMENT OR PEOPLE THAT GAVE IT SANCTION."

The same expressions abound in Lincoln's platform of 1860, and, beyond those particular references, how well can the Democrats arraign the present administration in the very language used by the Republicans then, in arraigning the Buchanan administration, for "ITS GENERAL AND UNVARYING ABUSE OF THE POWER ENTRUSTED TO IT BY A CONFIDING PEOPLE."

BOERS DEFEATED

ACCORDING TO AN UNCONFIRMED REPORT.

Says Brabrant Administered a Crushing Defeat to the Boers at Wepener, Capturing Guns and Prisoners—London War Office Regards the Report as Premature—Practically No Fresh News From the Seat of War—Bloemfontein Dispatches Breathe a Confident Tone.

London, April 17.—The Cape Town correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says:

"An unconfirmed report is in circulation here that Gen. Brabant has inflicted a crushing defeat upon the Boers at Wepener, capturing guns and taking prisoners."

The war office had nothing to communicate to the public yesterday. It may be taken for granted that the rumor of Gen. Brabant's victory at Wepener is premature. With the remainder of his force he left Allwalnorth Saturday for Rouxville, and there has scarcely been time for an engagement. There is practically no fresh news. All of the Bloemfontein dispatches, however, breathe a confident tone. There seems to be a heavy demand on the railway for so large an army leaves the populace bare of everything save the absolute necessities of life. The fact that the censors allowed Winston Churchill's dispatch on the subject of remounts to pass, speaks volumes for the condition of that question and concerning the prospect of any immediate advance toward Pretoria. The utmost Lord Roberts will be able to do for some time will be in the direction of clearing the Boers from the southern part of the Free State. The dispatches announce the approach of winter. The first pinch of frost has been felt at Bloemfontein, where considerable rain has fallen. It is said that President Kruger has visited the camp at Kroonstad as well as Brandfort.

Boers Slackening Attack.

Reddersburg, April 17.—Col. Dalgety wired yesterday: "All well. Enemy apparently slackening attack." Gen. Chermside's division is encamped seventeen miles east of the railway. Boers are supposed to be in the vicinity, but an attack by them is improbable.

Reinforcements for Boers.

London, April 17.—The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Times, telegraphing Friday, says: "It is reported that reinforcements for the Boers, with sixty wagons, have arrived at Dewetsdorp, en route for Wepener. This should precipitate an action. The statement that President Kruger has been south seems to confirm the report that the Boers are getting disheartened. this continued exertion of his personal influence appears now to have become a necessity."

An American Captured.

Warrenton, April 17.—Frank Smith, a well known mine owner, fell into the hands of the Boers while driving from Barkly West toward the Frank Smith diamond mines.

Visited by Kruger.

London, April 17.—The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Daily News, telegraphing Saturday, says: "President Kruger attended a conference of the Boer commandants at Brandfort on Thursday. It is believed that a decision was reached to withdraw the Transvaal force to the north of Vet river, preparatory to a general retirement against the Vaal river, if hard pressed, leaving the Free Staters to their own resources."

British Losses at Wepener.

Allwalnorth, April 17.—It is officially reported that the British losses at Wepener in four days were eighteen killed and 132 wounded.

FATAL FIRE IN BROOKLYN.

Property Valued at Four Hundred Thousand Dollars Is Destroyed.

New York, April 17.—One man was killed and a man and a boy probably fatally injured in a $400,000 fire which occurred in Williamsburg, Brooklyn. The dead man is John C. Donaldson, a bookkeeper. The injured are William D. Donaldson, the seventeen-year-old son of the dead man, and Stephen Moneypenny, a laborer. They were on an adjoining building fighting the fire when the flames made their position perilous, and they were obliged to jump. The elder Donaldson received injuries from which he died shortly after being put into the ambulance.

LONG IS WILLING.

Would Accept Republican Nomination for Vice President.

Washington, April 17.—Referring to the use of his name in connection with the vice presidential nomination, Secretary Long is said to have informed a number of his friends yesterday that if the nomination were tendered him he would accept it. He told them that the honor was of such a character that no man could well refuse to accept it, and expressed his high appreciation of the compliment implied in the manner in which his name has already been brought forward in that connection.

Senator Hanna Quite Ill.

Cincinnati, April 17.—Word has been received here that Senator M. A. Hanna is quite ill with grip at Old Point Comfort, and that he may not be able to attend the Ohio Republican state convention next week. It is reported that President McKinley and other Republican leaders will be at Old Point Comfort this week for an informal conference and recreation.

Assaulted by a Negro.

Hardeeville, S. C., April 17. — Mrs. Rose Douberty of Savannah was assaulted by George Thomas, a negro, near here yesterday afternoon. Last evening a posse caught the negro and Mrs. Douberty identified him. Magistrate Haywood prevailed upon the mob to let the law take its course, and Thomas was started for Beaufort under guard.

Dr. R. D. Parker, the oldest physician of St. Joseph, Mich., is dead. He leaves an estate of $150,000.

PARIS FAIR OPENED.

Fears of Trouble at the Sreton Dam Strike.

Paris, April 17. — The exposition is open. Paris has witnessed the elaborate inaugural and has been impressed by the lavish decorations, the blazonry of colors, the fanfare of trumpets and bands, and the martial army of soldiery in the holiday trappings of peace, and at the same time has closed its eyes to the great structures half-completed and barren of exhibits, and the widespread confusion of grounds and parks still untouched by the landscape artist. The exposition is not ready for visitors. Several weeks must elapse before the buildings are completed, the exhibits in place, the pictures hung and the machinery set in motion. The weather was not all that could be desired. The skies were blue and the sun shone brightly, but not with sufficient warmth to dissipate the chill of an early spring day.

The inaugural ceremony took place in the splendid Salle des Fetes, where 14,000 specially invited guests were assembled, all in military and diplomatic uniform or full evening dress. President Loubet, driven in state from the Elysee, arrived at the grounds, where he was formally received by the members of his cabinet and many officials. Proceeding to the presidential tribune in the great Salle des Fetes the exercises immediately opened. The auxiliary programme of music, instrumental and vocal, disposed of, M. Millerand, minister of commerce and industry, delivered an eloquent address, formally transferring the exposition to the republic. President Loubet responded, and at the conclusion of his address formally declared the exposition opened. Then the president, with his brilliant official and military staff, made a tour of the grounds and formally declared the magnificent Alexander III. bridge open. Then came the trip in the state barge along the Seine, the president pausing before each foreign pavilion to receive the congratulations of the officials.

The ceremony being over and the exposition formally declared open, the president returned to the Elysee and the grounds again swarmed with the army of workmen and artisans, who will work night and day until the great fair is complete in all its details.

Glorious weather favored the opening of the exposition to the general public Sunday, and immense crowds flocked into the grounds. The area of the exhibition, however, is so great that nowhere was there any crush. The visitors were mainly composed of provincials and foreigners. Comparatively few Parisians were seen. Aware of the great backwardness of the preparations they remained away for the most part.

MORE FIGHTING NEAR MANILA.

Insurgent Bands Active About the Marivales Mountains, Across the Bay.

Manila, April 17. — The insurgents, supposedly Mascado's command, are again active about the Marivales mountains, across the bay from Manila. A force estimated at 300 attacked Balanga, where three companies of the Thirty-second infantry were stationed, last Monday night, but were easily repulsed. Friday they attacked Capt. Goldman with thirty men of the Thirty-second regiment near Orion, killing two Americans. Goldman then retired. The transport Thomas sailed yesterday, taking Gen. Schwan and 300 discharged and sick soldiers.

COULDN'T STAND CHAFFING.

Colored Cyclist Seriously Wounds Two Boys.

Indianapolis, April 17. — A colored man riding a bicycle shot into a crowd of twenty boys in West Indianapolis Yesterday afternoon, wounding Clarence Vort in the hip and George Goulder in the thigh. Both are seriously wounded. As the colored man was passing the crowd they began chafing him and he fired. He then rode away, pursued by an infuriated mob of 100 people, who threw stones, sticks and clubs at him, but failed to overtake him. Cries of "lynch him" were heard on all sides. The colored man is said to have had another difficulty in the same vicinity about a month ago and at that time threatened to shoot. The police failed to locate the colored man.

FREIGHT TRAIN WRECKED.

Struck a Mule While Running at Full Speed.

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 17. — A through freight train on the Southern railway struck a mule, and was wrecked while running at full speed near Huntsville, Ala. The engineer and fireman were killed and five of the train crew were seriously injured. The engine plunged down a steep embankment and immediately caught fire. The freight cars crowded upon the overturned engine and instantly crushed and suffocated to death in the cab the engineer and fireman, who had resolutely stuck to their posts. The wreck caused a delay of twelve hours in the running of trains on the Memphis division.

HALSTEAD FOR PRESS COLLEGE.

Veteran Editor Accepts Presidency of Cincinnati School of Journalism.

Cincinnati, Ohio, April 17. — Murat Halstead has accepted the presidency of the new College of Journalism, which opened here Saturday. Mr. Halstead has given up other engagements so as to personally conduct this institution, for which he has formulated a course of study.

Fish Shooter Killed.

Cass Lake, Minn., April 17.—Gilbert Trevisdal, while shooting fish, accidentally killed himself. He leaves a wife and three children on a homestead near Farris.

Pass Two Labor Bills in Ohio.

Columbus, Ohio, April 17.—Two bills of interest to labor were made laws by the action of the senate Saturday night. One of them provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all men employed on public works of the state. The other requires that all workmen shall be given two hours' respite from their labor on election days.

How soon the electric car has become "the carriage of the people!" An official report says that in Massachusetts there are one thousand seven hundred and thirty-five miles of street railway, and that only four miles of track are now traversed by horses.

Congress is to be asked to appropriate a considerable sum for the Philadelphia mint, including boilers, engines, dynamos, pneumatic tools, lifts, telephones and machine tools, coal handling machinery, motors, etc., as well as a fine equipment of machinery connected directly with the coinage of money. It is thought that within a few years the mint may be relied upon to produce most of the machinery and appliances for all the United States mints.

After all, it takes a woman to show us how to do things. She knows. No one ever hears of her forming an organization of "woman" employes. Not any. She gets the right word. Her latest organization is the "Lady Bookkeepers' Union." Now let us have the "Amalgamated Association of Gentlemen Clerks," the "Brotherhood of Locomotive Firegentlemen" and other similar organizations just to show that the various trades, business and professional gentlemen are not behind the times.

An interesting question has recently been raised in the navy department and the comptroller for the treasury has been called upon to decide the same. Officers of the navy are undecided whether, under the naval personnel act, they are still allowed the privilege of having enlisted men of the navy act as their servants. Secretary Long has written the comptroller a long letter in which he argues that there is nothing in the act which prohibits such service being accepted from enlisted men. The subject has not yet been decided in the treasury department.

It is not always possible to account for the fluctuations in the world of finance. Not long ago, without any apparent cause, the stringency of the foreign money market was so great that there was danger of disaster to some of the largest moneyed institutions of Europe. But as suddenly as the danger threatened, it disappeared and the rate of interest was lowered in Great Britain, France and Germany. These changes were inexplicable, but for the time being the American gold balance was drawn upon, and in fact the outward flow of gold has not entirely ceased yet. But this country is in a financial condition to sustain any drafts that Europe may make upon it.

In an article in the Comptes Rendus MM. Prevost and Battelli describe 270 experiments which were made upon dogs, rabbits and guinea pigs, the animals being inserted in a condenser circuit, charged by a Ruhmkorff. The number of fatal cases decreased with increasing weight and age; two consecutive discharges of 1,000 joules did not kill a dog of seven kilograms weight. Quickly consecutive discharges have an accumulative effect, but are comparatively less fatal than single discharges. Five phases are distinguished in the effects; general muscular contraction, convulsions, spasms, general inhibitions of the nervous system, stoppage of the heart's action; young guinea pigs cannot be revived even after the second phase by artificial respiration.

One of the Midway Islands visited by the United States expedition making surveys for the Pacific cable, is described as inhabited by an almost incredible number of sea birds. Upon fully one-half of the surface of the island the sand was literally covered with them, and the noise of the winged host astonished the visitors. A few land-birds were mingled here and there among them. The picture of abundant bird life will attract the notice of the ruthless destroyers who seem bent on exterminating our contemporaries of the air, and who soon will be sighing for more bird worlds to conquer. The Midway albatross, it seems, refused to retreat before the invader, and bravely faced the foe. If the power of defence were once given to the birds in fuller measure, their revolt against plumage-hunters might stop the threatened massacre.

That there is much room for civil service reform in Turkey is newly emphasized by a recent experience there. An American traveler, wishing to mail a magazine, was told by a head postmaster that while a good Mussulman might mail it as a periodical for eight cents, a heretic would be charged book post, seventy-five cents. Just outside the door a clerk whispered, "Do not mind him! He is an ass! Give me your paper, and I will send it off when he is not looking." While this was service, it could hardly be called civil, and surely there is need of reform.

The cost of constructing a cable system is about $2,000 per mile and the total amount invested in sub-marine lines at present is upward of $200,000,000. The value of the land lines is, of course, much greater in the aggregate. The largest company in America has alone a capital of $125,000,000, pays out yearly between $8,000,000 and $10,000,000 salaries, and last year carried over 60,000,000 messages. These figures are inadequate, but they serve to show that telegraphs form one of the world's great business interests.

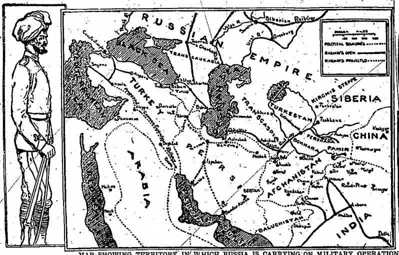
BEAR FORCING LION FROM KHYBER PASS

The Russians Are Daily Defying England by Operations in the East.

England never forgets that the north star looks down through the Khyber pass, and that year after year the Russian outposts creep closer to the confines of India. The movement of 20,000 Russian troops to the Afghan frontier and the publication of secret Russian state papers purporting to have been stolen from the archives of the Muscovite ministry of war have created a sensation in England and engaged public attention there to a degree second only to the interest in the war news from South Africa. These papers were sold in London by a man who formerly was connected with the office of the Russian general staff, and who had fallen out with his employers and fled to England. The documents show that Russia regards England's difficulty as her opportunity, and has lately been making every preparation to overrun the "buffer state" of Afghanistan and assail the borders of northern India. A thorough military reconnoissance has been made by Russian officers of the Indian frontier, a plan of campaign outlined, native rulers and religious leaders "sounded," and a policy for stirring up the border chiefs and the native princes of the coveted country has been formulated. Henry Norman and an anonymous writer have challenged the authenticity of the papers, but though it is admitted, as Mr. Norman asserts, that some of the place-names are misspelled—as Samarland for Samarkand—such mistakes might easily occur in the haste of copying and translation. Signatures, dates, names, places and maps are given, several of the places on the map, which is traced from the Russian original appearing on no English map, though they really exist, and the document seems to bear intrinsic marks of genuiness. Attempts to discredit have not succeeded. The Russian officers who made the investigation and reported were Col. Ukroff Naraskol, Capts. Basilovich Markoff and Yonoff Kriminski, and Vasiloff Karskol, secretary of the commission. They began their secret labors last May, and made their report late last December to Gen. Kuropatkin, minister of war. Traveling sometimes together and sometimes separately in order to avoid notice, they visited all the Russian outposts, the principal strategic points in Afghanistan and along the Indian frontier, and even passed over the Chinese territory in the course of their investigations. In submitting their report they say: "We think it well to state, for the information of your excellency, that we are unanimous in the conclusions arrived at, and have not the least doubt that the invasion of India and the bringing of the millions who inhabit that country under the beneficent rule of his imperial majesty the czar are not only possible, but could be accomplished in a comparatively short space of time, the exact period requisite depending mainly on the moment chosen and the conditions of the season when the work is undertaken.

That Russia is intriguing with the natives is shown by a reference to "the secret agents now engaged in the collection of information respecting the trend of events, political and strategic, on the Persian, Afghan and Kasmir frontiers."

The plan recommended is secretly to collect large bodies of troops on the Afghan frontier and a strong force of Cossacks at Charog in the Pamir. All being ready and the northern chiefs and the disgruntled native princes of India being "prepared for their deliverance," a rush is to be made into Afghanistan while the Cossacks dash from the north into Chitral, where the tribes will rise and join them. A rising in the Punjab also is expected. If England advances in Afghanistan to meet the Russians she is to be overwhelmed by superior force. If she elects to fight on her strongly fortified border, which they call the Peshawar—Quetta line—the Russians are to make a feint on Quetta, capture Kabul, and with the aid of the native tribes try the Khyber pass, while other troops are poured in from the north. The commissioners—or spies—seem to have no doubt as to the uprising of the natives in favor of Russia.



MAP SHOWING TERRITORY IN WHICH RUSSIA IS CARRYING ON MILITARY OPERATIONS

Characteristic Story of Ruskin.

During the proceedings of a recent conference of the British Library association, a characteristic story of John Ruskin was told in connection with the subject of village libraries. A library for the laborers of a lake-country village had been established, and just before the opening Mr. Ruskin was asked to inspect it. He cordialy consented, and upon leaving expressed his admiration of the arrangements, and promised to send a present, which came in the form of a sumptuous set of Scott's novels. The wife of the founder thought the edition much too splendid for the purpose, and at the earliest opportunity told the donor so. "Madam," said Ruskin, "if the money the books cost had been spent in floral decorations or wines for a dinner, nothing would have been said against it, but because it has been laid out for the enjoyment of the simple villagers it is thought extravagant."

WORK OF POSTAL SERVICE.

Immense Labor Involved in Sorting and Transmitting the Mails.

There is no department of public service with which the individual citizen, regardless of sex, politics and religion, is more intimately connected than the postal service. There were handled by railway postal clerks during the year 7,118,422,840 pieces of first-class matter, and 6,223,569,885 pieces of all other class matter, making a total of 13,351,992,725 pieces, which includes 519,870,465 pieces of city mail separated in railway postoffices. This amount of mail is an increase of between 4 and 5 per cent over the railway postal clerks' 15,866,847 packages and cases of registered matter, 1,063,049 through registered pouches and 607,162 inner registered sacks, making in all 17,537,058. There were 1,312,388 errors made by the clerks in distributing this matter, which is over 10,000 correct to every one made. Under the head of "nixies" (matter so illegibly or improperly addressed that it could not be delivered in the way it stood) there were embraced 14,606,085 pieces, as compared with 13,503,486 of last year, an increase of 1,102,599 pieces. Seven million seven hundred and twenty-four thousand nine hundred and forty-six pieces were returned to writers or corrected and forwarded to destination, the rest being sent to the dead letter office for disposition. Examinations are held every year to test the knowledge of the clerks as to their duties. During 1899 there were 20,194 examinations of regular and probationary clerks, comprising 22,032, 415 cards, with an average per cent correct of 98.71, as against 98.30 the year previous. In addition to the same there were 2,082 examinations of substitutes; number of cards handled, 1,918,111; per cent correct, 98.43.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Wasn't So Green.

Two men sat in a saloon and drank the beer which is sold in Kensington. In the brief intervals wherein he rested his swallowing apparatus one of the men said: "I was drivin' that year, and Bill was conductin'. Electricity wasn't known at that time. Bill used to give me a dollar every night after the day's work was over. I lived high. Then Bill was changed to another run. He told me they was goin' to put a greenhorn on with me, and I began to cut down expenses, for I knew a greenhorn wouldn't do much alongside of a capable old hand like Bill. This greenhorn made me sick when I seen him. He was young, pale and pious. He didn't even chew. I watched him like a hawk the first day, and he done no business—none whatever. I cursed the luck that had hitched me up to him, you bet. That night, after hours, he said to me with his ladylike smile: 'Mr. Perkins, I am from a country road, and I don't know just how your rates are in this big city, but here is $2, and if it ain't enough I'll try and do better for you tomorow.' Oh, he was a slick youngster, all right. In four years he owned his house."—Chicago Tribune.

Edwin Markham.

"My earliest recollections," said Mr. Edwin Markham, author of "The Man with the Hoe," in a recently reported interview, "go back to the days when I was a shepherd boy on the California hills; I was 7 years old then. When my mother gave up her sheep range I turned cowboy, and learned the many tricks of the trade—could throw a riata or ride a broncho with the best of them. Later I became a farmer, and spent many months walking behind the plow, turning up the rich loam of the foothills and preparing it for the harvest. Money that I earned in this way I invested in books—copies of Bryant, Tennyson, Thomas Moore and Webster's dictionary. I derived much inspiration from the works of Victor Hugo and from Carlyle and Ruskin. In poetry I was much attracted by the passion of Shelby and by the imaginative insight of Browning. Swinburne was another favorite of mine."

Heterophemy.

Judges and jury were taking a prolonged farewell, and speeches and complimentary resolutions were the order of the hour. One of the judges was in the midst of an eloquent bit of oratory, ornate with nicely rounded sentences telling of the patriotic services rendered by the jurymen to the state. The qualities of the average jury were far below those that had been displayed by this one. Its work had been well and quickly done. "And now," continued the judge, "it is my earnest hope, coupled with every desire for the prosperity of each and every one of you, that you will depart into the other world——" here a suppressed titter went around among the audience, and the jurymen themselves began looking doubtfully at one another—"I mean the outer world," corrected the judge, and he brought his speech speedily to a close.—Detroit Free Press.

Mated.

"The other day," said Jones, "an old woman bounced into our office displaying a notice that we had written to her to the effect that a quarter tax on some property of hers was due. She swore she had paid it. I had the books to prove that she had not, and suggested that she had made a mistake. She declared that she had not and said: 'Don't you ever make mistakes?' I assured her that I did not, and jokingly added: 'The only mistake I ever made was when I was married.' She looked at me a second, and then said: 'No, your wife made that mistake.'"

Breaking Even.

Arkansaw Justice (to spectator, who has just entered)—"Huck Buckleby, I fine you $10 for contempt of court!" Buckleby—"Huh, 'squire! I hain't said a word yet!" LONG CAVALRY RIDES

RECORDS MADE BY UNCLE SAM'S FIGHTERS.

Eighty-Four Miles in Eight Hours — General Lawton's Feat—Merritt Once Made One Hundred and Seventy Miles in Sixty-Six Hours.

There is much of interest to riders generally, but particular to the United States cavalrymen, in reports that have come from South Africa of some of the long, hard rides made there by the British mounted troops. The accounts of some of these rapid forced marches of cavalry are lacking in detail, but the specific statement is made that a squadron of the Natal Mounted Rifles recently rode 85 miles in twelve consecutive hours. The English press speaks of the rides of 60 miles by detached cavalry troops which were completed within the limit of the daylight hours, and these achievements of the troopers and their mounts are spoken of as if of frequent occurrence.

At first thought it may not appear that these rides are particularly remarkable, but the fact must be taken into consideration that bodies of troops and not single individuals are concerned, and where this is the case the rapidity of the march must necessarily be gauged by the rapidity and endurance of the poorest horse of the outfit. Moreover, each animal engaged has to carry weight of man and equipment to an average amount of 250 pounds.

Many of the horses used by the English troopers are American bred, and a natural interest in this country is added to the rides, for it gives a chance to "get a line" on the endurance of the American animal under absolutely strange climatic conditions.

No army in the world, perhaps, has had the same opportunities to test the endurance of cavalry horses as has the small regular force of the United States. The long, level stretches of the plains and the activity of the marauding Indian mounted on his tireless broncho have been the conditions which gave to Uncle Sam's cavalryman his matchless chances for long forced mounted marches.

Col. Theodore Ayrault Dodge, United States army, collected the official records of long distance cavalry rides, and has made them public, so that they may be compared with the performance of the soldier horsemen of other nations. Col. Dodge declares specifically that he has rejected all "hear-say rides, of which there is no end," and has accepted only those proved by official reports.

Col. Dodge says that Capt. S. F. Fountain, United States cavalry, in the year 1891 rode with a detachment of his troops 84 miles in eight hours. This record is vouched for, and it is better than that of the Natal Mounted Rifles by about four hours, the distance being within one mile of that made in South Africa. For actual speed this forced march stands perhaps at the head of the American army record, though other rides have been more remarkable. In the year of 1879, when the Utes succeeded in getting some United States troops into what was afterward known as Thornburg's "rat hole," several mounted couriers succeeded in slipping through the circling line of savages. All of them reached Merritt's column, 170 miles distant, in less than 24 hours.

It must be understood, of course, that all these American rides were made without changing horses. The steed at the start was the steed at the finish. The best rider, according to cavalry experts, is not the man who takes a five-barred gate or who can ride standing, but he who by instinct feels the condition of his horse, and, though getting the most out of the animal, knows how to conserve his strength. The late Gen. Lawton, who was killed in the Philippines, in the year 1876 rode from Red Cloud Agency, Neb., to Sidney, in the same state, a distance of 125 miles, in 26 hours. He was carrying important dispatches for Gen. Crook, and though the road was bad, his mount was in good condition when Lawton, looking five years older than he did the day before, handed over his bundle of papers to the black-bearded general. Gen. Merritt has a forced-march record that has no American parallel when the conditions of his journey are considered. He was ordered in the fall of 1879 to the relief of Payne's command, which was surrounded by hostile Indians. Merritt's command consisted of four troops of cavalry, but at the last moment he was ordered to add to his force a battalion of infantry. The "dough boys" were loaded into army wagons drawn by mules, and with the cavalry at the flanks the relief column started. The distance to be traversed was 170 miles, and it was made notwithstanding the handicap of the wagons and trails that were muddy and sandy by turns, in just sixty-six hours. At the end of the march the troopers went into the fight, and in the entire command not one horse showed a lame leg or a saddle sore.

Remarkable Gift.

It was said of Judge John Edmonds that he was never at loss for a witty reply. "What a stupid person Mr. Brown is!" said some one to the judge, referring to a man who was an extremely prosy speaker and blessed with a loud voice, which he used to its utmost capacity. "Indeed, I consider him a most remarkable man," said the judge, promptly. "He's the only man I know who can fill a house and empty it at the same time."

ORIGIN OF FAMILIAR CUSTOMS

Many Things People Do Without Knowing the Reason Why.

Is it not surprising what a number of little things we do without knowing the reason? Why, for instance, do widows wear caps? Perhaps you may say because they make them look pretty and interesting. But the real reason is that when the Romans were in England they shaved their heads as a sign of mourning. Of course, a woman couldn't let herself be seen with a bald head, so she made herself a pretty cap. And now, though the necessity of wearing it has passed away, the cap remains. Why do we have bows on the left side of our hats? In olden times, when men were much in the open air, and hats couldn't be bought for half a dollar, it was the habit to tie a cord around the crown and let the ends fall on the left side to be grasped on the arising of a squall. They fell on the left side so they might be grasped by the left hand, the right usually being more usefully engaged. Later on the ends got to be tied in a bow, and later still they became useless, yet the bow has remained and will probably remain till the next deluge or something of that sort. What is the meaning of the crosses or X's on a barrel of beer? They signify degrees of quality nowadays. But originally they were put on by those ancient monks as a sort of trade mark. They were crossed those days and meant a sort of oath on the cross, sworn by the manufacturer that his barrel contained good liquor. Why are bells tolled for the dead? This has become so familiar a practice that a funeral without it would appear un-Christian. Yet the reason is quite barbarous. Bells were tolled long ago when people were being buried in order to frighten away evil spirits who live in the air. Why do fair ladies break a bottle of wine on the ship they are christening? Merely another survival of barbaric custom. In the days of sacrifice to the gods it was customary to get some poor victim when a boat was being launched and to cut his throat over the prow, so that his blood baptized it. Why are dignitaries deafened by a salute when they visit a foreign port? It seems a curious sort of welcome, this firing off of guns, but it seems the custom arose in a very reasonable way. Originally a town or a warship fired off their guns on the approach of important and friendly strangers to show that they had such faith in the visitors' peaceful intentions they didn't think it necessary to keep their guns loaded. Why do we sometimes throw a shoe after a bride? The reason is not very complimentary. From of old it has been the habit of mothers to chastize their children with a shoe. Hence the custom arose of the father of a bride making a present to the bridegroom of a shoe as sign that it was to be his right to keep her in order.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

NAPOLEON'S PIRACY.

Even at St. Helena He Regarded His House as His Castle.

In the second installment of extracts from the unpublished diaries kept at St. Helena by Napoleon's physician, Dr. O'Meara, there appears in the March Century a characteristic anecdote of the dethroned emperor's insistence on his right to regard his house as his castle. Took a drive with N. in his carriage. Told him what Sir Thomas Reade told me, viz., that the Russian commissioner did not take any part in the letter written officially to the governor to see him. That it was only the French and Austrian commissioners who had applied; that the Russian would be very proud of being introduced to him, not in any official capacity, in fact in any manner which would not constrain him. He appeared surprised at this, and said that he had been told that the Austrian and Russian had applied, and not the Frenchman. He made me repeat it to him again. He said that they, the two who had applied, had taken their measures very badly if they wanted to be presented to him. That all the powers of Europe could not force him to receive them. "It is true," said he, "they can break open the door or level the house down, and then find me where where? * * * If they are not satisfied with the governor's report that I am here, cannot he cause them to come up when I am walking in the garden? They can see me from the other side of the ditch walking, if they do not credit this jailer of a governor, this chief of spies." He then remarked what coglioneria (nonsense) it was to send such a set out without any official authority, unrecognized even by the governor, and again said that no powers should force him to see them against his will; that two millions of men in arms should not make him do it. I told him that the Russian was a man of talent, and very much esteemed by those who knew him.

Poverty and Hypochondria.

A very interesting gentleman who has had much to do with private sanitariums in and around New York said the other evening: "I can always tell when there are hard times in the financial and commercial world. How? Why, all the private sanitariums in this neighborhood and in the Adirondacks are almost depleted. The men and women who believe that they are seriously ill, and who pamper their predilections toward hypochondria, drop all their fads and fancies and get back into the world in order to make the fight to make both ends meet. Vast wealth and luxury fill our sanitariums, while hard times bring the people to their senses and to the belief that they are not quite as sick as they believed themselves to be. Anybody can stand adversity, but very few can stand prosperity."—New York Sun.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Feeding Dairy Calves.

There is a discussion going on in some of our esteemed contemporaries regarding the feeding of young dairy calves, and it is rather amusing to note some of the extravagant statements made by those who argue that a calf can be more successfully raised without milk than it can on the good old plan provided by the Creator. If, for instance, we are to believe these enthusiasts, the feeding of milk is liable to teach the calf the bad habit of laying on fat instead of flesh and muscle, and the growing of bone. Milk, then, we must conclude, is a fat-producing food not fit for young growing calves, a fallacy that requires no refuting argument.

They proceed to prescribe a manner of feeding which, according to these savants who can improve upon nature's methods, is better than milk for the calf, in that it does not produce fat, causes "pot-bellies," which say they are a great desideratum for modern dairy calves, and tends to the growth of great coats of hair in winter to take the place of fat which they so much fear. Having thus provided what they consider a perfect ration, and it consists of flour, flax-seed jelly, hay tea, etc., they do not tell us what is the objection to sweet skim milk, nor figure the cost of their ration to show wherein it is more economical than a ration of dry corn meal and skim milk, which has been found a perfectly satisfactory ration and cheaper than one containing oil meal in any form, and it should be remembered that of all its forms "jelly" is the most troublesome to prepare.

The fact of the matter is that in the West at least the proposed ration would cost about as much as milk at the prices it has been bringing when shipped to the factory or made into butter or cheese. In the East, where the price of milk is higher than in the West, there may be reason for depriving the young calves of it even during the first few days of their lives. We would prefer, however, to feed the calf sweet milk for ten days or so and then utilize the sweet skim milk that can so easily and cheaply build up, by the addition of corn meal fed dry, to perfectly take the place of the whole milk which can be more profitably sold.

The Farmers' Review is heartily in favor of feeding growing dairy calves upon a highly nitrogenous ration, but it does not believe that milk is apt to spoil a heifer as a prospective milker, for mother's milk is the best-balanced ration that can possibly be formed for growing young animals, and it is absolute bosh to say that it lessens the chances of a dairy-bred heifer becoming a profitable milking cow. Keep the calf growing naturally and it will not be stunted by the laying on of fat, nor is it necessary to produce a "pot-belly," which merely indicates an unhealthy state of the digestive apparatus and is far more likely to stunt and injure the calf than a ration containing a certain proportion of fat, without which no ration for any known purpose would be complete.

Poultry Notes.

How old should a hen be when she is sold off or killed for family use? The answer is, she should be killed after her second year. But in spite of this quite general answer, it is a known fact that some poultrymen keep their Brown Leghorns till they are about ten years old. One Brown Leghorn hen was kept till that age, when she had to her credit about 2,000 eggs, a good average, we must admit. Light Brahmas are said to be good layers till quite old. However, we lack data, as the domestic fowl has been sadly neglected in this. She is such a small piece of property that we have never thought it advisable to keep her for ten years and count her eggs. A systematic series of trials of this kind might give us a good deal of light on a dark subject.

* * *

The man that wants to become a successful poultryman must not become discouraged. This is the first requisite. He is sure to have most discouraging things happen to his flock, and, after three or four years of such happenings, he will feel that poultry raising is a delusion and that there is no success possible in it, anyway. But that is just the time when he should not think of quitting. It would be just as reasonable for a child, after having had a full run of all child's diseases, to think of giving up trying to live for fear of a constant recurrence of measles, mumps, chicken pox, whooping cough and the like. The poultryman, in his early disasters, is getting his child's diseases. Having once had them he is not likely to have them again. He has learned in the dear school of experience and is now ready to apply his lessons.

It is not perhaps known generally that the feathers of hens form a considerable article of commerce. There are in Chicago and New York firms that make a business of buying and selling feathers of all kinds of domestic fowls including the hen. They have agents that travel through the country buying up all the feathers they can get. The farms are not visited, but the large shippers of poultry are, for the reason that they have feathers in sufficient quantity to make the visit of an agent an object. Most of the feathers of the hen are used for filling feather beds and pillows. The large feathers of the cocks have particular value, as they are used for trimming ladies' hats, and most of them are sold for eagle's feathers. The feathers that are used for stuffing beds and pillows bring from 5 to 6 cents a pound, but the "sickles," the long tail feathers of the cock, sell as high as 30 cents per pound. The separation takes place in the establishments where the fowls are dressed. A mixed lot of feathers has little value to the buyer.

Applying Protective Inoculation.

Bulletin 91 of the Kansas Experiment Station says: One of the greatest difficulties encountered in our experiments with protective inoculation is to convince farmers that it is useless, or worse than useless, to inoculate sick or exposed hogs with an attenuated culture of swine-plague germs. This may be illustrated thus: Suppose an animal were poisoned by drinking a great quantity of some strong fermented liquor, like brandy, which contains about fifty per cent of alcohol: would it not seem ridiculous to attempt to save this animal's life by beginning now to accustom it to the effects of alcohol by feeding it additional but diluted potions of the same beverage? Attempting to save an infected animal by administering dilute or attenuated doses of the poisons (toxines) that are the actual cause of the disease is an analogous case. But, on the other hand, by feeding the diluted poisons before the full-strength poisons have been administered, the animal organism will gradually accustom itself to stronger and stronger doses, until full-strength doses can be administered without harm. There are, of course, limits to all these assertions, but within these limits the facts will bear out the statements. On these principles protective inoculation rests, and this once fully understood, there will be no danger of confounding protective inoculation with curative treatment. The average farmer is unwilling to go to any reasonable expense in order to protect himself against a danger not yet in sight, but when it is too late he is too often willing to go to the opposite extreme and permit himself to be imposed upon by the very worst kind of pretenders. As already stated, our great difficulty lies in trying to induce farmers to inoculate their pigs in time, before they have swine-plague or cholera, and before their neighbors' pigs across the road begin dying of this disease (or diseases?).

Calves that Won't Drink Milk.

We once raised a calf that never learned to drink milk, writes a contributor to National Stockman and Farmer. It was the only case of the sort I ever heard of and we naturally supposed that it would die, for by no possible means could it be taught to drink any milk, more than just to taste of it. It grew very thin, even before we gave it up, but as nobody wanted the job of killing it we turned it into the field and let it take its chances. After that it lived somehow, on grass and water, and it did not get any too much of either, for we had the bad habit of turning calves into a sort of clearing that had neither water nor feed in much quantity, expecting the calves to live mainly on milk. The calf that would not drink milk seemed to fairly dry and shrivel up till it was a sort of walking shadow, but it made a great fight for life and came out in the fall quite an animal, so that it wintered with the other stock and began the second year about even. It was a heifer and as a cow developed the ordinary milking qualities of the rest of the herd; none the worse, apparently, for its experience. Nobody had any idea why it disliked milk. I cannot remember whether it began by sucking the mother or not, but suppose that it did, as it was common to allow the calf to remain with the cow till the milk was fit to use.

My experience is that all possible effort to get calves to eating solid food early is valuable. We take to late summer or fall calves as we watch them more. These can be taught to eat grass early and as it does not physic them as the over-succulent spring growth does, they can eat as much as they will without injury.

How the Ground Warms Up.

There are what are called cold lands and warm lands. The difference in the rapidity with which land warms up is of value to the farmer, according to the crop he intends to place on it. The porosity of soil determines to a great extent the facility with which it will take in heat in the springtime. The land that is heavy and has no drain under it, either artificial or natural, will hold the water till most of it evaporates under the heat of the sun. This process of evaporation does not improve the soil till the process is completed. The act of making vapor incorporates a great deal of heat with the water to change it into vapor, just as certainly as it requires heat in the teakettle to change the water in it into vapor. In the latter case the act is apparent, and in the first case it is not visible, but it is nevertheless the same. No particle of water in the soil can be changed into vapor without heat being furnished for the operation. This heat is drawn mostly from the ground, partly from the sun. This renders the ground not warmer but colder till the water has evaporated. Could that surface water be drawn off from below the loss of heat by evaporation would be avoided. In that case the land gets all the heat that the sun sends it. Moreover, the warm spring rains then sink into the ground carrying with them the heat they have obtained from the atmosphere warmed by the sun. The difference between land that is so porous that the water sinks into it and runs off from below and land where the water has to evaporate by the action of the air is sometimes as much as 10 degrees. Land that is porous thus becomes warm enough for plants to grow in it weeks before heavy soggy land.

In a recent opinion rendered Attorney-General Akin of Illinois holds that the acts of 1897 and 1899 providing for the identification of owners of sheep killed by dogs are invalid, and that the act of June 19, 1898, is still in effect. This law provides that owners must present proof of their loss between ten and forty days after the sheep are killed or injured.

Experimenters that have carefully noted the rate of growth of the corn plant have ascertained that it sometimes grows as much as five inches per day.

PRETORIA, ALMOST IMPREGNABLE.

Nature and Art Have Made It So—In Condition to Withstand a Long Siege—Its Fortifications.

The most important place in South Africa at present is Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal, where Oom Paul has made the most elaborate preparations to withstand a siege and where the Boers may be relied upon to make a most stubborn resistance. The place is defended by nature and art as few other towns in the world, and has been described by some military writers as being impregnable. On three sides of Pretoria the mountain ranges rise to elevations of 1,000 and 2,000 feet above the streets of the city, which itself is 4,500 feet above sealevel, but 1,100 feet lower than the site of Johannesburg, to the south. On the fourth side—the south and facing the approach from Johannesburg — the range flattens away to a vast level plateau, treeless, desolate, exposed at every point to the sweep of any guns that may command it. The town is 1,080 miles from Cape Town, 50 from Johannesburg. On the map it seems as easy of approach as a prairie village in Nebraska. But the map topographer fails to present the lofty, barren hills that face the southern plateau, the precipitous banks of Aapies river, the narrow gorges—so few in number—the innumerable "spion" or lookout kopjes that seem literally to leap from the bosom of the plain and sullenly, silently oppose access to the capital city. The civil engineers who laid out the railway from Johannesburg to Pretoria found such problems of grade and mountain resistance offered them that the road finally was forced to enter the city on a line resembling the curves and twists of a great boa constrictor.

You look up to the mountain fronts as your train struggles to find its way into Pretoria, and wherever the eye rests there appears to be the lines of a fort, a redoubt, the front of masked batteries or the domes of boom-proof rifle and cannon pits. To the north, east, west and south these engirdle the city. They command the few—very few —narrow entrances to Pretoria. They watch like great dogs the dusty, sun-rotted veldt over which any English troops coming from the south must pass. They blink at the one railroad to Johannesburg and the one to Lourenco Marques. Their location has been with purpose. Capt. Schiel, now an English prisoner, constructed the one at Daspoort from plans obtained in Berlin. He brought special assistants from Berlin to aid him in the work. Amsterdam engineers built others of the defenses. After them came French engineers, and then those of Italy, so that the completed structures represent the genius of four nations.

There are seven of these forts, and in external appearance they look alike. They have masonry faces, with earthwork which covers their fronts to a great depth. In this, they conform with plans and suggestions to be found in M. Bloch's much-studied work, "The Future of War." Pile upon pile of sand bags are stacked up wherever shells from the enemy might strike. There are many hidden recesses, secret passages, complete telephone connections—not only with each other, but with the government buildings in Pretoria. Searchlights are mounted in each structure so as to command the surrounding country at night. The magazines are underground, and are reported to be mined. Report has it, also, that the near approaches are mined and that the electrical construction is such that considerable portions of an enemy's army might be blown into eternity before surrender came. For food, in the event of siege, enormous quantities of maize have been accumulated—enough, it is said, to feed the army and the population of Pretoria for five years. The supply of ammunition is calculated to be sufficient for two years. How many guns are mounted or will be it is difficult to estimate. The total artillery force of the Boers at present is estimated at 450 guns by the English.

The guns originally placed in the forts were 15-centimeter Creusots, but their number is not definitely known. M. Bloch has estimated that it will require but 500 men to each of these forts, each force supplied with ten modern guns, to keep the English at bay forever. Right or wrong, he maintains that occupying a besieging position, devoid of sustenance, the English will be in greater danger of starvation than the Boers, and that convoy supplies cannot be brought in with such rapidity and success as to make the siege successful.

The fountains, or water supply, of Pretoria is within the radius of forts. The westernmost fort is on the range of hills behind Pretoria, and lies at a distance of 31,000 feet from the city's center. There is a powerful redoubt to the southwest on the range of hills through which the transport road to Johannesburg passes. This completes, with various earth batteries, the circle of the larger works defending the Boer capital. Behind the great redoubt mentioned are the principal magazines, one excavated out of the solid rock, with a bombproof roof, and the other built into the kloop, also bombproof. Communication between the redoubt and the last-mentioned magazine is by means of a covered way. Roads connect all these forts with the capital, and they have pipes laid for water, as well as electric lights for the searchlights.

An English view of what can be done with the Pretoria fortifications is found in the following description of the liege train en route from England. This is the second train of its kind sent out from England during the last forty-six years. The last occasion was when sixty-five heavy guns and mortars were sent from Woolwich for the siege of Sebastopol, where, with fifty ship guns, they took part in the bombardment of that city in connection with the French siege train. The train now on its way out from England comprizes thirty howitzers, fourteen of 8-inch caliber, eight of 5-inch and eight of 4-inch. It is calculated that the investment of Pretoria will require 42,000 British troops, leaving the remainder of the army to guard the fortifications, occupy certain strategetic points and operate against that part of the Boer army not required for the defense of Pretoria. This part of the Boer army is expected to fall back into the north in the Zoutpansberg mountains, which the Boers are reported to intend to make their stronghold, and where they expect to carry on the war against England indefinitely.

Where the Yankee Was Slow.

We want small American retailers over here, writes a soldier from the Philippines. Wherever the army goes they should follow. Something should be done to encourage them to come here. They should be guaranteed protection, and in times of trouble an asylum for themselves and their property in army quarters. We want American retailers of shoes, clothing, haberdashery, stationery, provisions and canned goods. We want small restaurants and beer saloons. The prevailing margins of profits are enormous. The stock necessary is small. A few hundred dollars would buy it. I'm beginning to think since I came over here that the Yankee is the slowest man on earth. Every other nationality is getting a hand in on the Philippines. What is the matter with the American? He isn't coming fast enough and is missing big opportunities.

Eager for Gold.

Nicaragua boasts a volcano called Misaya, about which a curious but hardly credible story is told. When, in 1522, the Spaniards overrun the state, the volcano was very lively. Many of the victorious Spaniards thought that the raging fire at the foot of the crater was neither more nor less than pure gold in molten state. The puzzle was how to get it. But at last a few men, more foolish and more venturesome than their mates, had themselves lowered down until, by means of an iron chain with a bucket at the end of it, they could reach the fiery mass. Of course, as soon as the bucket neared the surface it was melted in a moment, and the silly fellows, when drawn up, were half dead from the heat and the poisonous smoke.

AGAINST THE ORGAN.

A Maine Parson Struggles and Comes Out Second Best.

In a Kennebec church Sunday week, says the Lewiston Journal, a new minister—that is, one who was being given a try—had about as much trouble as usually falls to the lot of one poor candidate. He arrived early at the church and found that the furnace was out of gear and that the auditorium was densely filled with smoke. The janitor and the gathering congregation opened the windows and labored with the furnace, and at last cleared the room enough so that the minister was dimly discernible through the blue tear-producing haze. The services started with a congregation whose eyes were aflame and a minister who was beginning to get uneasy. The voluntary was nearly over when one of the stops failed and a shrill, high pipe began to whistle. It pervaded the score of the music and the organist couldn't drown it out, no matter how much he hammered the other keys. At last he stopped. But the high whistle kept right on. The organist jabbed the stop in hopeless wrath, but to no avail. The music kept pouring out despite all he could do. The congregation wore a broad grin. The minister tried to look as though nothing had happened, and the services went on. The next hymn went all right—it didn't contain the note that bothered—and the parson and the organist breathed easier. Then came the last hymn before the sermon, and once more the single, piercing note rose high above the tune the organist was playing. The last verse was sung, the organist paused and the congregation rustled into their seats and settled themselves for the sermon. But the organ kept on. The minister rose and stepped forward to begin. But he couldn't with that ear-piercing whistle in the air. He looked reproachfully at the organ, but the brazen thing only whistled away in the same mocking way. The audience was smiling broadly, and the minister could not help but smile, too. And there they sat eyeing each other till the organ had exhausted the supply of wind in its lungs, and with a last little whistle gave way to the clergyman. They sang the closing hymn sans organ, for they did not want to take any more chances.

WORLD'S SMALLEST BOOK.

It Is Less Than Half an Inch Square and Contains Thirteen Pages.

The smallest book in the world has just been printed in Cleveland, says the Leader of that city. But ten of them were printed, and none of them is for sale. In all the catalogues of the rare book dealers, what is called the Bijou Almanac is named as the smallest book in the world, and until now has been that. The Cleveland book breaks the record in size, or lack of size, for printed books. There are rare little volumes engraved on ivory fastened together like a book, but they are not really books in the estimation of collectors of miniature volumes. The Bijou Almanac is a real book, printed on real paper, and bound in stiff little blue covers. It was made in London in 1836 by Schloss. It has sixty pages, a calendar for each month, and some wonderfully delicate little steel engravings. It is half an inch wide and five-eighths long, and not much thicker than the cover of an ordinary book. The owner of this little book, which is worth several times its weight in gold, is Charles H. Meigs of 67 Eastman street, who is also the publisher of the other tiny book mentioned, the one that is the smallest in the world. This smallest book in the world measures just three-eighths of an inch by half an inch over all. There are thirteen pages in it, and the work has been done in a Cleveland printing establishment. The type was set by hand, and then the pages photographed down to the limit of distinctness, though the book can only be read with a magnifying glass. Under a strong glass, however, the work is seen to be distinct and perfect. It is printed on genuine India paper, and this is one of the most interesting things about the tiny book. The Oxford Press, the English Bible publishing concern, controls all the genuine India paper produced, and it was with the greatest difficulty that enough was procured to make even the ten copies of this tiny book. It is said that the paper was surreptitiously obtained. The title of the book is "Thus Spake the Wind," a very old religious poem of no particular interest.

ALL DUE TO APPETITE.

Will the Girls of the Future Be a Race of Giantesses?

Why are almost all girls tall nowadays? Or, perhaps, one should rather say, how is it that modern maidens are so much more developed than those of a generation or two back? We have been assured that it is because they take so much more outdoor exercise, and because they go in for physical training, that they have literally grown up in this extraordinary fashion. It pleased a great many people to have this theory deduced. But we are never suffered to hold any theories long nowadays. Thus, one of those deplorably unromantic persons who revel in horrid prosaic facts that knock down all our prettiest and most poetical theories, has discovered the real reason why girls are so much taller at the end of the century than they were at the beginning and middle. The truth, we are told, is that they eat twice as much as their predecessors. A small appetite used to be considered de rigueur; to be hungry, per contra, was vulgar. But the modern maiden makes no pretense of living on air, or love, or meringues, or jelly, or whatever unsubstantial fare it was that was supposed to nourish the girl of other days. She has a good hearty appetite, and she is at no pains to conceal it; indeed, she rather vaunts it than otherwise. A good dinner she thoroughly appreciates, and when she can get meat she never trifles with fripperies. There is doubtless a great deal in this very prosaic explanation of an obvious fact. But if it be true, then we must keep our girls well in hand. "Increase of appetite," the immortal maker of apt quotations has told us, "grows on that it feeds on," and if our maidens continue to develop good appetites, and engender them by much outdoor exercise, the women of the future will be a race of giantesses.—London Queen.

"PAT, THE BLACKSMITH."

A Humble Artisan Made Famous by His Picture.

"Paint me as a blacksmith," said Patrick Lyon, and the artist did so. So it came to pass that Lyon's portrait is probably the best representation of an actual living blacksmith at his work in the world, says Success. It is a full-length picture, life-size, in his blacksmith's apron, resting his brawny arm and blackened hand upon his hammer, while a youth at the bellows renews the red heat of the iron his employer has been laboring upon. The original, painted by John Neagle in 1826, is in the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts; the replica is at the Boston Athenaeum library. "Pat, the blacksmith," as he was familiarly called in Philadelphia, was born in London, in 1779, and came to Philadelphia in 1793, where he died April 15, 1829. His early struggles made him become an ingenious blacksmith, and he was a local celebrity. He built many fire engines. He was once sent for to open an iron chest made by himself; the owner had lost the key. Pat dexterously performed the operation, and, holding the lid with one hand, presented the other with a demand for $10. It was refused. Pat let fall the lid and walked off, leaving the treasure as fast sealed as before. There was no remedy and reluctantly the owner of the strong box again sent for Pat. He promptly appeared and the box was instantly opened. The first demand of $10 was quickly offered; but no, "I must have $20 now," said the operator, and $20 was paid without a murmur, for the lid and the lock were still in the iron grasp of the lockmaker. The story of his incarceration was this: Lyon was the blacksmith and locksmith of the Bank of Pennsylvania. The vaults were entered and a large sum of money was carried off. Suspicion fell upon Lyon. Pat was arrested and imprisoned for a long time in the castle, which, by his desire, the painter has introduced into the historical portrait. In process of time the real culprit was found to be the watchman. Pat was released and made his old employers and recent persecutors pay handsome damages—$12,000, I believe. He went back to his anvil, forged his wealth and hammered iron bars into banknotes and eagles.

Almost There Already.

Miss Fortee—Yes, dear, we have been engaged for a long time, but what has prevented me from taking the irrevocable step has always been the fateful question, "Will he love me when I grow old?" Miss Tenny—Don't worry, darling; you'll soon know now.—Stray Stories.

Dairy Notes.

A patent has been issued in Germany covering a process of condensing milk by freezing and thawing it in a centrifugal separator when in motion. The work is said to be rendered easier by first separating the cream and condensing the skim milk, after which it is mixed with the cream. It is claimed for this kind of condensed milk that it can be again diluted to its original volume, and also that it does not have the sweet taste to which some people object in the condensed milk we now use. However, the mere patenting of a process does not prove its utility, and we may have to wait indefinitely for a demonstration of its value.

What is pure milk? The eye cannot tell and the nose cannot tell. Even the chemist and the microscopist fail, when each works by himself. Scarlet fever germs may get into it from poorly-washed dishes, typhoid fever germs may get into the cans when they are washed at some contaminated well, and there is not one chance in a million that they will ever be detected in the milk. The only safety is pasteurization of all milk being sent to the city. The dealers and the customers should insist on this. While it is true that 160 degrees of heat will not positively kill all tuberculosis germs, yet it can as a rule be depended on to kill all or render them harmless. But typhoid fever and scarlet fever germs perish at a less heat, and thus pasteurization is for them effective.

It was believed that when the different states adopted brands for their state cheese and put on a trade mark the cheese or butter would be protected. But as soon as the manufacturers did this the counterfeiters took hold and boldly imitated the brands, taking care, however, to sell them outside the state in which they were registered. A New York dealer declares that he finds the registered brands being imitated in Chicago and all over the west and south. In Chicago are men that manufacture stencils to be used in branding cheese after the registered New York brands. Thus the reputation that New York has built up is being stolen by every manufacturer of poor cheese in the country and the brands act as a protection to the manufacturer and consumer only in the state in which they are registered.

The dairymen of the country are pushing for the passage of the Grout bill in congress. This bill gives to each state the right to control all butter or butterine that comes in in original packages. The effect of the bill, if passed, will be to make each state supreme as to the goods sold within its borders. As it is, a man may purchase any prohibted article just as long as it is purchased in another state. Thus a manufacturer of yellow oleomargarine can ship it to customers in another state and so long as there is no attempt made to subdivide the packages the law cannot touch the article shipped. It is certainly a queer state of affairs when a state cannot exercise police power over the food articles within its borders.

The man who ships butter to market in tubs should see to it that the tubs he uses are well made. It not infrequently happens that the tubs come into the hands of the commission man in bad shape. The hoops of some of them are so light that they break, and when this occurs to the cover hoop it may have far-reaching consequences.

Cow's Milk for Lambs.

A contributor to the Breeder's Gazette says: I notice that A. E. C. of Pleasant Hill, Kas., said in a late number that he tried feeding young lambs on cow's milk and the lambs died: Four years ago last December I bought eighty sheep that were very poor. They commenced having lambs in about three weeks, many of them having twins and some of them triplets. I saved about 95 per cent of the lambs, and all were dropped from Jan. 13 to Feb. 27. I could not have saved 60 per cent of them but for cow's milk. I think over half those lambs got their first food from a heifer. I did not do much else for five or six weeks but attend to the lambs. As soon as a lamb said it wanted something to eat, if it could not get it from its mother I took it to the heifer, opened its mouth and put into it the little teat and squeezed milk into it.

If a lamb gets too hungry and chilled before it gets the milk it often dies, but I have filled them as full as they could hold with cow's milk before they were a half-hour old scores of times without hurting them. After a lamb gets a fill from a heifer it will take hold of a sheep's little teats much better. There have been days when I went to the young cow with a little lamb perhaps twenty times. It injured the heifer some as to giving milk, but that was nothing compared to saving fifty lambs. After the lambs were a few days old they were fed from a bottle with a rubber nipple. I fed every one that did not get enough from its mother for awhile until they began to eat grain and turnips. It is a novel sight to see forty or fifty lambs crowding around, struggling for the first suck from the bottle.

My lambs were all dropped last winter in January and February, and I saved 98 per cent of them. I did not take more than five or six to a cow because their mothers lacked milk. My first lamb weighed fifty-nine and one-half pounds at 8 weeks old. The heifer that fed successfully so many lambs ate about twenty-five pounds of turnips every day, which no doubt made her milk better for young lambs. I have lost less lambs than that noted breeder Lyman Hill (my neighbor), and I believe it is because I feed more turnips, though he feeds a great many swedes.

Prosperity Among Farmers.—I am aware that the idea prevails that the chances are much better for the accumulation of wealth in cities than on the farm. This is a very great mistake. In the city a small class has a great deal of wealth and a large class is in very moderate circumstances or in the depths of poverty. The great mass in the city are not as well off as those on the farm. The average wealth of 99 per cent of the inhabitants of nearly every city in Illinois is less than that of the surrounding country. —John T. Campbell

LOOKING INTO A SHOTGUN.

A Bandit's Victim Tells How It Feels to Be Held Up.

"I happen to know how it feels to be held up," said a gentleman who now occupies a position of prominence in local railroad circles. "I acquired my experience as a passenger in a stagecoach about six miles from Tombstone, A. T., in 1884. We had a big load, six men inside, two on the driver's seat and an express messenger on the boot. Every man in the crowd had a revolver, two of the inside passengers had Winchesters across their knees, and the messenger had an 8 bore duck gun that contained nearly a quart of slugs. We were held up at about 4 in the afternoon by a single masked man, who rose suddenly from behind a pile of rocks and covered us with a 'sawed off' shotgun. All the curtains were raised, so there was a fair view of the interior, and when he yelled 'Hands up!' everybody obeyed.

"Then he told us to get out one by one and stand in a row, with our backs to him. I never hated to do anything so badly in my life, but I saw the others going and followed suit. About that time a half grown boy, apparently unarmed, appeared from behind the rocks and took up the collection, which included our joint arsenal. After that we were ordered back, and the chief bandit told the driver to go ahead.

"As far as I know, the robbers were never caught, but what especially impressed me about the episode was the reluctance of any of our party to take the initiative. I was certain the slightest resistance would be successful, but I realized also that the man who made the first move had an excellent chance of being killed, and I suppose all the others felt the same way. Anyhow, it happened exactly as I have narrated it. During the year I lived in Arizona there were eight or nine hold ups on the same road, and in no instance was there any resistance whatever. That taught me that a crowd of average men, gazing into a cocked shotgun, will do just about anything that is suggested."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

COMPANY DINNERS.

They Are Dreaded by Guests and Make the Hostess Nervous.

Writing on "Making Company of Guests," Edward Bok, in The Ladies' Home Journal, considers "it a curious fact that American housewives are so loath to believe that a dinner with fuss and feathers is dreaded by the vast majority of people. The highest compliment we can possibly show a guest at dinner is to let him partake of an ordinary meal, to let him come quietly in and 'be one of the family,' yet this is the very compliment which we withhold from him. Instead of giving a guest what he would relish most we give him what he really enjoys least.

"Let a hostess be ever so graceful and tactful, let there be years of experience on her shoulders, yet nothing can conceal from her guests that the dinner which she is serving is other than an unusual one. It is a formal affair, and no amount of grace can make anything else of it, for nothing speaks so loudly or so unerringly as a formal company dinner. Every course shows it; every movement of the waitress proclaims it; every piece of china fairly cries out the occasion.

"And of course no one at the table really enjoys it. The guest certainly does not, because he knows he is being made company of, and that feeling is always enough to offset every enjoyment. The hostess does not, for she hasn't the time. Her eyes are for the table and her servants, not for her guest."

Ensign Eames Lost His Wager.

Miss Emma Eames has a brother, Harold, who was an ensign in the United States navy. His ship was stationed at Leghorn, and one day the flagship entered the harbor with the fleet commander on board. The latter was very dignified and was never known to lose his self control. One day the commander was in swimming, and young Eames made a friendly wager with a fellow officer that he would destroy his senior's equanimity, in naval parlance, "rattle" him. The wager was accepted, and a moment afterward Eames was in the water swimming toward his superior officer. Suddenly he paused, and, stopping his powerful overhand stroke, began treading water. Then he saluted precisely as if he had been on a quarter deck. To the young man's intense surprise the commander returned the salute with equal gravity. Mr. Eames lost his wager.—Saturday Evening Post.

Seen In the Rough.

Tortoise shells as they are unloaded from the ships are far from beautiful. To be classed as rough they must be just as they were when taken from the tortoises' backs. It is not until washed and scoured with acids that their exquisite coloring shows. The same is true of the beautiful seashells which come here from the shores of India and other tropical lands. There is almost as much difference between them in the rough and when finished as there is between uncut diamonds and those that have passed through a lapidary's hands.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A THRILLING SIGHT.

CATCHING AND KILLING THE MONSTER TUNNY FISH.

They Are First Driven Into Enormous Nets In the Mediterranean Sea and Are Then Stabbed and Slashed to Death With Spears.

One of the most thrilling and wonderful sights in the world is that of the tunny fisheries of the Mediterranean sea. The pursuit of these great and swift fishes is not a mere tame operation of netting. It is a fight between man and sea creatures such as is duplicated nowhere except in the whale fisheries. The tunny is a huge mackerel. He is a predaceous fish, and his course through the seas is that of a destroyer without parallel. So deadly is the tunny to the schools of herring and similar food fishes that he is called the herring hog. In our waters he is known more generally as the horse mackerel.

The tunny fisheries are distinctly European, and they are the oldest industry that is known in the Mediterranean sea. To capture them men must band themselves together in large bodies, for fishermen singly could do nothing with these fishes, which grow to a length of ten feet and weigh over half a ton sometimes. Therefore there is a system of co-operation on the coasts that are visited by the tunny, a system which dates back to the Phoenicians, who were great tunny catchers in their time.

The perfection of this system is due, among other things, to the fact that the big fishes have absolutely regular habits. In normal times they can be relied on to make their appearance at certain periods almost to the minute. When they come, it is in huge schools that can be seen afar, for they scour the waters like ships of war, and the leapings of their prey and the leapings of their own bulky bodies beat the deep into white foam and lather.

Since they are so exact in their habits, the fishermen prepare for them always before they arrive. At some designated spot are spread enormous nets, exceedingly deep and made of the strongest of line. These are not designed to catch the tunnies. They are spread out merely to force the fishes to edge in and in until they are led to the real prison net, which is a vast contrivance set in an immense square and powerful enough to defy anything that swims.

As soon as the last of the school has entered this boxlike inclosure the sides of the great net are raised at a signal. At first the imprisoned fishes do not show any signs of alarm, but as the net rises, inch by inch, from the water depths gleaming, swordlike backs appear here and there above the surface, darting with incredible swiftness from side to side of the net. Each instant more of these living blades appear above the surface.

Then the fishes begin to leap. Here one launches himself straight out of the water—500 pounds of glorious life—toward the sky, to crash back into the sea with a flaillike blow of sides and tail that makes the ocean echo. Another and another rises and falls back. Soon the scene is as if the abysses of the sea were spouting their inhabitants, for hundreds of immense silver flashing fishes rise everywhere at once within the net.

But now a new element enters. Long, narrow fishing boats push into the inclosure. In them stand brown men with lances and spears and big knives lashed to poles. Then begins a fight that is terrible to see. The men thrust madly into the struggling masses of fishes. The fishes leap and roll and dive and leap again, hammering the sea with tails that churn like the screws of steamships and whiten the waves with foam. Before many minutes boats and men are drenched with bloody water. The surface of the ocean is red. Out of the smoking spray peer faces now and then that are dabbled with blood till they look scarcely human.

Now and then a man slips and falls among the harried fishes. Then there are loud screams from his companions and cries of supplication from him as he calls to his patron saint, for it is no joke to fall among those mighty bodies that are dashing around in their death throes.

So the fight continues till in that inclosed space of sea there is not a fish alive. Every boat is half full of water and loaded down with living silver, where the slim, piratical bodies of the beautiful fishes lie. The inhabitants of the towns near the scene of this fishing make a fete day of the arrival of the tunny, for it means food and employment for many hundreds of men, women and children. The fish is a favorite article of food, especially when salted, and the roe is a great delicacy, which brings fancy prices. The tunnies that are caught off the Italian coasts have to be passed through the custom house when they are landed, like any other merchandise, and the streets there present a strange appearance then, for on all sides are wheelbarrows full of the shapely, monstrous creatures.—New York Press.

Red Paint In New England.

As one drives through the country towns all over Maine one can hardly fail to notice the frequent old red barn and oftentimes a whole set of farm buildings painted this conspicuous color. Query was made as to the reason therefor. It seems red paint is cheapest, far cheaper than white lead paint, and so far as serviceableness goes lasts as long and sheds the rain as well. Long may the little red farmhouse brighten our New England landscapes.—Bangor Whig and Courier.

In all contentions between wit and violence, prudence and rudeness, learning and the sword, the strong hand took it first, and the strong head possessed it last.

ICEBERGS.

No port lamps gleam along our sides,
No banners float on high;
No human lookout raises glass
To scan our sea or sky.

No admirals above our decks
Mid guns and gunners stand,
In hidden sheath to send the sound
Of warlike, stern command.

Yet all the navies of the world
Our bows in vain assail;
We fear no smoking battle tower
That thunders through the gale.

By captains gray our path is marked,
By sailors white and old;
For us the phantom rockets glare,
And phantom bells are tolled.

In misty, unremembered ports
Our beacon lights were set
By hands long gone from mortal view,
By forms that men forget.

And we may wander on our course
Till time at end shall be,
For in our breasts are locked the hulls
Of ships once lost at sea.

—John James Meehan in Criterion.

CHIEFS OF THE SULUS.

Each Has the Power of Life or Death Over His Subjects.

The social system among the Moros is much more primitive than it is among the greater part of the other Philippine races. A chief, or dato, controls a district. He has his own particular followers and his slaves. Besides these he may command all the men of his own district in time of war. He also has the right of life and death over his subjects. For instance, a few weeks before we arrived in Jolo, Dato Jokanine had occasion to execute one of his followers. The man had been intrusted with money belonging to the dato. The first time he came to his chief and said:

"Oh, great and benevolent dato, I have gambled away the money! Forgive me!"

"Very well," said the dato. "See that it does not happen again."

Once more the retainer came, saying: "Oh, great and benevolent dato, again have I gambled away thy money, and again I beg thee, in thy great mercy, to forgive me!"

"This is the second time I have forgiven thee," said Jokanine, "but the third time, I warn thee, thou shalt die."

Yet again the unfortunate man returned without the money he had collected for the dato.

"Oh, dato," he cried, throwing himself at the feet of his chief, "I have sinned again and taken thy money! Mercy! Mercy!"

"Cut him down," said the dato to one of his men-at-arms. The man offered no resistance and was cut to pieces with one of the great knives of the natives.—Harper's Weekly.

What Might Have Been.

"Now, I suppose," remarked Mrs. Snaggs, "that the surgeons of the army are attached to the medical corps."

"Your supposition does you great credit," replied Mr. Snaggs sarcastically. "It's a wonder you didn't imagine that doctors joined the army for the purpose of building bridges or going up in a balloon. Where should army surgeons be except in the medical corps?"

"Well, I thought that they might possibly belong to the lancers."—London Standard.

50 cents per year. Read by a greater number of Northwestern farmers than any other agricultural paper published. Are you among the number? If not, Why not? Every department in the hands of a specialist. Short talks department. A department where all kinds of questions are answered for the benefit of subscribers, is a leading feature of the paper. No northwestern farmers list of papers is complete without it. This paper and Spectator one year for $1.35.

Cosmopolitan, New York World and The Spectator.

You wish to keep in touch with metropolitan life, through the medium of a great daily. The Thrice-a-Week World of New York is the equivalent of a daily and is a marvellous fund of knowledge concerning the happenings of the day. Each issue contains six to eight pages of eight columns each or over eight thousand columns of reading matter a year. In former days this would have cost you probably as much as $6.00 a year, by itself. Now you can have it, if you wish, in connection with your home paper and The Cosmopolitan Magazine, Three together one year for only $2.50.

Wall paper and calcimine at the New Drug store.

A county superintendent of schools in a neighboring city, says an exchange asked every teacher at the county institute who took their local paper to hold up their hands, and out of about one hundred only six responded. The superintendent expressed great surprise and said: "You don't spend a dollar a year with these papers, yet you expect them to print your notices of institutes reports, programs, etc., all free of charge and thus expect them to advertise you to climb the ladder to better positions and better salaries without one cent of patronage."

The Solway Press writer who knows from experience what he's talking about puts it in this feeling fashion: "Settlers are flocking to the west part of North Dakota by the thousands to take up vacant lands that appeared to us familiar with that country, as barren wastes. The emigration movement to that country is the result of advertising and booming. If those settlers would come here where everything under the sun is to be had and 600 miles nearer market, their lot would be blessed; but God pity them in the country where they are going."

DELEGATE CONVENTION.

Peoples' Party delegate convention for the county of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, will be held at the city hall in the city of Thief River Falls, in said county on the 28th day of April, 1900, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said date, for the purpose of electing eight delegates to attend the Congressional convention for the seventh Congressional District to be held in the City of Fergus Falls, County of Ottertail, on the 23rd day of June 1900, and for the purpose of electing the necessary number of delegates to attend the state convention to be held in Minneapolis, Minnesota on the 2nd day of May, 1900, to elect delegates to attend the National Convention to be held at Sioux Falls, S. Dak.

Also for the purpose of electing the necessary number of delegates to attend the State Convention to be held in Minneapolis, Minn., in accordance with the call of the State Committee to be hereafter issued, for the purpose of placing in nomination candidates of said party for the various state officers.

The basis of representation as determined by the county central committee shall be one delegate at large for each voting precinct, and one delegate for every fifty votes or major part there of cast for P. M. Ringdal for member of Congress at the General Election in 1898.

In conformity with the foregoing apportionment the voting precincts of Red Lake county will be entitled to delegates in said convention as follows:

Black River	2	Bray	1
Emradville	1	Equality	1
Garnes	1	Gervais	1
Lake Pleasant	2	Lambert	2
Louisville	2	Norden	1
North	1	Numedal	1

The Primaries for the election of delegates to attend said convention shall be held in each of the above precincts on the 27th day of April, 1900. The polls of said primaries shall be open at 7 o'clock p. m., and shall be closed at 8 o'clock p. m. of said day.

By order of the Peoples' Party County Central Committee of Red Lake County, Minnesota.

Frank Jeffers, Secretary. H. E. Ives, Chairman.

Marriage is Too Easy.

"The present open door policy for marriage in America cannot exist much longer," writes Edward Bok in the April Ladies' Home Journal. "The question must be met, and it should be met squarely. Any discussion of divorce is untimely; it is futile at the moment. It is grappling with the question at the wrong end. Whether divorce is right or wrong; whether there should be divorce at all, and on what grounds a decree of divorce should be granted—these are not the pressing questions of the hour. The whole matter of divorce does not begin to stand in such urgent need of discussion as does the question of the laws of marriage. When we adjust marriage as we should adjust it, then we can give our attention to divorce. And then we shall find that in adjusting the one we shall have come pretty close to the wisest and best adjustment of the other. The practical solution of both, in short, lies in the proper adjustment and rigid enforcement of laws which shall make marriage more difficult of accomplishment."

N. J. Vernon, Pastor.

A resolution of investigation has been introduced to Congress in regard to the expenditures of "Ferd" Peck, of Chicago, President McKinley's commissioners to the Paris Exposition, who has submitted a most extraordinary account to the government. It has been credibly reported that Mr. Peck has taken in his train to Paris the greatest crowd of "sons of their fathers" that ever crossed the waters, and has taken them at the country's expense. The law requires the Commissioner-General annually to submit to Congress "a detailed statement of the expenditures incurred." Mr. Peck's report was made to the president on November 17, but for some unknown reason it did not drift into Congress until April 2, nearly five months after it was submitted. It shows that under Mr. Peck's direction the sum of $240,633 was expended from November 15, 1898 to November 1, 1899 and the only explanation of where the money went is contained in the following statement: Salaries of experts, $72,045; salaries of clerks, $34,929; officers salaries, $17,765; salaries of employes, $2,732; traveling expenses, $36,245; buildings, $38,047; rent (Chicago, Paris and New York), $13,436; furniture, $7,252; stationery and printing, $5,403; telegraph and cable, $1,775; Miscellaneous, $10,400. Nobody here knows anything about paid experts, while the traveling expenses seem extravagant even when Mr. Peck's propensity for vibrating between Europe and America is taken into consideration.

TAX JUDGMENT SALE.

Pursuant to a Real Estate Tax Judgment of the district court, in the county of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, entered the twenty-first (21st) day of March, A. D. 1900, in proceedings for enforcing payment of taxes and penalties upon real Estate in the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, remaining delinquent on the first Monday of January, 1900, and of the statutes in such case made and provided, I shall, on the first Monday, being the

7th Day of May A. D. 1900

at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon, at my office, in the court house, in the city of Red Lake Falls and country of Red Lake Minnesota, sell the lands which are charged with taxes, penalties and costs in said judgment, and on which taxes, penalties and costs shall not have been previously paid.

[SEAL] Adam Zeh,
Auditor Red Lake County, Minnesota.
Dated at Red Lake Falls this 12th day of April, A. D. 1900.

Warning Against Forest and Prairie Fire.

Chapter 196 of the general laws of the state of Minnesota for 1895 (Act of April 18th) constitutes supervisors of towns, mayors of cities and presidents of village councils fire wardens, and it is made their duty to take precautions to prevent forest and prairie fires, and if they occur, to go and extinguish or control them; and in emergencies to call upon any able-bodied male person over eighteen years of age, to assist. Reports of such fires with particulars tending to fix responsibility therefore shall be made within reasonable time—usually within a week. The forest commissioner is required to provide and sign an abstract as herein of the penalties under said law, and it is made the duty of the county commissioners of each county to cause said abstract to be published in at least three issues of the official paper in their respective counties each year, between the 15th of April and 1st of November, and they are hereby instructed to publish this notice entire. Under said law the following are liable to a penalty not exceeding $500 or imprisonment in the state prison not over ten years or both: Any person who maliciously sets or causes to be set on fire any woods, prairie or other combustible material whereby the property of another is destroyed and life is sacrificed.

The following are liable to a penalty not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding three months: Any person refusing, without cause to assist fire wardens in extinguishing forest or prairie fires. Any fire warden who neglects to perform his duties.

Any person who willfully, negligently or carelessly sets on fire, or causes to be set on fire, any woods, prairie or other combustible material thereby causing injury to another.

Any person who shall kindle a fire on or dangerously near to forest or prairie land and leave it unquenched or shall be a party thereto.

Any person who shall use other than incombustible fire wads for fire arms or carry a naked torch, firebrand or other exposed light in or dangerously near to forest land.

Any person who shall wilfully or heedlessly deface, destroy or remove this or any other warning placard posted under the requirements of the above mentioned acts.

Any railroad company wilfully neglecting to provide efficient spark arresters on its engines; or to keep its right of way to the width of 100 feet, cleared of combustible material; or which shall fail to comply with other provisions of Section 12 of the above mentioned act.

The following are liable to a penalty of not less than $5 nor more than $50: Any railroad employe who wilfully violates the provisions of section 12 of the above mentioned act.

Any owner of threshing or other portable steam engines who neglects to have efficient spark arresters, or who shall deposit live coals or hot ashes without extinguishing the same.

Here are a few good rules for dairying that you might paste in your hat: Be gentle and kind to the animals; milk regularly; keep the stables clean and well ventilated; sell off all poor dairy cows; keep plenty of pure water and have it warm enough; raise plenty of clover, millet, cornstalks and oats; raise your calves liberally on dairy feed. Be sure your milking utensils are perfectly clean, and, that the butter-maker has so much confidence in your milk that he never thinks it necessary to examine it.

To cure a cough in one day take the Imperial cough syrup. Guaranteed to cure. For sale at the new Drug Store.

Regulate Your Watch:

The Best in the World.

We believe Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best in the world. A few weeks ago we suffered with a severe cold and a troublesome cough, and having read their advertisements in our own and other papers we purchased a bottle to see if it would effect us. It cured us before the bottle was more than half used. It is the best medicine out for colds and coughs.—The Herald, Andersonville, Ind. For sale by The Imperial Drug Store.

HER HEART'S SECRET;

Or, UNDER A SPELL.

BY JEAN WARNER.

CHAPTER IX.

An Omen of Ill.

Sybil was not down at breakfast next morning, and Fannie found Herbert, as well as her father, rather grave and taciturn.

Mrs. Wyllis, seated at the head of the table, kept her watchful gray eyes on all, while she seemed to devote her whole attention to the tea and coffee before her.

"I did have such a dreadful dream last night," said Fannie, whose flow of conversation was irrepressible. "It must have been that fruit cake of yours, Mrs. Wyllis. I thought there was an earthquake, or something like one, for the house seemed tumbling about my ears, and that horrible old picture of uncle Basil was alive, scowling and shaking his cane at me. And I thought there was no one near me but Sybil, and uncle Basil held tight hold of her hand, so she could not help me—and I was frightened so terribly I awoke in a cold perspiration. Did you send Sybil's breakfast to her, Mrs. Wyllis?"

"I knocked at Miss Wraye's door," replied the model housekeeper, "but she said she wished for nothing at present."

"I feel confident that dear girl is going to be sick," said Fannie. "She studied herself nearly to death, to begin with, and since she has been here she hasn't eaten enough to keep a bird alive. I must send for Dr. Bond this very day! Herbert, you must ride down to the village for him. You gave her a chill last night, taking her off to Sunset Hill when the river mists were rising," continued Fannie, reproachfully; "and now the least you can do is to try and cure her."

Herbert's face flushed at his father's inquiring gaze.

"I trust there is nothing serious the matter with Miss Sybil?" he answered, with some embarrassment.

"A slight cold, I presume," said Mrs. Wyllis, with a scarcely-perceptible lifting of her white eyelashes. "Miss Wraye looks delicate, but could not be very seriously injured by a river mist."

"Fix her a cup of coffee, Wyllis, and let me take it up to her," said Fannie, impulsively, springing from the table. "I must see how she is, anyhow. A little more cream—she don't like it strong; and, papa, cut off a wee bit of that steak—I'll try and coax her to eat it."

And the warm-hearted girl arranged a dainty breakfast on the tray, and with her own hand carried it up to her friend.

As his daughter left the room, Mr. Clive turned rather stiffly to his son.

"Who is this young lady, in whose welfare Fannie betrays such remarkable interest? Some school friend, I presume?"

"Miss Wraye was a boarder at Madam Fleury's for the last two sessions," answered the young gentleman, briefly.

"Ah! a boarder at Madam Fleury's!" repeated the father, thoughtfully. "A New Yorker, then, I suppose?"

"Indeed, I do not know, sir," replied Herbert. "I should suppose not, as the young lady seemed to have no friends there."

"Where do her friends reside, then?" was the older Mr. Clive's question. "Is she a foreigner?"

"I should judge not: though, really, sir," said Herbert, with attempted indifference, "I have never inquired much about Miss Wraye's birthplace or antecedents. She seems a very gentle and cultivated young lady, and I thought it scarcely became me to inquire more."

"Of course, of course! Madam Fleury would not countenance an undesirable intimacy," said Mr. Clive, reflectively. "She is a woman of very superior judgment—"

"And of very narrow mind," interrupted Herbert, vexed that, in justice to that admirable person, he was obliged to relieve her from the responsibility of protecting Fannie's friend. "Madam Fleury never countenances any one, sir, who is not ticketed in golden letters as one of society's pets. Miss Wraye, as she informed you, through me, is not one of these favored ones."

"Ah!" the elder gentleman's brow darkened; "there may be a great deal conveyed by such a suggestion—a great deal. Fannie is very impulsive, and you, sir, as her temporary guardian, were very unwise. My daughter's friends should be only such as are—ahem!—suitable to her position, her prospects—such as Miss Clive can recognize as her equals, not protect as inferiors. There is nothing that so quickly degrades the young mind as low associations."

Herbert's brow flushed, and he rose from his seat, as if the words stung him.

"I have too high an opinion of my sister to suppose that any association could degrade her," he answered. "However, sir, you can see Miss Wraye, and decide for yourself whether she is a fit companion for your daughter. It is a delicate matter, on wich I cannot presume to judge."

He left the room as he spoke, angry and excited. He could say nothing more; truth, justice, conscience would allow him to say nothing more. His father was right—so every prudent mind would admit.

Sybil Wraye, nameless, friendless, as she called herself—shadowed by an impenetrable cloud, and crushed by some secret sorrow—was no fit companion for his ardent, impulsive sister. Madam Fleury had said it; Marian Grey had said it. Nay, had not Sybil herself said it? Had she not told him, the first night of their meeting, that she had no right to be his sister's guest? Had she not, the previous evening, bemoaned the folly, the madness, that made her cross their threshold—break bread at their board?

And yet—and yet, what was the charm about that pure, sweet face, that made it stand out purer and fairer from the very shadows that surrounded it?

"And an artist, should he paint her,
He would paint her unaware,
With a halo round her hair."

It was with something of a poet's feeling that Herbert regarded Sybil. Though she was far removed from him forever, though another claimed her heart and hand, even the pangs of hopeless love and hopeless loss could not dim in his memory her beautiful image. She would always be his ideal of all that was lovely and pure in womanhood—an ideal that from afar he might worship, though her could never hope to win.

His heart was sore this morning—sore with the wound of a first disappointment. All the other pain seemed lost in the thought that Sybil was removed from him forever. He had no right to defend or protect her. She belonged to another—was pledged to another; to one—the words seemed branded into his very soul—to one whom she loved, honored and must obey.

Poor child! perhaps it was peril to this loved one that overhung her young life like a darksome cloud; perhaps it was grief at separation; perhaps fortune frowned upon a too ambitious love, or perhaps friends forbade a happy union.

The pain in his own heart made Herbert generously sympathetic with Sybil's anguish. Love must ever be merciful to love.

He passed into the library. He had always, since his return from college, had his own desk and chair there. The morning's mail had been brought in, and his letters were awaiting his perusal.

There were several from old chums—one, on delicately-tinted paper, from a pretty cousin, a begging epistle, and then a rude envelope, addressed in a cramped, almost illegible hand, to "Herbert Clive."

He opened it with some surprise, and read the following lines:

"Sir—I am not one to strike in the dark, and so I send you this to warn you that a desperate being, who fears neither God nor man, has taken the law into his own hands and is determined upon justice. Beware of me, for I have determined upon my rights at any cost—at any cost!

"—Basil Clive."

"Basil Clive!" repeated Herbert, wonderingly. "And who the dickens is Basil Clive? The only one I ever heard of died five-and-twenty years ago. It can't be that Fannie's dream is so quickly realized, and the grim old gentleman up stairs has really stepped down from his canvas into life? Father," and Herbert looked up to his parent, who at that moment entered the room. "I have received a very singular letter from a person who signs himself 'Basil Clive.'"

"Ah!" Mr. Clive bent over his letters for a moment, perhaps to conceal the gray pallor that crept over his stern face. "There is a desperate sort of character who goes by that name, and has endeavored several times to claim relationship with us; but he is an imposter, whose pretensions it is much better not to notice. Let me se his letter."

Herbert handed it to his father, who glanced over it quickly, then tore it into shreds and flung it into the waste basket.

"All bombast!" he muttered. "The poor fool has been mad on this subject for years and years."

"Strange I never heard of him!" said Herbert.

"I preferred that you should neither hear nor speak of him," continued Mr. Clive, with that darkening of his brow that his daughter disliked so much. "He is nothing to us. He is a lowborn, low-bred ruffian! And if he or his should ever attempt to cross my threshold, I would spurn them from it like the dogs they are!"

It was a rare thing for the polished Mr. Clive to use such rude and forcible language, and Herbert looked up at his father in mute surprise.

But a fairer picture than he had expected to see met his gaze.

Just on the threshold of the library stood his sister, her beautiful face bright with dimpling smiles, and one white arm thrown around the slight, sylph-like form of Sybil, who, with her pale delicate features and floating hair, formed such a graceful contrast to Fannie's blooming loveliness.

"Here she is, papa!" cried the petted darling of the household. "I made her eat some breakfast, and she feels ever so much better. Sybil, this is the dear, darling old duck of a father that I have told you so much about; and, papa, this is the dearest friend I have in the whole world—Sybil Wraye."

Courteous gentleman that he was, Mr. Clive, senior, was obliged to rise and acknowledge so naive an introduction.

"I am happy to meet my little daughter's friend," he said, stepping forward and holding out his hand to the girl, whose delicate beauty at once disarmed even paternal criticism.

But the dark frown still lingered around his brows, and Sybil, glancing into that stern, haughty countenance, paled and shuddered, and, ere he could touch her had, fell fainting at Robert Clive's feet.

CHAPTER X.

Doctor Bond.

When Sybil recovered her consciousness she found herself on a sofa in Fannie's sitting room, and that young lady bathing her head alternately with tears and eau-de-cologne.

"She's dead! she's dead! Oh, Wyllis, tell me—tell me, is she dead?" cried Fannie, to whom a swoon was suggestive of immediate dissolution. "Oh, Sybil, Sybil! darling Sybil, do speak to me once again! Oh, Wyllis, look how white she is! Will Herbert never come back with the doctor? Sybil—"

"Be quiet, Miss Fannie!—the low, sibilant voice seemed to startle our heroine from her momentary torpor, as though it were the hiss of a snake—"do be quiet! It is only a faint. See, she is coming to nicely now. Take a little of this brandy, Miss Wraye. Now you feel better, I am sure."

"Yes, better—much better!" gasped Sybil. "I am quite recovered now." She passed her hand slowly over her brow. "What was it that frightened me so?"

"I'm sure I don't know," answered Fanny, hysterical between joy and grief. "You were just going to speak to papa, and fell right down, as if he had struck you; and you frightened me out of my very wits, you precious, precious darling!" concluded the impulsive girl, emphasizing each adjective with an embrace.

"Yes, I assure you, my dear, it was nothing but a swoon," said the housekeeper, gently. "It was quite unnecessary to send for the doctor."

"Dear me, Mrs. Wyllis! I don't believe that you would get excited if any one were dying," said Fannie, petulantly. "Of course it was necessary to send for a doctor, and I am very happy to say here comes Dr. Bond now."

The doctor entered the room as she spoke. He was a queer-looking little man, with snow-white hair plaited in an old-fashioned que down his back, and he was arrayed in the primitive style of knee-breeches and shoe-buckles. He had lived for nearly forty years in a quaint little vine-wreathed cottage about a quarter of a mile from the Towers, and although his practice was comparatively small, his vigorous pen had made him known far and wide as a man of deep thought and extended culture.

He had a brisk, caustic manner, that caused him to be generally feared rather than loved; but those who had experienced his kindly aid in sickness, or felt his delicate sympathy in sorrow, were proud to number the old doctor among their mose cherished and valued friends.

He entered the pretty boudoir with his usual quick step, but started and paused suddenly at sight of the white-robed, golden-haired figure upon the lounge.

"Good God!" he muttered, with a long-drawn breath: "who is that?"

"Oh, doctor, I'm so glad you have come!" said Fannie, springing to meet him. "I was so afraid you might be cross and cranky this morning, and send Dr. Reed in your place, and I wonted you to see Sybil yourself!"

"Sybil!" repeated the doctor, his face that had the ruddy hue of a winter apple, paling vigorously. "Sybil!" who is it that you call by that name, child?"

"Why, this is Sybil," said Fannie, fondly stroking her friend's beautiful hair—"my dearest friend, Sybil Wraye; and she has been real sick—awfully sick: I want you to cure her, Dr. Bond."

"Sybil Wraye?" repeated the old gentleman, drawing near his patient with a strange softness in voice and manner—"Sybil Wraye? Ah, well, my dear, what can the old doctor do for Sybil Wraye?"

There was something so kind and friendly in the old man's tone that the sorrow-stricken girl lifted her soft gray eyes to him gratefully—those wonderful eyes that were the windows of Sybil's hushed and hidden soul.

But ere she could speak, Mrs. Wyllis folding her mittens over and over one another, in her feline fashion, softly said:

"Miss Wraye was nervous and weak this morning, and had come down stairs against my advice. She had overtaxed her strength, and the consequence was that she fainted from the unnecessary exertion."

"Ah!" said the doctor, laying a finger on Sybil's pulse, "overtaxed her strength, eh?—overtaxed her strength. Are you subject to these fainting fits, my dear?"

"No," was the low reply. "This is the first I ever had."

"And you were not frightened, shocked, excited in any way?"

"Oh, good gracious, no!" answered Fannie, eagerly. "Why, we were both speaking, as quietly as possible, to papa, when Sybil frightened me to death by tumbling over right at my feet."

"No—that is," Sybil hesitated, "I felt a little nervous at meeting Mr. Clive; and—and—"

"Humph! yes," said Dr. Bond, thoughtfully; "a little nervous—a little nervous. Fevered pulse, flushed cheeks, quick breathing. My dear child, you must keep quiet, or you'll be very sick—very sick, indeed. Give her this," continued the old gentleman, scribbling a prescription hastily on a torn leaf of his pocket-book. "Darken the room and keep her quiet, or, Miss Fannie, your friend will be seriously sick, indeed. I will step around this evening and see how she is. Meantime, remember—quiet, quiet, quiet. No fuss, no talk, no trouble. Fret and worry kill half the world, and physic the other half," muttered the doctor, as he left the room. "That doesn't either kill or cure; but it will serve my purpose. It will ease, for a while, at least, that poor little throbbing brain. Sybil, eh? Sybil! And, great heavens, what a likeness! Sybil Wraye! And, who the dickens is Sybil Wraye?"

Herbert was waiting outside, where the doctor's old cob stood nibbling the terrace grass. His face was pale and perturbed, and a duller eye than Dr. Bond's would have noticed his unwonted agitation.

"Is she seriously ill, doctor? Is there really any cause for alarm?" he asked, seriously.

"What happened to madden that child nearly into brain fever?" asked the doctor, with a shrewd glance from his deep-set eyes. "You've been making love to her, young man. Now, confess it."

"I do confess it, sir," answered Herbert, proudly. "There is nothing to be ashamed of in my devotion to Miss Wraye, although that devotion is, I know, utterly hopeless."

Humph! Hopeless, is it?" said the doctor. "What's in the way—friends or fortune?"

"Her own heart," was the sad reply. "She loves and is betrothed to another."

"Oh, that's the way the wind lies, is it? Cheer up, my boy! There's as good fish in the sea as ever were caught. Cheer up! There's nothing much the matter with the young lady. Betrothed to another, eh? Told you so, did she? When?"

"Last night," answered Herbert, lowering his voice. "I wanted to speak to you confidentially, sir, knowing that you would be a prudent adviser, as well as skilled physician to the young lady. I fear there is some severe anguish or fear pressing on her mind that may unsettle it. What that sorrow is, I do not know, nor have I now any right to inquire; but, by a lucky chance, I was down by the river last night, and saved her from suicide, on which she seemed madly bent; and her attack this morning makes me doubly anxious about her. I fear, indeed, that some secret sorrow is driving this girl mad."

The doctor's brows knit in a perplexed frown.

"Secret sorrow, eh? Romantic fol-de-rol! Why, the girl's nothing but a baby, sir!"

"She is eighteen," answered Herbert, gravely; "and at eighteen a woman is no longer a child."

"So much the worse, young man—so much the worse. She ought to be, if she isn't. Eighteen—fol-de-rol! She ought to know no more of secret sorrow than of Syriac; she ought to think of nothing but ruffles, ribbons and rolly-poolies. Your sister's the sort of a girl for me; but I'll wager my head that in six months from now some young fellow makes a fool of her, and sets her to thinking of love, moonshine and secret sorrows. Bah! it makes me sick. Sorrow comes quick enough, young man, and dark enough, and ugly enough, without a pack of young fools playing at it before their time. Now, what the deuce has this golden-haired baby to do with secret sorrow?"

And the doctor rubbed his nose in a way that showed he was quite excited.

"I cannot tell you, sir," Herbert added, sadly. "I am not in her confidence. I only know that there is some trouble of which she cannot or will not speak, preying on her mind, and driving from it all peace or happiness."

"Humph!" granted the doctor. "Where are her father and mother? They'd better take her home and set her to making pinafores! She'd best go home, sir—best go home."

"I do not think she has father or mother," answered the young man, thoughtfully. "She never speaks of either."

"Sister, brother, uncle or aunt, then," said the doctor. "Mooning around these hills isn't good either for body or mind. She'd better go home at once, and I'll tell her so."

"I fear her home is not a congenial one," answered Herbert. "I fear the sorrow that seems darkening her young life may have its mainspring there; I fear—God knows what I fear! But I would that I could feel assured that Sybil had one true friend in the world—one heart that beat for her as purely and unselfishly as mine!"

"You're a fine young fellow," said the doctor, blowing his nose violently on a huge bandanna—"a very fine young fellow. Shake hands! I wish I had a son like you. Most of the milksops, nowadays, go about as cross and pettish as spoiled children if a girl happens to say no to them. You stand up to it like a man, and it shows you're the right mettle. The truest lover is always the truest friend. I was in love myself, sir, once—laugh at me, if you please—but I was genuinely in love forty odd years ago. It was a young love and a foolish love, and it turned out to be a very unhappy love, for the girl didn't care a snap for me; but it was the beginning and end of love to me. It made me what I am—a sour, crabbed, cross old fellow. But it left one place in my heart soft enough to beat in sympathy to a tale like yours. You can trust me, young man; I'll be a friend to that little friend of yours in there. I'll try to find out her trouble, whatever it is, and help her, if I can; and I won't do it altogether for your sake, either. Look here!"

The old doctor drew a worn old leather case from his vest pocket as he spoke, and, opening it, showed it contained a smaller one of velvet and gold.

Touching a spring, the last case flew open, revealing a picture within—a picture exquisitely painted on ivory—a lovely girl in the first bloom of youth.

Herbert gave one glance of swift surprise at the picture, and then exclaimed:

"Sybil! Sybil! It is Sybil Wraye herself!"

"No! Sybil Wraye," answered the old man, gently. "No, no, sir—this beautiful form has been mouldering in the dust for five-and-thirty-years. This is Sybil Lee, the woman I loved, as she looked when I loved her. Our lives drifted apart; I could never find her—never could trace her, after that one brief summer that witnessed my first and only dream. I have heard whispers of an unhappy marriage, of a subsequent desertion, but she was too proud, too reserved to let her sorrows reach even friendly ears. I have never heard from her, never seen her, since the evening I poured out my love-tale in her ear; and gently, kindly, delicately, she rejected my suit. This likeness I painted from memory, when her image was still fresh and undimmed in my mental eyes. It was an ideal of loveliness that of late years I had learned to think only an ideal, until to-day. Before you spoke to me I was only that little child's friend because of, the wondrous likeness she bears to Sybil Lee."
